Wall collapse kills 3

▶ HOUSTON MALL'S WALL COLLAPSES, kills 3 people while 6 others remain missing.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOUSTON — A wall collapsed at a shopping mall Thursday morning, killing three people, injuring seven and sending dozens of elderly mall walkers scrambling for their lives. As many as six others were feared missing under tons of concrete and steel rubble.

The wall was being torn down to make room for a Magic Johnson movie theater complex when it caved in.

"It just all of a sudden went crackling. I ran," said Dorothy McCann, who was among those who exercise daily by walking laps inside the Northline Mall.

Rescuers using dogs searched through the debris for victims. Cranes were brought in during the afternoon to move rubble.

"We're pretty certain there may be other people under the debris," Fire Chief Eddie Corral said. "We won't really know until we get in there and pull it off. Some of it is rather large and heavy."

He said that up to six people may be missing.

▶ FORMER ARCHITECTURE STUDENT arrested Jan. 23 for criminal trespass.

ANDREA COREY
staff writer

A former K-State student was recently issued a letter by the University stating that if he was found on campus, he would be arrested for criminal trespass.

Lwanga Basudde, who withdrew from K-State on Jan. 23 according to records in the Office of the Registrar, was arrested that same day for being on campus, specifically on the third floor of Seaton Hall.

Basudde was issued the letter requesting that he not return to campus based on the fact that he was disruptive, Jennifer Kassebaum, senior assistant University attorney, said.

"He interfered with the day-to-day activities on campus," she said. "If a student or visitor's conduct or behavior is disruptive, they can be asked to leave."

Because the letter given to Basudde states that he cannot be on K-State property, if he is seen on campus, he is breaking the law, Capt. Robert Mellgren of K-State Police said.

If people see Basudde, they should call the police, he said.

Judy Roland, academic adviser for interior architecture, said she warned her students not only about potential problems with Basudde, but about the dangers of feeling a sense of false security while working on campus at night.

"I would really like everyone to pay attention," she said.

The College of Architecture recently had meetings to brief students on keeping safe at night.

Part of the advice given at the meeting was to encourage the use of the buddy system.

▶ VOCAL GROUP, Count Basie band to highlight jazz festival Saturday.

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

Last year's Count Basie Orchestra concert in McCain Auditorium is almost considered the stuff of legend by local jazz enthusiasts.

The 1996 K-State Jazz Festival began what Dennis Wilson, director of jazz studies and the festival, hopes will become a longstanding partnership: K-State and Basie.

There are those who have been critical for bringing the same band back another year, but it will hardly be a repeat of last year's concert.

The Basie band is bringing a fresh new friend to K-State, the New York Voices — a critically acclaimed vocal jazz quartet whose recent album with the Basie band is nominated for a Grammy. The album will be available for sale at the festival.

Coming back is Basie conductor Grover Mitchell and saxophonist Brad Leali.

In a Thursday interview, Leali said he was excited about getting back to K-State for the 1997 festival.

"Last year, we met a lot of nice people and heard a lot of great music," Leali said.

Since performing at K-State in 1996, the Basie band has traveled to Europe, Russia, Japan and Thailand, to name a few.

"This band is such a legend that everywhere we go, people go crazy because they love the music," Leali said.

Saturday's concert will include some Basie standbys, such as "Moten's Swing" and "April in Paris," but will feature selections from a constantly evolving repertoire.

Leali, who has been with the band for nearly two years after leaving Harry Connick Jr.'s big band, said he prefers Basie's signature music to other pieces. He said the band's style has kept Basie's influence thanks to Mitchell's renewed emphasis on getting back to Basie.

This year's festival has attracted more attention from Kansas schools — nearly 26 — which means more daytime performances.

Perhaps it is appropriate for a vocal jazz group, which excels at scat singing, to co-headline the festival; the late great Ella Fitzgerald is this year's festival honoree.

Gov. Bill Graves proclaimed Saturday as "Ella Fitzgerald Day" in Kansas.

Saturday's concert will also kick off the Basie band's American tour, with the band coming from the other Manhattan to the first stop in our Manhattan.

Since this is the first stop on the tour, the band will be coming to Manhattan on Friday to begin some rehearsing for Saturday's concert.

Jurors in Simpson case ask for second look at evidence while public waits for verdict

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Simpson

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — A magnifying glass and a picture of a test tube. Is the O.J. Simpson jury talking tampering? Contamination? Photo faking? Or something else completely?

Only the jurors know, and they're not talking, not outside the jury room anyway, as deliberations in the wrongful-death trial entered their third day Thursday.

All that's known for sure is that jurors sent a request to the judge to give them an eye loupe like the one a plaintiff photo examiner used, and a picture of a test tube like the one that contained Simpson's blood.

Judge Hiroshi Fujisaki gave them the loupe, but not the test-tube picture. He said jurors had something better than a photo sitting in the deliberation room file cabinet — an actual test tube.

The request sparked a flurry of speculation and was just cryptic enough to give both sides cause for hope and alarm

State proposal increases lifespan of most licenses from 4 to 6 years

ASSOCIATED PRESS

▶ Ready for the change? A proposal would make drivers' licenses valid for six years rather than the current four and would increase the cost of getting a license by $4 for the average driver.

TOPEKA — Most Kansas driver's licenses would be valid for six years under a proposal from the state Division of Vehicles.

Most licenses now are valid for four years.

Division of Vehicles Director Betty McBride told the House Transportation Committee on Wednesday that the state has about 1.8 million licensed drivers.

The six-year license would reduce lines and waiting periods for licenses, she said.

The licenses would be issued to people between 21 and 65 years old who have no disqualifying medical conditions.

Fees for six-year class A and B noncommercial licenses would increase from $12 to $18. Fees for class C noncommercial licenses for vehicles less than 26,000 pounds would increase from $8 to $12.

The state would not gain additional revenue from the change because the new fees cost the same amount per year.

Motorcycle licenses would increase from $5 to $6.50, and commercial licenses from $14 to $21.

Mary Turkington, executive director of the Kansas Motor Carriers Association, asked the committee to retain the four-year license cycle for commercial drivers to be consistent with other states.

License fees and periods would be unchanged for people younger than 21 and older than 65 and those who have certain medical conditions.

BSU plans education, fun for Black History Month

▶ 'LIFE, LIBERTY AND THE PURSUIT OF POWER' is the theme for February's calender of events.

HANG NGUYEN
staff reporter

After months of planning, the Black Student Union is finally ready to begin events for February, which is Black History Month.

The planning committee for Black History Month began weekly meetings in early November 1996 to schedule events and invite speakers.

With "Life, Liberty and the Pursuit of Power" as the theme, Black History Month will begin with Stories of the Underground Railroad at 2 p.m. Saturday at the Douglass Community Center Annex.

However, the official kickoff starts with the Harambee' Kickoff Celebration at 6 p.m. Sunday at Union Station. It will feature Ngoma, an African drum and dance group.

"The drum group will get the excitement going for the rest of the month," said Andrea Morris, head of the planning committee and special programs chairman of BSU.

Besides the kickoff celebration, Morris said some of the other highlights include the banquet keynote speaker, Archbishop G. Augustus Stallings, on Thursday Feb. 13, and the Copper/Silver Drive from February 26 to 28. Contributions from the drive will go to the Stacey Hall Scholarship Fund.

The archbishop was excommunicated by the Roman Catholic Church in 1990 after forming the Independent African American Catholic Congregation to serve Black Americans. He established the Imani Temple in Washington, D.C., as the mother church of the congregation. Today, Imani Temples can be found in five other American cities as well as the African countries of Nigeria and Ghana.

The planning committee members said they have worked to make Black History Month fun, but an educational experience as well.

"I hope it will be a learning and entertaining month," Marci Burks, president of BSU, said. "It will be a chance for other students and black students to learn about their heritage."

Although members of BSU are responsible for Black History Month, anyone can come to the festive activities.

"We want all ethnic groups represented when we look out into the crowd," Morris said.

• COURT TAPS BOEING WORKERS' BONUSES FOR CHILD SUPPORT.

WICHITA — A push to collect delinquent child support put a big dent in year-end bonus checks for a small group of Boeing Wichita employees.

The Sedgwick County Court Trustee's Office filed income-withholding orders against the bonuses of 71 employees in late December, and wound up raising $33,988.72.

State law prohibits a withholding order from taking more than 55 percent of a worker's net paycheck; 65 percent if back support is owed.

Most of the 71 workers affected by the withholding orders were left with about 30 percent of their gross bonuses after taxes and support payments were deducted.

The delinquent Boeing workers are a small fraction of the company's force of about 18,000 workers in the Wichita area.

• DESPITE LAW, CALIFORNIA CAN'T TRACK ALL SEX OFFENDERS.

LOS ANGELES — California authorities cannot locate an estimated 20 percent of the sex offenders who are supposed to register with local police, raising questions about the state's version of Megan's Law, the Los Angeles Times reported today.

About 13,000 offenders have not been located among the 68,000 who have been convicted of a sex crime, the newspaper said.

All convicted sex offenders are required to register each year.

But authorities say they have no way to make sure everyone registers — and even if they do register, there is no way to track offenders from address to address.

• CUSTOMS SEIZES COMPACT DISCS BEING SMUGGLED ON TRAIN.

SOFIA, Bulgaria — Customs officers seized 36,000 compact discs found stuffed in the ceiling of a passenger train bound for Moscow on Thursday, the official BTA news agency said.

The seizure was by far the largest of three in the past two days.

European trade officials say production and smuggling of music discs in the Balkan country costs the recording industry millions of dollars a year.

Customs officers said neither the train crew nor passengers knew anything about the discs, and that an investigation had been started into a suspect who was not identified.

The discs were found as the train was crossing the border from Bulgaria to Romania.

• 31 DIE IN CHINA MINE BLAST; BUS-TRUCK CRASH KILLS 20.

BEIJING — A gas explosion in a central China coal mine has killed 31 people, according to the state-run Yangcheng Evening News.

A few others were reported injured in last Friday's explosion at the Geng Village coal mine, near Yima city in Henan province, 450 miles southwest of Beijing.

The blast happened during a power outage, the newspaper said.No further details on the cause were provided.

The newspaper, published Wednesday and seen Thursday in Beijing, also reported that 20 people died when a cargo truck collided head-on with a bus early Monday in northern Henan province.

• ROADSIDE BOMB IN LEBANON KILLS 3 ISRAELI SOLDIERS.

TYRE, Lebanon — Iranian-backed guerrillas detonated a roadside bomb Thursday in the Israeli-occupied border enclave in south Lebanon, killing three Israeli soldiers and wounding another.

The bomb, detonated by remote control, targeted an Israeli infantry patrol near the village of Taibeh in the eastern sector of Israel's self-proclaimed security zone in Lebanon. Taibeh is six miles from the Lebanese-Israeli border.

Guerrillas of the Iranian-backed Hezbollah, or Party of God, claimed responsibility for the predawn attack.

Senate discusses legislation suggestions

BENJAMIN YODER
staff reporter

Student Senate discussed its position on nine resolutions that it will present to legislators in Topeka on Feb. 13.

It had not finished discussions or voted on the resolutions at press time.

▶ Need more info?
Because the Student Senate meeting ran late and because of deadline restraints, the Collegian will provide more Senate coverage on Monday.

Senate discussed supporting technological improvements at Kansas Board of Regents institutions. Gov. Bill Graves' bill would provide $7.5 million. K-State's share of the money is $2.1 million, or 27.9 percent.

"We've got horrible technical problems in our classroom," Arts and Sciences Senator Mandy Reese said. "Proportionally, we're getting less money."

Funding for schools in the regents system has fallen 7 percent since 1977.

Senate discussed supporting an increase in faculty salaries. The average regents institution faculty salary is 9 percent below peer institutions. K-State's faculty is 8.5 percent below comparable universities.

A second proposal discussed supported a state-sponsored college savings plan. The enrollment in the plan is optional, but funds would be invested in mutual funds and would be exempt from state and local taxes.

"There's a loophole the IRS has given us," Governmental Relations Chair Tracey Mann said. "We're not very smart if we don't support it."

Engineering Senator Carlton Getz said he questioned where the funds are coming from and the legal and investment expenses.

"A state-sponsored plan is not needed," Getz said. He said other safer programs were available.

"We should take advantage of other plans," he said.

After two motions to amend a resolution to support the continuation of state property taxes, Senate voted in favor of a modified version.

The new resolution cautions state legislators about cutting property taxes without ensuring monetary support for regents schools.

"If you insult legislature, you'll be shown the door," Arts and Sciences Senator Sean Tomb said. "I want it to be positive."

The senators also discussed their support for more affordable tuition levels, increasing state scholarship grants and a comprehensive grant application.

Murder mystery dinner changes Union Ballroom appearance for 250

SANDY DAVIS
staff writer

Patriotic music, candlelight and a large sign that read "The Government Owes You A Lotta Money" set the scene for an evening of mystery and murder Thursday in the Union Ballroom.

Almost 250 people gathered to participate in the "Red, White, and Murder" Dinner Theatre sponsored by the Union Program Council's Eclectic Entertainment Committee.

It was an evening full of suspenseful, comedic entertainment.

The staged event was a fictional appreciation banquet for contributors and volunteers of the Chip Blocker presidential campaign, but soon after the hopeful candidate made his appreciation speech, the lights went out, and the body of Chip's special utility campaign assistant, Lonnie Love, was found. Leslie Lynofire, the man in charge of security for the event, set out to find the murderer while the guests ate dinner.

The actors circulated the room throughout the three-hour show, listening to guests' ideas about the motives behind the killing. The audience got into the act, laughing and debating possible theories among themselves and with the actors.

Shortly after dinner, Lynofire stepped up to review the evidence and his lists of suspects. But the guests didn't have much time to worry about Lonnie Love's murder. The drunk wife of Chip Blocker, Betsy, collapsed and died after taking a pill that her husband had given her.

The audience had to ponder both of these deaths and the clues they found on their tables over dessert. Every time the guests started to put the pieces of the puzzle together, the actors added more mystery to the murders.

Lynofire lined the suspects up and asked guests to fill out cards to guess who the killers were. After all the ballots had been cast, Lynofire revealed the murderers.

The table that correctly guessed the killers was given a Sleuth Award by the actors of the Repertoire Theatre of America. The troupe is from Rockport, Texas, and is one of three groups traveling around the country on a 10-month tour. The group met in July 1996 and, after six weeks of rehearsal, started touring in August.

Eclectic Entertainment Committee chairman Mike Hodgson said the committee hopes to bring similar shows to campus in the future.

STEVE HEBERT/Collegian

JUSTIN KASTNER, senior in food science, has been a city commissioner in Manhattan for more than two years. Kastner's term ends April 15.

PROVING GROUND

Kastner reflects on past commission work that started in questions

BRANDON ROMBERGER
staff reporter

K-State will lose the political voice of a student when Justin Kastner finishes his term as city commissioner this April.

Kastner has been a city commissioner for more than two years. His term ends April 15.

He began his term as a commissioner April 18, 1995. This made him the youngest city commissioner elected in the United States at the time.

There were many questions at the time of his appointment as to whether he could handle the job.

Kastner began his term in a time of transition. Eight hours before he was officially to take office, the city manager was fired. The first order of business was for the commissioners to interview candidates for the position.

"I am very proud of the man we selected. Gary Greer modernized city hall along with promoting efficiency and cost effectiveness," Kastner said.

He was also involved in purchasing land for the new business park.

"I've been involved with the Inner Governmental Committee responsible for Fairmont Park," Kastner said. "I particularly enjoyed leading that group toward the Fairmont masterplan. It is the gateway to Manhattan. It's the first thing people see when they come in from the east."

Among other things, he worked with the youth council and was part of the legislation that adopted the storm-water masterplans.

"We've made tough decisions on how to fund the storm-water masterplans," he said.

Kastner said he is most proud of the traffic signal at the corner of Kimball and College avenues.

Even though he is proud of his accomplishments, he said everything that has been accomplished is the work of all the commissioners.

Although the city commission elections are approaching, Kastner's name will not be on the ballot.

"The crux of the matter is that I need to find a way to develop a trade," he said. "It is agonizing to have to make the choice because I have thoroughly enjoyed my time on the commission."

When Kastner finishes his studies at K-State, he plans to attend the University of Texas School of Health at Houston. He said he plans to get a master's degree in public health and then pursue a doctorate.

"Public service was a great experience, I will pursue a career in public health as it relates to food safety," he said.

Kastner said many of the issues he worked on looked easy at first, but he soon realized how complicated city commission processes are.

A GUIDE TO SECTIONS OF THE COLLEGIAN OPINION PAGE

▶ Columns are opinions expressed by the columnists. The opinions are not necessarily the opinions of the Collegian.

▶ OUR VIEW

Consider making yourself safer when out and about

It may be cliche to say, "safety first" — but that's never stopped us before.

With the recent alleged sexual assault in Putnam Hall, as well as the student recently arrested for criminal trespass in Seaton Hall, students are reminded that the University and the city of Manhattan are not free of criminal activity.

Although the crime rate in and around Manhattan is fairly low, we cannot afford to take our safety for granted.

The size of Manhattan can also lull students into a false sense of security. Manhattan may be a small town compared to the larger urban areas many students come from, but the small-town atmosphere does not insure safety.

Be aware of the environment, especially after dark or in poorly lit areas. Avoid shrubbery where potential assailants could hide. If you have to be on campus after dark, try to arrange a ride home ahead of time.

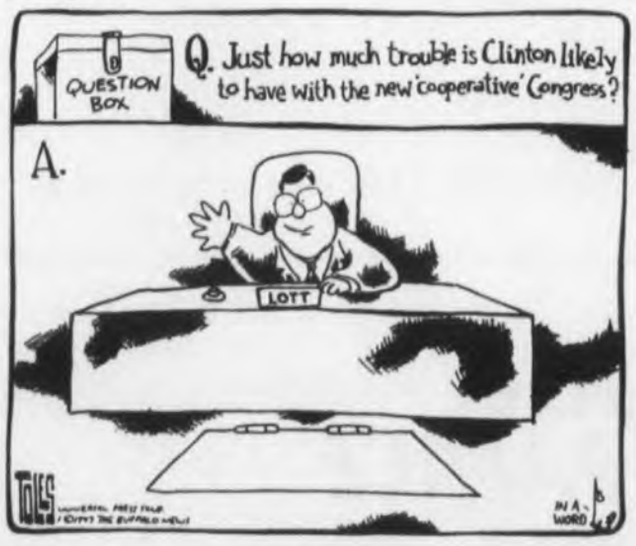
Use the buddy system. Students who have to be on campus after dark should walk in groups.

Students alone on campus should take advantage of the Wildcat Walk Escort Service. Workers for the escort service volunteer their time to provide a worry-free walk across campus. Soon, its services will be expanded to offer some off-campus services. The number for the service is 395-SAFE.

Call K-State Police or the Riley County Police Department if you think you have been followed. If you are a witness to suspicious activity, be preemptive. Contact the proper authorities.

Learn the location of campus emergency phones, especially the phones in the areas of campus you frequent.

Avoid problems and have an increased awareness of the potential danger areas.



Paranoia is not the solution to staying safe on campus. However, awareness of potential hazards may help prevent problems from occurring.

STAR WARS

The re-release of 'Star Wars' invokes nostalgia about a movie that moved a generation with a F O R C E

DERAY GAMBLE/Collegian

There's not much I remember about my early childhood. Aside from two distinct memories, I'd swear I was born at the age of 13. I can't forget the day my brother, while chopping wood outside, missed the log and hit his leg instead. The only clue I, sitting inside aimlessly, had that anything was wrong was that my sister actually turned off the radio when she ran outside. She'd never done that before (and, to my knowledge, hasn't again).

KEN WELLS

KEN WELLS is a graduate student in theatre. You can e-mail comments to Ken at (sigma7@ksu.edu).

The other experience, though, was being taken to see a movie by my sister and a friend of hers. Yes, it was "Star Wars," and 20 years after having the image of a leaping Sandperson burned into my memory like a photo negative, it still holds an aura of magic to it.

Sure, you can boil it down to its essence of plastic models, matte paintings and actors in heavy-metal suits with superimposed laser fire. But why does it still evoke this kind of pull over me and so many of my cohorts? Is it just a Generation X kind of thing?

While it'd be easy to label it a generational quirk, my generation was a little too young to appreciate the finer points of the film (like plot, dialogue, characterization, etc.), and instead wanted to see Big Furry Animals and Big Flashes of Light. Even by the time the last movie in the trilogy squirmed out of its Hollywood womb, I know my main obsession was collecting every single one of those action figures and not the Oedipal ramifications of Luke's quest.

Ah, yes, the toys. Anyone else remember that sweet plastic smell of the old figures when you took them out of their plastic coffins and breathed new life into them?

Do you remember the Boba Fett action figure offer they had before "The Empire Strikes Back" ever came out and how his rocket pack was supposed to actually fire, only to have the child safety buttinskies scream bloody murder, robbing a very cool figure of actual utility? I was looking forward to attacking people with my Boba Fett. I was robbed. There's grounds for a lawsuit here, I'm sure.

Now I can look back and appreciate the style, the structure, the completeness of form and function in George Lucas's work. I can admire the archetypical nature of the characters, how a skull-like helmet, a metallic hissing and a wonderfully malevolent name like Darth Vader can permanently root an image into American culture.

I can appreciate the evolution of young Skywalker's costuming from the white of the first film to the earth tones of the second to the darkness of the finale as an element of his progression toward the good ol' dark side. I have to worship Solo's bravado, Jabba's sloth, and Vader's warning to Fett of no disintegrations, as examples of show, don't tell at its best.

But when I hear the opening notes of John Williams' fanfare, when I see a huge chunk of carbonite hit the floor with a loud metallic thud and when the celebration fires burn on Endor, the critic, the structuralist, in me dies without a sound.

Not because it was with me two decades ago, but because the story and situations appeal to aspects that I can relate to, despite the fact that I don't live on a desert planet (yet), or rebel against a galactic empire (except Microsoft).

I don't know of anyone who doesn't feel the buoyancy when Luke looks skyward the first time while anchored to his farm. All the action figures and special effects in the world can't make up for that simple feeling.

As this goes to print, I'll be packing up and heading for Wichita's Warren Theatre to catch "Star Wars" down there with some old and new friends, watching it on the big screen and being throttled with bone-rattling sound.

I recommend you to do the same, if you have seen it before or for both of you who haven't. I'll trash films all I have to, but to be taken back by an old movie in this way — it almost gives a sworn cynic a new hope.

Sure, you can boil it down to its essence of plastic models, matte paintings and actors in heavy-metal suits with superimposed laser fire. But why does it still evoke this kind of pull over me and so many of my cohorts? Is it just a Generation X kind of thing?

Help Amnesty international make the world a better place

The pen is mightier than the sword!

As a student and teacher of writing, I know that there are as many reasons to write as there are reasons to put off writing. Whether it's that 15-page research paper, or that letter to your best friend or that opinion column that you put off until the last minute.

Did you know that writing can save lives? Did you know that writing can change the world?

Amnesty International began in 1961 when Peter Benenson, a British lawyer, read about two Portuguese students who were sentenced to seven years in prison for raising their glasses in a toast to freedom.

He conceived of a campaign that would focus attention to these and other prisoners of conscience, those who are imprisoned for their beliefs, color, ethnic origin, sex and/or sexual orientation, religion or language, provided they have neither used nor advocated violence.

This campaign would organize groups of ordinary citizens who would adopt specific prisoners by writing to the appropriate authorities, presenting them with the facts and appealing for the immediate release of the prisoner.

Today, Amnesty International has a half-million members, subscribers and supporters in 160 countries, with some 3,200 volunteer groups in 55 of them. Each year the movement handles, on average, 5,000 individual prisoner of conscience cases and many others in special campaigns, with an impressive track record for success. Approximately half of those cases taken on by Amnesty result in freedom. Now that's something to toast.

What makes Amnesty so effective and well-respected is the fact that it operates independent of any government, political faction, economic interest or religious creed. It received the Nobel Peace Prize in 1977. Its nonpartisan work is based on the principles set forth in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which the United Nations adopted in 1948 in response to the events of World War II.

All the member nations of the U.N. have signed the document, and all, including the United States, have broken it. For you see, in large part it is not the United Nations that fail us, it is us who fail the United Nations.

In addition, Amnesty works within a strictly regimented mandate. Amnesty will work for: 1) the release of all prisoners of conscience; 2) the fair and prompt trials for all political prisoners; and 3) an end to torture and executions in all cases.

Before a case can be officially adopted and placed in one of these categories, it is well researched by Amnesty members working in the field. A case must fit into this mandate before official action is taken.

What makes Amnesty so effective and well-respected is the fact that it operates independent of any government, political faction, economic interest or religious creed.

The weapons of this campaign? Pen and paper, coupled with an unusual kind of determination and a never-say-die attitude. But what good can writing a few letters do?

Consider this. You're the new ruler of Country X, and some thorn-in-your-side roustabout is threatening your autonomy again, passing out literature exposing the corruption in your government, making speeches, perhaps carrying a flag of the government previous to your coup.

You have the guy thrown in prison real quiet like, maybe give him a beating once in a while for good measure.

Safe, you kick back ... until the letters start rolling in, and you learn that nothing can take place in a vacuum.

Each week you receive more letters, from such far-flung places as Australia, Iceland, Brazil, and ... Manhattan? Where the hell is Manhattan and how did they know? This worries you greatly, since you're trying to clean up your country's image, promote trade and tourism and the like.

JEFF CHAN

JEFF CHAN is a graduate student in English. You can e-mail comments to Jeff at (defcon1@ksu.edu).

You get the idea. You see, there are all kinds of power in writing. It's all in how you use it.

Amnesty International Group No. 254, Manhattan, is different in that it is both a Manhattan community and University organization. Membership is free for students. All we ask is that you write a little for us.

This year the Manhattan chapter is focusing on human-rights issues in the People's Republic of China, one of the more flagrant abusers of the Universal Declaration.

Among others, we are writing on behalf of Wei Jingsheng. Jingsheng was imprisoned after a five-hour, closed trial for aiding families of victims of the 1989 Tiananmen Square massacre by organizing a fundraising art exhibit.

We are also writing on behalf of Ngawang Choekyi, a Tibetan Buddhist nun sentenced to prison for 13 years for participating in demonstrations in Tibet and composing pro-independence songs while incarcerated.

Hey you! Yeah, you, the one sitting there thinking writing is for the birds, and that it doesn't serve any purpose in the real world! Procrastinate no further. It's time for action. Come to the next Amnesty meeting at 6:30 p.m. Tuesday, Feb. 4 in Union 209.

See for yourself what writing can do to make someone's world, your world, a better place to be.

• PARKING PERMIT COST INCREASE RAISES QUESTIONS AND IRE.

Editor,

I am incensed at the quotation attributed to John Lambert in the Collegian concerning reserved parking stalls. To increase the cost of reserved stalls on campus as a way of reducing their number is an offensive, elitist and unwarranted action. Why not increase the cost to $25,000 a year and eliminate them all. Instead, the undisguised intent of the Council is to target the lower paid members of the campus community.

A raise in costs on the basis of some objective criteria, such as the cost of maintaining the stalls or through an assessment of need would be defensible.

Because we know that was not the basis for the current proposal, it should be abandoned. The policy of eliminating reserved slots through attrition seems to be working. Stick with that approach.

• READER WANTS TO CLEAR UP SPORTS COLUMNIST'S COMMENTS.

Editor,

In lieu of contributing to the torrent of well-deserved criticism lately directed toward Todd Stewart's ridiculous column on Monday, I would like to offer some factual correction to Tuesday's column by Shane McCormick.

In the column, when addressing the desirability of the Chiefs hiring Jeff George as quarterback, McCormick instructed us to remember John Elway did not get along with his coaches when he played with Baltimore. That fact, McCormick said, did not dissuade the Broncos from leaping at Elway's potential and signing him.

Actually, the reason the Broncos signed Elway is because the Colts could not. Since I was living in Colorado at the time, I do remember. What I remember is that John Elway never played for the Baltimore Colts. He refused to sign, and so the Colts traded him for Mark Herrmann in order to cut their losses.

It seems to have been a bad week for the sports editorial board. Not only do they have questionable judgment regarding publishing personal attacks, they can't seem to check up on basic historical facts.

McCormick's mistake in no way nears the unprofessionalism of Stewart's repugnant column. I just wish he would look up his claims in a football encyclopedia before trying to pass himself off as an informed voice.

• FORTMEYER'S DEFENSE OF UNION ART GALLERY FALLS INTO TRAPS.

Editor,

Despite his previous strong column defending keeping the Union Art Gallery, Russell Fortmeyer in Tuesday's Collegian falls into the easy trap that so many of us tend to these days — seeing all issues merely as debates between special interest groups.

To see this way is how politics quickly becomes boring and trivial, doing damage to our abilities to talk and think about issues that affect the University community as a whole.

In this way of decision making, all issues become pointless to resolve since it's always just a matter of two extremes. Because I am in neither of the groups he pits against each other — the Union Governing Board vs. the art students and faculty — I thought I should speak up about some larger questions, which if the reporting has been accurate, we have been blind to.

Unlike the rest of us, however, UGB has no excuse to ignore what it has ignored, since their recommendation to replace the gallery with a bank is not only an offensive idea, albeit a predictable one given the tendency to commercialize and privatize everything, but it is in strict violation of their own mission. The howls of protest should be louder than they are.

Viewing everything as a special interest divides us competitively rather than integrates all of us and what we do — from teaching to support services to play and entertainment — into a common educational purpose.

By this token, all of us should do everything we can to promote the educational atmosphere of a university. This means not viewing everything as a specialized service or place.

So what does this have to do with the gallery? Clearly, the K-State Student Union is the place where most of us go most of the time, and where such visual arts would best be seen regularly by more people. I emphasize the entire campus community, not just those who attend classes and go to the library.

It is where students bring in events, not merely because the events are popular or make money or offer an escape from education, but because they are educational in some way.

I happen to like to see the art exhibitions in the gallery, but my personal preferences are not really the point here. It might be good, moreover, to have a place there for all sorts of exhibits, not just the art ones. Just as clearly, it is hard to argue for the larger educational mission of a private bank.

So what does UGB violate? It violates its own mission statement, passed in 1992, and prominently displayed on a plaque at the entrance. That statement does not put the priority on privatizing, providing entertainment or making surplus profits for expansion.

Instead, it says that this "center for the campus community" is there to "play an integral role in the educational mission of the University." Integral and educational mean just what they say. They mean just what I have been writing about from the start, and just what the new kind of thinking violates in spirit and in letter.

The recommendation to cut the gallery, however, is predictable, given the pressures felt at the highest levels to privatize and commercialize everything, which is often anti-educational and goes right along with attacks on funding all things public like universities.

Some people would turn the University as well the Union into a shopping mall, in the name of progress and revenue. I have visited schools where the parking services were also privatized, with the result that they became, through maximizing fines and surveillance, the wealthiest units on campus, with meter violation fines running $50 or more.

Some of these kinds of innovations can be resisted. Our own community of Manhattan resisted attempts to have commercial TV advertisement viewing required inside the classrooms of its public schools. We should be as vigilant. But, most of all, we should pay attention to integrating our highest mission, education, at all levels and in all places. Keeping the art gallery is an excellent way to do so.

• STUDENT POINTS OUT NEED FOR MORE PARKINGS SPACES.

Editor,

This is in response to Jeri Slagle's unbelievably pompous remark concerning the parking situation Wednesday. Perhaps someone should point out to her that if it weren't for us lowly students "who should be made to walk from Bramlage," she wouldn't need her high-priced reserved stall because she wouldn't have a job.

• ART GALLERY CLOSING NOT ONLY WILL AFFECT ARTISTS.

Editor,

According to Tuesday's Collegian editorial, it is mostly art students and faculty who are concerned about the possible closing of the K-State Student Union art gallery. Hmm, that's like saying that mostly athletes and sports fans would be concerned if someone closed Bramlage Coliseum!

Of course they are concerned, and they have a right to be. This space is important to them because it is a forum for their expression. I don't think they are the only one, as I seldom see the Union art gallery lacking someone inside viewing the art.

My motivations for wishing the gallery to stay are purely selfish. It gives me pleasure to walk in and view it, to see what my peers and the faculty of this campus as well as others who are exhibited are thinking and feeling.

It would be wonderful if its space and visibility could be increased but I think to take away its emphasis on K-State student and faculty work would be to rob both those students and those who would view their work of a valuable resource.

It seems like hardly a day goes by without someone in the pages of the Collegian bewailing and preaching students' need for cultural enlightenment, diversity or whatever. A great resource for all of that is sitting right there in the middle of the campus for anyone who wants it.

Typical. We need it. The students who exhibit there need it. I don't see what's so complicated about that.

GUARD MARCUS McCOLLOUGH runs into the Colorado defense Wednesday night at Bramlage Coliseum. McCollough started for the first time this season against the 18th-ranked Buffs. K-State lost the game 69-60.

Cats hope changes bring win

JEREMY KELLEY
sports editor

K-State, 7-10, 0-7, continues conference play Saturday at Missouri, 10-10, 2-6 in hopes of gaining their first win in the Big 12.

The Cats are coming off a 69-60 setback against the 18th-ranked Colorado Buffaloes Wednesday night. The loss dropped the Cats to 0-7 in the conference.

To add to the pain, forward Manny Dies has been diagnosed with a torn tendon is his left foot. The injury will put Dies out of play for two to four weeks.

"We'll have to play on," Coach Tom Asbury said. "Injuries are injuries. Injuries cause problems, but injuries are part of the game of basketball."

Like K-State, the Tigers are nursing some injuries of their own. Guard Jeff Hafer will miss at least two weeks with a wrist injury sustained in practice last Monday.

Head coach Norm Stewart said K-State and Missouri had some similarities in that aspect.

"They're banged up too," he said. "They are somewhat similar to us. They've gone through the season with tough ball games and with close ball games. There's a lot of similarities in the ball clubs there."

Asbury said he was anxious to see if Missouri's trouble with injuries would be an advantage for K-State.

"It depends on how the game goes," Asbury said. "We have the depth at the post position. If that's an advantage — I don't know. We'll have to see."

Stewart, like Asbury, said his team is still struggling to find consistency in its offense.

"We haven't been all that consistent in getting beyond that fine line," Stewart said. "We have to get people to execute consistently of the offensive and defensive end."

Asbury has been trying to change things with his program though. Mostly just change for the sake of change.

Wednesday night K-State came out in silver uniforms and altered their starting lineup, but to the Cats' chagrin it didn't work. Asbury said he had many more sets of uniforms to implement if needed.

"I've got a bunch of sets," Asbury said. "The black one's are coming out pretty soon."

As for Stewart and his Tigers, who sit barely ahead of K-State in the conference standings, who knows what they could change.

"What I would do they wouldn't allow," he said. "I'd get a jock-strap and a red feather."

Changes or not, tipoff is set for 12:45 p.m. Saturday in the Hearnes Center in Columbia, Missouri.

Women's team plagued with injuries

SHANE MCCORMICK
sports writer

The K-State women's tennis team returns to Manhattan for its home opener against Southwest Missouri State at 6 tonight in Ahearn Field House.

The Cats come into the match on the heels of a 6-1 loss to No. 24 Northwestern last week. In that match, the Cats were plagued by injuries, with two players out with injuries and another that was bothered by one.

Senior Nikki Lagerstrom and junior Dinah Watson were both out with injuries. Junior Karen Nicholson played with a bone chip in her toe.

Coach Steve Bietau said that Lagerstrom and Watson were out indefinitely.

"Nikki's got a disk problem that she can either rest or have surgery on," Bietau said. "But it is most likely that she is gone for the year. Dinah has developed melanoma and had some skin graphed off of her leg that required stitches. It's just really unfortunate."

Bietau said the status of Nicholson is questionable for this weekend's matches.

In place of Lagerstrom and Watson, the Cats used freshman Aisha Butt and sophomore Laura Williamson. In high-school action, Butt lost just one match in her career. The loss came in the state finals of her freshman year. Williamson was on the team in 1995-96, but did not participate with the team this past fall. Bietau said Williamson will not play with the team for the remainder of the season.

Junior Yana Dorodnova picked up the only win for the Cats this past weekend, serving up a singles victory at the No. 1 position. With the increased problem with depth, Bietau said he will look to Dorodnova even more as a leader.

"Yana definitely has the capability to be a strong leader on this team," Bietau said. "She has used her doubles play as an example of that. She's taken on more responsibility of learning new things and changing her game for doubles. She is leading by example."

Last year the Cats were able to beat Creighton 6-1 in Manhattan. Bietau said that the results were not an indication of how tough the Bluejays can be.

"They beat our No. 1 doubles teams and we struggled at other positions in our lineup," he said. "There are areas that they outperformed us. They really get in and compete and give us a challenge. I like our team to see a team that gets in there and really competes."

NFL football a Super letdown

If you were subjected to the Super Bowl and, like 800 million other sports fans, I assume you were, welcome to Super NFL Letdown. Cue the theme music.

Like Christmas mornings of yesteryear, when you waited for what seemed like forever to unwrap a brand new Schwinn only to find socks under the tree, so too goes the NFL season of 1996-97.

One big disappointment. A huge sagging flop. Ah, but let me explain.

I am a jilted Chiefs fan, and you might call me just a little bitter.

Through auspicious beginnings at the onset of the season, Sports Illustrated predicted it would be the Chiefs and Packers in Super Bowl XXXI (at least they got part of it right), to the nagging plague of Dallas Cowboys that just can't stay out of trouble, pro football never seemed to move beyond mediocrity this season.

TARA WRAY

TARA WRAY is a sophomore in journalism and mass communications. You can e-mail comments to Tara at (twray @ksu.edu)

Other than the fact the Denver Broncos lost their play-off game, I can't think of much I look back and smile about.

What I really wanted out of this season, even more than that Schwinn, was for the Chiefs to shoot it out in the Big Easy and for them to show those Cheeseheads to the grater.

I hoped they could use last year's devastating playoff loss at the hands of the Colts (well, at least it was devastating to me) as a spark plug for greatness.

It would seem, after an 8-3 start to the season, things were just peachy for Kansas City, and they would be play-off bound once more.

Then they rotted.

The Chiefs dropped four of their last five games, the final loss coming in frigid Buffalo. It was also a repeat of the 1994 playoffs. Kansas City missed the post season for the first time in eight years.

It was a most distressing end to a distressing season.

So, as you can see, the Super Bowl was not high on my list of priorities last Sunday.

But somehow I wound up in front of a TV set watching a game the Chiefs should have been in.

It led me to thoughts of what it might take for the Chefs (as they're called in the Snickers commercial) to cook up a recipe for Super Bowl success.

It's going to take a whole lot more than they have in their cupboards right now.

First of all, Steve Bono must go. Quit hating me, you know it too.

I'm sorry, but he just can't hack it. Watching this guy run is like watching a camel scurry through the desert. I'm just waiting for him to grow a hump and spit at the press.

It's not all his fault. Bono has followed a long legacy of quarterback has beens who try to relive their glory days at Arrowhead Stadium, ala Joe Montana and company.

Come to think of it though, Bono never really had any glory days.

Maybe if we got him that Schwinn he could peddle it into the end zone. Then at least he might find it.

Women to play Missouri in 1st televised game of year

SUN DEE MILLS
staff reporter

After its 71-58 loss to Colorado Wednesday, the K-State women's basketball team returns to Bramlage Coliseum Saturday to take on the Missouri Tigers.

"A loss at Colorado will not put a dent in our amour," Coach Deb Patterson said. "We have to be realistic. We don't expect to knock off the No. 2 in the league at home."

At the end of the first half, the Buffs led by nine and shot 21 points from behind the three-point line.

"I feel that is my most effective threatening shot from the high post," Scholz said. "I am confident in shooting it."

So was the rest of the Buffs' team. For the game, Colorado shot an incredible 56 percent from the three-point range, the best by a K-State opponent this season.

The Cats narrowed the lead to three at the 13:47 mark in the second half, but the Buffs pulled away by shooting 45 percent from the floor.

The Buffaloes sported four players in double-digits, led by senior guard Erin Scholz with 18, including a perfect mark from behind the three-point line.

"Colorado stepped up and made the big play on both ends of the court any time they were called to do so," Patterson said. "We've learned how important it is to win on the road. We need to step up and make big plays continuously once we've made a run."

Andria Jones led the Cats with 16 points, four rebounds, four assists and three steals. With the loss, K-State falls to 3-4 in the Big 12 and 10-7 overall.

The Cats look to change things this Saturday against Missouri in Bramlage, the first televised game for the Cats this year.

Missouri (8-13, 1-7) picked up its first Big 12 victory Wednesday night with a win over the Texas A&M Aggies, 91-80. Tiger guard Julie Helm set an MU season scoring record for a freshman with a game-high 25 points.

The noon tipoff against the Tigers will be televised on Fox Rocky Mountain Sports. This past Saturday's game against Texas A&M brought more than 3,000 people to Bramlage and Patterson said the team appreciates the fan support.

"It's a huge step for our program, to see over 3,000 in the stands at the A&M game," Patterson said. "The people here at K-State have a product they can get behind and believe in."

Patterson said fans helped get the momentum back in the Cats' corner during the A&M game.

"They're a big part of the equation," Patterson said. "The TV game will extend into the picture of the environment at K-State."

The Cats are ranked No. 30 in attendance for Division I women's basketball, and Patterson said she hoped to keep bringing fans back.

"We need the support of the people around us," Patterson said. "Fans help put a program together."

EYES ON THE EAGLE

Kaw Valley Eagle Days allow opportunities to get in touch with natural world

▶ What are the Kaw Valley Eagle Days?
It is a celebration in Manhattan that originates from the Manhattan Town Center and occurs between 10 a.m. and 6 p.m. Saturday. Activities provide opportunities for the public to learn more about eagles through multimedia presentations and interaction with the birds. All activities, including tours, are free and appropriate for all age groups.

Field trips will leave from the Tuttle Creek Corps of Engineers office periodically on Saturday for the viewing sights at Tuttle Creek Reservoir.

MEGAN LaRUE/Collegian

Kaw Valley Eagle Days provide the community and students of Manhattan with an opportunity to learn more about the arrival of more than 800 bald eagles each winter in Kansas.

The Eagle Days celebration will start at 10 a.m. Saturday, Feb. 1 at the Manhattan Town Center.

Erwin Hoogheem, a member of the Eagle Days planning committee, said Kansas' lakes, rivers, streams and especially Tuttle Creek Reservoir provide areas for the eagles to feed.

"The celebration is a chance for people to view bald eagles in the area and learn more about a bird that is a national symbol," he said.

"Many groups have gone to Tuttle Creek to view the eagles, but this is the first actually coordinated event and I encourage everyone to take part in the events on Saturday," he said.

Many of the eagles have been arriving in Manhattan and neighboring towns since November.

Diane Johnson, director of Operation Wildlife, said there are five eagles' nests that are active in Kansas.

"An active nest is when a nesting pair returns to the same nest every year to lay eggs," Johnson said. "Two nests are at Clinton Lake. Perry Lake, Wolf Creek and Hillsdale all have one nest," she said.

Federal law says no one can own an eagle and some states can fine up to $500 and issue a year in jail if you have one as a pet.

Field trips to see the bald eagles nesting at Tuttle Creek will leave from the Tuttle Creek Corps of Engineers office at 9, 10 and 11 a.m. and at noon and 1 p.m. on Saturday, Feb. 1.

Various activities will be taking place from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. at the mall.

The Eagle Days organizer is the Kaw Valley Heritage Project. The alliance was developed to enhance the appreciation for culture, history and natural resources of the Kaw River Valley and how the river benefits Kansas communities.

▶ 9 a.m.
Field trip departures from the Tuttle Creek Corp s of Engineers, 5020 Tuttle Creek Blvd. Field trip departures are at 9 a.m., 10 a.m., 11 a.m., noon and 1 p.m.

▶ 11 a.m.
"Operation Wildlife," a presentation that involves a live bald eagle and a live golden eagle will occur at the Manhattan Town Center.

▶ 10 a.m.
"Eagles on the Wind," a multimedia presentation will be presented at the Manhattan Town Center.

▶ Noon
"The Significance of the Bald Eagle in Native American Culture," a presentation by a Navajo Nation member will occur at the Manhattan Town Center.

▶ 1 p.m.
"Keeping Eagles Healthy," a discussion of history, environmental threats and the eagle population along the Kansas River will be presented at the Manhattan Town Center.

What's the frequency Kenneth?

The mystery may be solved: Dan Rather has identified the man he says beat him up on the street in 1986 while demanding to know: "Kenneth, what is the frequency?" Rather said his assailant was William Tager, a man in prison for killing an NBC stagehand outside the "Today" show set in 1994. Tager was convinced the media had him under surveillance and were beaming hostile messages to him. He demanded that Rather tell him the frequency being used. The turn of events apparently ends a weird mystery that inspired a best-selling song by R.E.M., "What's the Frequency, Kenneth," and made the newsman the butt of jokes.

A $158,000 calculator

In Leeds, England, jurors acquitted Andrew Whitfield, a police officer accused of stealing a calculator worth $4. The combined costs of the trial, mistrial and Whitfield's 14-month paid suspension was $158,000. Wish I could get a vacation like that.

The innocent cookie

A man convicted of exposing himself at a gas station in Ontario claimed the witness had misidentified a half-eaten cookie in his lap as his private parts. The judge did not allow the cookie to be admitted as evidence, but his lawyer was allowed to use measuring tape to demonstrate the size of the cookie.

It's good to be king

On Dec. 5, in the 17th annual birthday celebration to honor King Bhumibol Adulyadej of Thailand, hundreds of men underwent free vasectomies. The celebrations included a condom-inflating championship. Not surprisingly, Thailand's population growth rates have decreased by more than two-thirds in 25 years.

The turkey crossed the road

An overturned 18-wheeler spilled live turkeys onto a Kansas highway near Crestline. Authorities had to round up the turkeys before the road could be reopened. Some of the turkeys were killed, but the driver of the truck was unharmed.

A very happy meal

Mence Powell, a drive-through window worker at a McDonald's in Connecticut, was arrested Tuesday for selling happy meals with something extra. Powell allegedly sold marijuana on several occasions to undercover officers by including it in happy meals.

Expensive misunderstanding

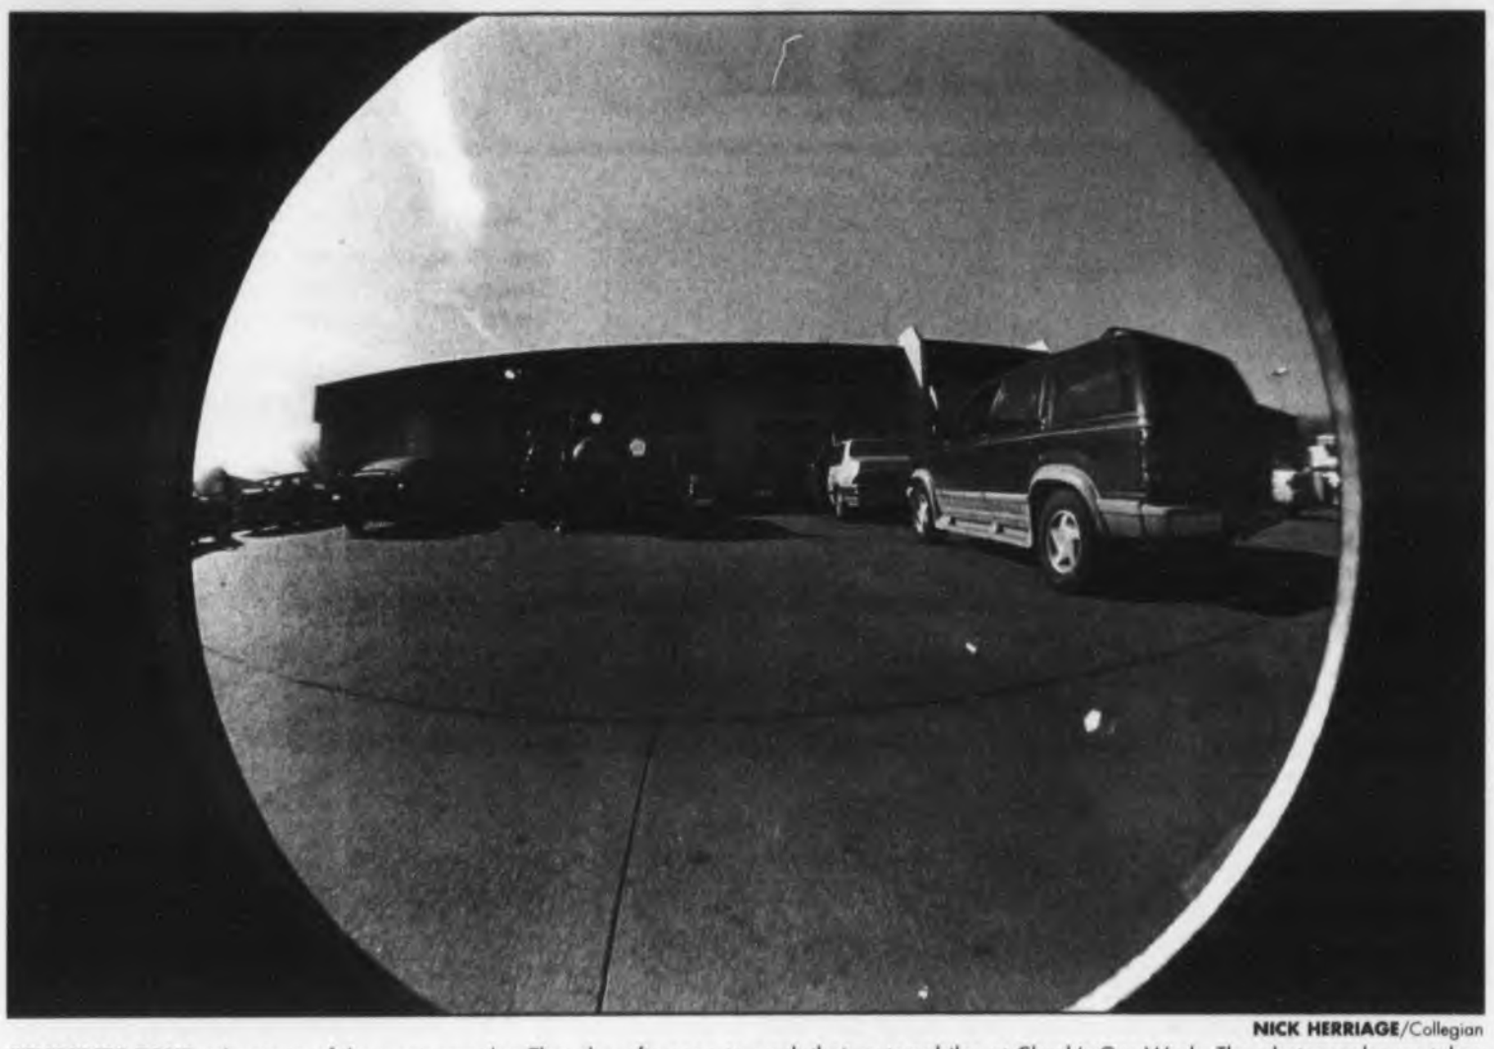
An Akintunde Ogunleye, an African American salesman in Los Angeles, filed a racial harassment lawsuit against Pitney Bowes, a co-worker. He said that Bowes addressed him as "Akintunde, ooga-booga, jungle-jungle." Bowes, of French Canadian ancestry, testified Akintunde misunderstood, and he had really said "Bonjour, Bonjour." Akintunde was awarded $11.1 million by the jury.

Loud and clear

A woman and her dog were admitted into a performance of "The Barber of Seville" in an auditorium in North Carolina. The woman reportedly told a staff member she was hearing impaired and that the dog was her hearing-ear dog. The owner removed the dog after it began to bark.

Bad hair day

In October, Darlie Router, on trial for the murder of her two children, requested her hair be done before her trial date.



Router argued that if she arrived in court with roots, jurors might assume that she hadn't taken care of her hair because she was jailed. She feared that jurors would not grant her presumption of innocence if she showed up in court with bad hair.

K-177 construction expected to finish on time in August

STEVE WARE

Commuters on Kansas Highway 177 should see finishing touches on construction in the coming months.

According to the Kansas Department of Transportation, work on the $13.9-million project is proceeding as scheduled for its completion in August.

"Construction is moving along as planned and should be done on time," Stanley Whitley of KDOT Public Information said.

At completion, the nine miles of Kansas Highway 18 will be four lanes from Interstate 70 to Manhattan.

"The two new lanes should let traffic flow smoothly from I-70 to Manhattan," Whitley said.

The project, which was started in the summer of 1994, is being completed in two phases.

Phase one involved the construction of two new northbound lanes. This required leveling and grading the land adjacent to the two existing lanes. The lengthy construction time in this phase was attributed to the removal of limestone that lines a portion of the project.

"We had to remove about three miles of rock along the old highway," Whitley said.

The graded surface was then asphalted to complete the new lanes. This was completed, and the new lanes opened for traffic in December 1996.

Phase two will consist of resurfacing the old highway and preparing the four lanes for traffic.

"Basically, the old surface has to be milled off before we can put a new one on," Whitley said.

During this time, traffic will be redirected to the new lanes, avoiding the need for detours. The speed limit will also be increased to 70 mph along most of the route.

Expansion of the highway also included construction of the new four-lane bridge that spans Fort Riley Boulevard and the Kansas River. Whitley said its completion in April 1996 helps alleviate some of the heavy traffic stresses that the old two-lane bridge experienced on game days.

The complete project will cost $20.8 million.

Peace Corps jobs offer rewarding experiences

RACHAEL KRUEGER
staff reporter

The anxiety surrounding the events of post-graduation life can sometimes be overwhelming. Students carefully weigh options such as careers, graduate school, law school and medical school.

The Peace Corps is one option that is rarely mentioned, but it's important. It can be found outside the boundaries of our country.

In 1961, President Kennedy challenged the people of the United States to volunteer two years of their lives helping others in struggling nations. The Peace Corps was the result of that challenge.

Imagine two years in a country full of new culture and experience. Barbara Hilpman, the Kansas regional representative for the Peace Corps, was at K-State Tuesday and Wednesday to discuss the rewards and challenges of such a life.

The people who choose this existence tend to share similar qualities. They love to travel, enjoy challenges and are aware of their individuality.

"Many volunteers feel like they need to give something back because they have received so much," Hilpman said.

Hilpman gave service to a small farming community in Poland from 1988-90. She lived in a tiny apartment furnished by the government. Each day she and her translator rode their bicycles to the fields where she supervised and aided the local farmers. However, the objective of her Polish journey was more personal.

"I wanted to be very close with one family," she said.

Her dreams were fulfilled by five families. She witnessed both birth and death within the five homes, and she was able to see how other cultures dealt with the joys and tragedies of everyday life.

Her love for travel was satisfied as well. At the close of her two years, the extent of her journey included 10 countries in addition to Poland. This ability to travel is given through a living allowance.

"The Peace Corps gives the volunteers enough to live as a middle- to upper-middle class citizen of the country they're assigned to."

She also said in some countries upper-middle class may refer to a really nice mud hut.

A mud hut is one kind of challenge, but many challenges are internal. Hilpman said Americans always set high goals, and that trait gets in the way of a volunteer's happiness.

"Sometimes your goal is just to make it through the day," she said.

She also said when a volunteer sets extremely high goals, disappointment is inevitable.

The rewards from this experience vary with each situation. Hilpman returned to the United States with a new and unexpected appreciation for the government. Many leave the Peace Corps with hope, inspirations and a new sense of self. Each volunteer also receives $5,400 at the end of the two-year service.

College students should be aware that almost all student loans can be deferred while in the Peace Corps. In some cases, about 10 percent of the loans are paid annually by the government. Hilpman said one person spent eight years in the Peace Corps and wrote a check for less than $50 to pay off the rest of his student loan.

After the Peace Corps, many volunteers go to graduate or medical school, get involved in public health or return to their careers.

Rickel memorial library aids in researching illnesses

Cami Sowers
staff reporter

The Molly M. Rickel Research Library is more than just a room full of books and pamphlets. It's a place where patients, family members and the general public can research many different illnesses that affect a wide range of people.

When Teresa Rickel-McMillin and her family found out their mother, Molly, had pancreatic cancer they started looking for answers to their questions. The Rickel family had learned about the M.D. Anderson Cancer Research Clinic in Houston. After gathering more than enough information at the library, they could cope with their mother's illness.

The idea for the Manhattan library came from the Houston library the family visited. The library was established in their mother's name and is located on the second level of Mercy Health Center on College Avenue.

The initial cost for the library was $30,000 and was funded through memorial donations from close friends and family. Stocks and bonds owned by Rickel also contributed to the library's construction.

The library relies on donations because it is a nonprofit organization, and is run on a volunteer basis. Many donations come from people who have used the library.

"We got a letter from a Riley family letting us know how much they enjoyed it. We also got a letter and a donation from a lady in Colorado who thought the library was a great idea," Rickel-McMillin said.

Many of the pamphlets offered in the library come from the American Cancer Society free of charge, and more pamphlets are added regularly.

"It's mind boggling that no one offers them in town," Rickel-McMillin said.

Books, videotapes and audio tapes are also available. The Pilots Club of Manhattan donates many tapes and notified Rickel-McMillin that they wanted to donate more.

"These books are checked out on the honor system, but one book is always taken no matter how many times we replace it," Rickel-McMillin said.

Other resources at the library are two computers.

The Internet is accessible and the library has a home page to broaden access to information. The home page has been up and running since August 1995 and has access to other web sites across the country.

"The library is open from 8:30 a.m. to 8:30 p.m., and if someone needs into the library after hours, a security guard is available to unlock the door," Rickel-McMillin said.

The Rickel family said the library has helped many people and they hope it helps many more families. In this way, the concept of the library will be passed on.

UFM offers variety of winter aquatic classes at Natatorium

Get ready to swim like a fish.

UFM aquatic classes began January 27 and 28 at the Natatorium. UFM offers a wide range of classes for the beginner to the advanced, whether the goal is to learn how to swim, improve skills or just get in shape. UFM provides certified instruction in swimming, hydroaerobics, kayaking and scuba diving.

They also have classes for those who want to learn how to teach swimming or how to be a lifeguard.

"In the spring, Water Safety Instruction (WSI) and Lifeguard Training are the most popular classes because people need to be certified for their summer jobs," Charlene Brownson, the education coordinator for UFM said.

Another popular class, according to Brownson, is Fitness Swimming. This class has an optional one hour credit from K-State that costs an additional $50.

"Interest in Fitness Swimming has increased since last year, and both classes for this semester are full," Brownson said.

She said the class was a tempting opportunity for students who want to get in shape and receive class credit at the same time.

UFM also offers beginner classes for infants, toddlers and teen-agers. These in the nerve-wracking atmosphere surrounding the first full day of deliberations.

The loupe request, for instance could mean that jurors wanted to take a closer look at the 31 photographs showing Simpson wearing the same model of Bruno Magli shoes that left bloody prints near the bodies of Nicole Brown Simpson and Ronald Goldman.

Plaintiff photo expert Gerald Richards, who used a loupe in court to examine the pictures, said they were authentic.

A defense photo technician, Robert Groden, said the first photo offered by the plaintiffs was a fake. He used contact sheets to point up flaws in the film that he said pointed to fraud.

Plaintiff lawyers would welcome any juror attention to the photographs, having built much of their case on them. The plaintiffs contended the photos not only put Simpson's feet in shoes like the killer's, but show him to be a liar, because he denied ever owning such shoes.

The jurors, however, also may have been focusing on an issue dear to the defense's case: its claim that drops from a vial of Simpson's blood were planted at the crime scene.

The defense also contended that some of the blood from that vial may have spilled, accidentally or intentionally on other blood samples, making the real killer's blood look like Simpson's blood.

Yet there could easily be other explanations behind the jurors' request.

They didn't say why they wanted the loupe, and they didn't specifically ask for a picture of Simpson's blood vial, just a picture of a blood vial.

One thing everybody could agree on was that deliberations are among the most difficult time of a trial, when lawyers and their clients have a lot to think about and nothing to do.

Some of the plaintiff lawyers stayed inside the courtroom in case the jury came back quickly or asked for a read-back of testimony.

Defense lawyers stayed near their phones in their offices just a couple miles away.

With notification of a verdict expected to be as short as an hour, a large media contingent camped out on the courthouse lawn, in the parking lot, at a makeshift trailer encampment and in a hotel across the street.

The relatives of Nicole Brown Simpson and Goldman are suing Simpson, who was acquitted of murder 16 months ago. If found liable for the June 12, 1994, killings, he could be ordered to pay millions of dollars.

The cause of the accident was not immediately known.

Demolition crews were removing the last sections of an old department store when a wall shared by the store and the mall caved in at about the time the mall opened at 9 a.m.

Authorities described the wall as about 20-feet high. The fallen section was said to be 150- to 200-feet long.

"I just heard a loud rumble," Mary Shields, who was inside the mall, said. "I could see dust flying. I turned around and looked back. I saw people running out of the offices saying somebody got hurt. The dust was so thick. You couldn't see."

It was not immediately known whether those killed were construction workers or mall employees or visitors.

Five of the injured were mall walkers, most of them in their 60s and 70s, including a man who ran through a window to flee the avalanche of debris and a couple who were pushed to the ground by the force of the collapse.

The most seriously injured was a 67-year-old woman with a broken ankle.

Like many malls around the country, Northline is a popular place for people, especially the elderly, to exercise each day by walking laps before the stores open.

Mayor Bob Lanier said the search for victims was slowed by the need to make certain the rescue crews were in no danger.

"They've got to make it safe," he said. "When they do, we think they will find some more (bodies)."

In 1995, Johnson, the former basketball star, broke ground on his chain of movie theaters with a promise to provide jobs and good service to minority urban areas. The mall is about five miles north of downtown Houston.

classes are part of the American Red Cross Learn To Swim program and cover levels I-VII. The levels help break the students into groups by knowledge of skills. Upon completion of one group, the students are allowed to move on to the next level where they work toward the next skill level. The last level is Advanced Skills where students are taught perfection of the different strokes.

Kimberly Kasper, a sophomore in pre-medicine and a UFM aquatic instructor, said she enjoys teaching the older kids more than the younger kids.

"The older children have more skills and can do more experienced activities such as water polo and diving. But no matter the child's age, I like being able to show the parents that their child is learning," Kasper said.

She said she especially loves the look on kids' faces when they realize they are floating.

"It makes me feel good teaching a lifelong skill," Kasper said.

Rebecca Peterson, a junior in elementary education, has taken the hydroaerobics class offered by UFM.

"I've lost 35 pounds since I learned to use water resistance to my advantage," she said.

Since acquiring the skills from her UFM class, Peterson said she has become a frequent user of the Natatorium.

People of all ages and skill levels are encouraged to register for classes. UFM course catalogs are located in the K-State Student Union, at area libraries, grocery stores and on the World Wide Web at (www.ksu.edu/ufm).

These catalogs give in-depth descriptions of the classes offered and provide all necessary information to apply. Registering may also be done by contacting the UFM office at 539-8763 or by e-mail at (ufm@ksu.edu).

The New York Voices have been performing with the Basie band since the two groups appeared together in September 1994 at a Carnegie Hall program with singer Lena Horne.

Wilson said the Basie band structure hasn't changed much since last year's concert, only that K-State audiences will get the treat of hearing drummer Butch Miles perform. Miles played drums during the band's later years under Basie.

"He is one of the best drummers in the world," Wilson said. "He is the best big-band drummer in the world."

Wilson said the concert will close with the traditional Basie classic "1 O'clock Jump," and it will also feature the K-State Concert Jazz Ensemble and the New York Voices.

The CJE joined the Basie concert after intermission last year for a memorable second act, which may be repeated Saturday night.

"When you first take office, ideas look clear but, as you get an accurate picture of how things are, the decisions become more difficult and less black and white," Kastner said. "I have no regrets other than the governmental process is brutally slow."

Kastner said his time on the commission was a learning experience. Looking back on the two years, he said he would not do anything differently. One thing that stands out is that he learned a lot through cultivating relationships with those outside of his generation. He said he appreciates the way he was accepted by the other commissioners.

"They've been pleasant to work with all the way through. They gave me every benefit of the doubt," Kastner said. "I appreciate my fellow commissioners, I learned a lot from Steve Hall and Bruce Snead especially.

"I value the wisdom of my friends. I value the discussions I've had with my dad about issues. It has been a privilege to serve the University and students as they are a significant part of the Manhattan community."

City officials look for options to widen Anderson Avenue

Traffic on the south side of campus could become less congested if the plans to widen Anderson Avenue are approved by the city and the public. However, construction would not begin until January 1999.

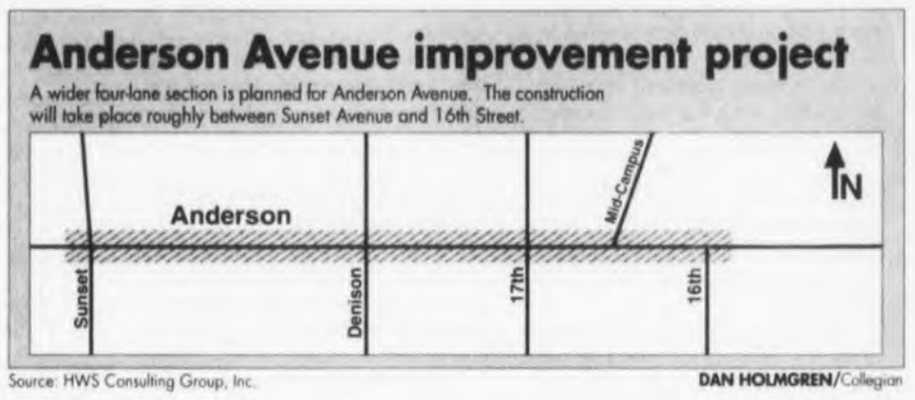
"We're in the process of developing alternatives," said Jack Messer, city engineer for Manhattan. "We'll take all the input we can get and throw it into the mix and come up with the right solution."

The plans call for the expansion of the existing four lanes with additional turning lanes. The target area along Anderson Avenue is from 16th Street to Sunset Avenue.

According to Messer, the idea for the changes to Anderson Avenue came from public opinion and the general feel from the community that something needed to be done.

"It's something that our engineers saw as a problem for a couple of years," Messer said, "and it became something of a community concern."

Messer said K-State has granted the right of way to its property. This means that any expansion directly in front of the University will spill over into the K-State Student Union parking lot.



"All widening from 17th Street to Denison Avenue will be north of Anderson onto the campus," Messer said.

Messer said the three alternatives the committee is reviewing involve the area from Denison Avenue to Sunset Avenue because that area is privately owned.

"We could go all to the north, all to the south or an equal split on both sides," Messer said

Haymaker resident arrested

SPENCER JACOBSON
staff writer

A student was arrested for arson at Haymaker Hall on Friday.

What Haymaker and the Riley County Police Department officials thought to be burning poster board turned out to be a posted reminder, the size of a piece of notebook paper.

The Haymaker resident arrested for the arson said the reminder didn't suffer much damage.

"I only burned a corner of the paper. You could still read the whole message," Joel Koehn, freshman in computer engineering, said.

Koehn said his residence hall assistant Jason Butell saw the paper and immediately notified his superior, Christina Sanchez, Haymaker residence-life coordinator. Koehn said Sanchez suggested contacting the RCPD.

Police arrested Koehn for arson and transported him to the Riley County jail to file the report. Koehn said he was kept an hour for filing and then released on $100 bail.

Koehn said the act was technically arson but felt it was exaggerated.

"They could have contacted the hall coordinator, and she could have talked to me or she could have had me write a paper about petty arson or something," Koehn said.

RCPD would not comment on the fire, and Haymaker officials were unavailable for comment at press time.

Clinton uses Georgia plan as education model

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — The young man from the mountains had no money to complete his last two years of college. So Zell Miller joined the Marines and the service eventually paid for his education.

Years later, as governor of Georgia, Miller launched his own version of the federal GI bill: a free ride through college for students who keep good grades.

"My mother used to tell me to take what you want, but pay for it. You can have a college education but you must pay for it by keeping a B average," said Miller, a former college history professor.

Now, President Clinton has loosely modeled his own hope for education after Georgia's lottery-funded HOPE scholarship program — Helping Outstanding Pupils Educationally — that has doled out more than $330 million to 239,000 students since 1993.

The president's plan also would require a B average but would use tax credits instead of lottery-funded scholarships.

"He and I had talked for years about this program, and he was always fascinated with it," said Miller. "When he came up with his HOPE idea, I was very pleased that he was trying to fill the need nationally that I filled in Georgia."

Georgia's HOPE scholarships give high school graduates with a B average free tuition plus $100 for books at any of the state's public colleges and universities.

DIANE JOHNSON with Operation Wildlife, holds a bald eagle during a live animal demonstration at the Kaw Valley Eagle Days at Manhattan Town Center on Saturday.

People gathered at Manhattan Town Center for Kaw Valley Eagle Days Saturday, whether it was a family day trip or a trip for high-school extra credit points.

The event, sponsored by the Kaw Valley Heritage Alliance, featured the U.S. national symbol, the bald eagle.

Lindsay Cochran, junior in pre-health professions, said she was just out shopping when she stumbled across the day's activities.

"I was looking at shoes when two live eagles caught my attention. I was immediately hooked into watching these huge birds," Cochran said.

Booths were set up in the mall with handouts, pamphlets and posters of information.

Meanwhile, visitors had gathered at an empty-store site for a slide presentation about the bald eagle by Scott Campbell of the Aerie Nature Series. Campbell presents slide shows to schools in Kansas and Missouri throughout the year.

After the slide show, spectators headed over to the center-court fountain for a live eagle demonstration presented by Diane Johnson of Operation Wildlife.

Johnson said she used to do her hair for the program, but it just wasn't worth the time when working with birds that have seven-foot wings.

The day's events included a Native American cultural presentation by Navajo Nation member Dennis Rogers. He lectured on the significance of eagles to his tribe. Rogers concluded the presentation with two tribal dances.

At Tuttle Creek State Park, visitors were taken on field trips to view bald eagles. This gave people a chance to enjoy the day's weather while getting to learn and see more live birds.

The tours were led by Irwin Hoogheem, co-president of the Northern Flint Hills Audubon Society, and two employees of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Steve Prockish and Paul Weidhaas.

The tour included two stops at viewing sites. Everyone was given the opportunity to look at eagles through field scopes that the guides set up.

"I saw 11 eagles in this same spot yesterday," Hoogheem said.

Between the mall and the lake, area residents saw live eagles and learned about their behavior and cultural significance.

Marlatt Hall residents congregate, cookout Friday to celebrate return of 20-year-old sci-fi classic

JASON ELLIS
staff reporter

More than 70 students tailgated Friday evening behind Marlatt Hall prior to attending the first showing of "Star Wars: A New Hope."

The event included a cookout, a"Star Wars" trivia contest for seven action figures, and drawings for three main prizes.

Coordinators of the activity were Neal Trantham, junior in elementary education, and Don Greer, senior in accounting. Trantham and Greer are resident assistants at Marlatt Hall.

"Don was the one that came up with the idea," Trantham said. "I helped him plan it."

STAR WARS

More coverage can be found on Page 8.

The action figures and main prizes, including a 3-D puzzle of a Millennium Falcon, a light saber and a Darth Vader mask, were purchased with Housing and Governing Board funds, Trantham said.

Names were drawn for trivia contest participants and questions were chosen from a list of 425 questions found on the Internet, Trantham said.

Trantham also said the food for the evening's event was provided through Kramer Food Center, and the people at Kramer were a key part in the success of the evening.

Tickets for 77 residents were purchased by Greer, who took over Trantham's place in line at noon. To ensure the availability of tickets, Trantham was in line at 7:30 a.m. Friday.

RESIDENTS of Marlatt Hall enjoy an unseasonably warm evening during a cookout before the opening of "Star Wars: A New Hope" Friday. Some of the residents had waited for tickets since early that morning.

• AUTHORITIES FIND 3RD PIPE BOMB IN 3 DAYS IN SAN DIEGO AREA.

CHULA VISTA, Calif. — Police evacuated a neighborhood surrounding the home of a federal employee who received a pipe bomb in the mail Saturday, the third such device found in the San Diego area in as many days.

The bomb did not go off when the man opened the package at 4:28 p.m. Saturday, said Sgt. Tom Keblish.

"When he opened it, he realized it was a pipe bomb and threw it down on the bed," he said.

The package contained two pipe bombs, both of which were disarmed without any injuries.

Sgt. Conrad Grayson of the San Diego Sheriff's Bomb Squad said the bombs were sophisticated and could have blown out the inside of the house.

Federal agencies in California were placed on alert.

The bomb appeared to be constructed by the same person who built two other bombs and mailed them Thursday and Friday.

One went to the San Diego FBI office and was detonated in the parking lot.

The second was sent to a waste treatment company, and authorities disarmed it. There were no injuries.

• SUBURBAN HOUSEWIFE FOUND GUILTY OF KILLING YOUNG SON.

KERRVILLE, Texas — A suburban housewife who claimed an intruder stabbed her two sons to death before slashing her throat was convicted Saturday of killing one of the boys.

Darlie Routier, 27, sobbed before the verdict and continued crying afterward, insisting "I did not kill my babies."

Her husband and other relatives, many wearing shirts with pictures of the boys, wept.

Darlie Routier could be sentenced to death by injection or life in prison, with that phase of the trial scheduled to begin Monday. Prosecutors are seeking the death sentence.

• LEADERS OF PERU, JAPAN AGREE TO OPEN DIALOGUE WITH REBELS.

TORONTO — Urged by Japan to avoid confrontation, President Alberto Fujimori of Peru said Saturday he would open a preliminary dialogue with rebels holding 72 hostages in Lima but again rejected their main demand.

Fujimori said he and Japanese Prime Minister Ryutaro Hashimoto agreed at a hastily arranged summit in Toronto that releasing jailed rebels was out of the question.

Responding to the summit declarations, rebel commander Nestor Cerpa said the guerrillas won't abandon their demand.

• WOMAN RAPED BY AIDS PATIENT WINS $420,000 FROM HOSPITAL.

EAU CLAIRE, Wis. — A woman who said she was raped by an AIDS patient in a Minneapolis hospital's psychiatric ward has won $420,000 in a negligence lawsuit against the hospital.

The 42-year-old woman continues to test negative for the AIDS virus.

The woman said she was raped in November 1993 while staying in Abbott Northwestern Hospital's psychiatric ward to treat an alcohol dependency relapse.

Hospital spokeswoman Gloria O'Connell said the hospital believed the woman consented to the patient's sexual advances — and that she had at first admitted that.

No criminal charges were filed, she said.

• LIBERATION GROUP CLAIMS RESPONSIBILITY FOR 50 BOMBS.

AJACCIO, Corsica — In the largest wave of attacks in recent years, more than 50 bombs exploded early Sunday on this French Mediterranean island wracked by nationalist violence.

The Corsican National Liberation Front-Historic Branch, which seeks greater autonomy from France, claimed responsibility for the 56 pre-dawn attacks in a statement sent to local media.

COMPETITORS IN THE ROPING COMPETITION chase down a steer during the team-roping jackpot sponsored by the K-State Rodeo Club Saturday at Weber Arena.

Ropers use contest for training

▶ The finishers. K-State Rodeo team member, Ryan Vessar and Casey Veatch captured first place in the number seven; Mike McCleary and Vessar placed second; Mitch Murray and Rick Anderson placed third and Brad Purdue and Domer finished in fourth place. Fastest time was awarded to Purdue and Anderson. Donnie McNeece and Blain Linaweaver placed first in the number ten, followed by Jay T. Reynolds and B. Linaweaverat second, third, Robert Kitchner and Jerry Linaweaver at 3rd and Vessar and J. Linaweaver at fourth.

The weather was cloudy but it didn't dampen the spirits of 172 teams of ropers Saturday morning at Weber Arena.

K-State Rodeo Club sponsored the team-roping jackpot. Participants said they welcomed the opportunity to rope in a climate-controlled building in preparation for the Grass Roots Roping Competition, Feb. 13-16 in Topeka.

"Contestants were satisfied overall. The day went smoothly because of the good help from the club members," Ryan Vessar, junior in animal science and industry, said.

"This is my second jackpot. I like team roping because I like to ride, and it feels great to catch two horns," Diane Haffener, Manhattan resident, said.

Nick Reynolds from Cuba said the ground was in good shape, and the cattle worked well.

The number system developed by Denny Gentry of the United States Team Roping Championships was used at the jackpot.

In this system, ropers can enter the number seven and the number 10. The number system assigns a number to a roper based on his or her ability to rope. A combination of the numbers assigned to the two ropers can not exceed the number of the event that they are participating in.

> "This is my second jackpot. I like team roping because it feels great to catch two horns."

> DIANE HAFFENER
> Manhattan resident

Most ropers said they believe the number system by the USTRC benefits most ropers.

"USTRC's number system is known better as the handicap system," Todd Domer, 1983 K-State graduate, said." The system is as fair as it can be. It was worse when we didn't have numbers. Ten to 15 years ago, the sport was suffering because the lower-skilled ropers didn't have a chance."

"After you watch the cattle run, you know what they are going to do. Nothing beats roping live cattle," Reynolds said.

Students to present resolutions to state legislators this month

▶ KANSAS UNIVERSITIES CALL FOR more money to be spent on scholarships, faculty salaries.

BENJAMIN YODER
staff reporter

The voice of K-State students will be heard Feb. 13 at the Statehouse.

A group of students and student senators will present to state legislators nine resolutions for the Regents Universities' Policies and Procedures Booklet.

Tracey Mann, governmental relations chair, said the resolutions represent a general overlay of how university students feel.

Written in conjunction with the other Kansas Board of Regents schools, Emporia State University, Fort Hays State University, Pittsburg State University, University of Kansas and Wichita State University, the resolutions give statewide representation to college students.

Last year, K-State was the only university to lobby legislators with the formal Policies and Procedures Booklet.

Among the resolutions to be taken to Topeka is a recommendation for more affordable tuition at regents universities.

Students within the regents system are paying about 34 percent of their education, according to the resolution.

Increasing state scholarships is also addressed in the proposal.

Kansas ranked 31st in the country in state-scholarship grants in 1996, according to the resolution — $10.2 million for need-based aid and $2.4 million for non-need-based aid.

Simplifying the procedure for grant applications is another resolution. It recommends a comprehensive grant program that would reduce the amount of paperwork to file.

The program would merge the Regents Supplemental Grant, Kansas Tuition Grant, K-State Scholarship and Ethnic Minority Scholarship programs, according to the resolution.

The technological improvement resolution would initially distribute $7.5 million to the regents system for computers, classroom instructional and audio/video equipment.

K-State's share of the $7.5 million would be $2.1 million, or 29.7 percent.

The outlay would be followed by a $1 increase in tuition. The state would match 2-to-1 for every dollar raised.

A recommendation for the continuation of qualified admissions at regents universities is also part of the resolution.

The admission standards raise academic requirements for high-school students, according to the resolution. Those students not prepared for college will have to meet the requirements before they are admitted to regents universities.

Increasing faculty salaries is also addressed in the resolutions. The average salary of an instructor within the regents system is 9 percent below that of comparable institutions.

K-State's faculty is 8.5 percent below the average.

A state-sponsored college savings plan is another resolution in the plan. The voluntary program would provide state and local tax-exempt funds for educational uses.

"We are in favor of a state-sponsored college savings plan," Student Body President Chris Hansen said. "The net gain has shown to be very positive."

People who enroll in the program would allow the state to invest funds for them. The return on the investment may be as much as 10 percent.

STUDENT SENATE GIVES OK TO REGENTS RESOLUTIONS

Student Senate voted in favor of nine resolutions, which senators will submit to state legislators in Topeka on Feb. 13.

Because Thursday's meeting lasted until 1:30 a.m., three resolutions on the agenda were sent back to committee so they could be discussed and voted on at a later date.

Tracey Mann, governmental relations chair, said the resolutions outline ways to improve campus life and the quality of education at Kansas Board of Regents universities.

The resolution includes a recommendation to increase faculty salaries. K-State faculty is paid 8.5 percent less than the University's peer institutions.

"If we keep our figures high enough, we can keep our good faculty here," Ryan Evans, Senate intern coordinator, said.

Another measure in the set of resolutions supports the continuation of state property taxes. Cuts to property taxes may have adverse effects on state financial support to regents institutions, according to the resolution.

"We're opposed to cuts that are drastic and extreme," Agriculture Senator Jennafer Neufeld said.

The resolutions also include Senate support for technological improvements in the classroom, a state-sponsored college savings plan, more affordable tuition, increases in state scholarship grants, a comprehensive grant application, continuation of qualified admissions and implementation of a safety task force.

In other business, Senate voted to support a Big 12 alliance. The alliance will give more legislative lobbying power to universities in the Big 12, according to the resolution.

It will also open lines of communication between the student governing bodies of each university.

"It will increase communication between Big 12 schools," Senate Vice Chair Jill Hayhurst said.

Three vacant Senate positions were also filled Thursday. The colleges of Arts and Sciences, Business Administration and Engineering each received a new senator.

Craig Korth, James Evins and Mike Dougan will fill the positions respectively.

A new Senate secretary was also approved. Lisa Dethloff was chosen for the position.

A GUIDE TO SECTIONS OF THE COLLEGIAN OPINION PAGE

▶ COLUMNS are opinions expressed by the columnists. The opinions are not necessarily the opinions of the Collegian.

Upcoming deadlines should not be put off

Putting off things until the last minute is a skill most students have mastered. Let's face it, though, life is hard enough when you're juggling classes, a job, a full social calendar, a family and other obligations. Leaving everything until the last minute makes the last minute a lot more difficult than it needs to be.

There are several deadlines coming up that need attention. They aren't going to get any easier if you put them off.

• If you are planning on donning a cap and gown in May, graduation applications are due on Friday, Feb. 7. You can pick up and turn in your applications at your friendly dean's office.

• The priority deadline for financial aid applications is March 1. Students who turn in applications after this are not eligible to receive work-study funds, Perkins loans or Federal Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants (SEOGs).

If you applied for financial aid for this semester, you should have already received your renewal application in the mail. Applications can also be picked up in the Office of Student Financial Assistance, Fairchild 104.

• Tax season is upon us. The absolute final deadline is April 15. Remember, however, that the sooner you file, the faster you'll get your refund. The extra cash could come in handy for your Spring Break excursion during the last week of March. On the other hand, serious penalties are in store for those who fail to file on time.

As some smart person once said, "Perhaps the most valuable result of all education is the ability to make ourselves do the thing we have to do when it ought to be done, whether we like it or not."

• READER BLAMES ASBURY FOR TEAM'S LOSSES.

Editor,

Something is seriously wrong when you lose to a good, but not great, Texas team that you are 5-0 against in history. You lose to a fair Wichita State team in Manhattan for the first time in history. And you also lose to a Texas A&M team that can't even tread water.

Asbury has had long enough to right this sinking ship loaded with enough history tonnage to sink an aircraft carrier.

The games in the last four to six weeks, including Michigan State, Xavier and a blown 20-point lead to Nebraska, show that this team has no desire to win and that stems directly back to one guy — Asbury.

At least Altman's teams showed some heart and fight (remember the Cardiac Cats?), or at least showed up. And lack of talent is no excuse for Altman had no better talent level on his teams.

It's time to get a man in here that WANTS to be here and that man is Bob Chipman. He wants it more than anyone. Even our all-time former great coach Jack Hartman endorsed him three years ago. The last time he did that we eventually went to the Elite Eight under the direction of a fine coach. Let's see ... I think his name was Lon Kruger.

Come on, Max Urick, do something before it's too late.

• SUPER BOWL FANS NEED TO GRAB A CLUE.

Editor,

I was shocked by the mindless comments made by the simpletons that were quoted in "Not Pass Quietly," an article in the Jan. 27 Collegian that chronicled the activities of K-State students on Super Bowl Sunday.

One student commented that he looked forward to this day all year long because of the good game and cold beer. How is this day so much different from all the other days of the year in which more competitive games are being played and cold beer is readily available? You can't tell me that people look forward to this day all year long. No one is that pathetic.

Another student stated that Super Bowl Sunday should be named a national holiday, like Christmas. I can't fathom the idiocy it must take to even suggest that a game, even a championship one, should be regarded as highly as the birth of Christ. I'm not religious at all, but I do recognize the importance of a holiday like Christmas, especially when compared to an event like the Super Bowl.

Also, a young lady said, "It doesn't matter about the game, only hot quarterbacks and beer." Did I mention that this woman's major is elementary education? It's little wonder that our secondary education system is so inadequate when considering this type of comment made by a future educator.

I think it's important to remember that perspective is everything; a sporting event is inconsequential relative to just about anything else in life.

Although I, too, watched part of the Super Bowl and enjoy following sports, my priorities aren't influenced by unreasoned statements, nor are my senses and capability for rational thought dulled by 50-cent draws.

I urge all who read this to think before you speak, especially if it's to a reporter for a publication that has as many readers as the Collegian.

Get out there and offend

Open mindness, spread liberally, can go a long way

VIEWPOINT

BRANDI HERTIG

BRANDI HERTIG is a sophomore in print journalism and English/creative writing. You can e-mail your comments to Brandi at (blh0377@ksu.edu).

As we hurdle toward the 21st century, the collective American society's undies are tightening in a big, binding bunch. To be put blandly, Americans are growing more conservative by the day, and it's getting a little uncomfortable.

The term liberal has taken on somewhat of a swear-word persona of as late. Children in middle school restrooms all across the country are scrawling it on the walls in lieu of your run-of-the-mill stall graffiti. "Misty is a left-wing freak with a liberal agenda" has replaced "Misty is a ho."

So, to save a lot of needless giggling by folks who really do think liberal is a naughty word, I'll define what I mean.

Free thinking.

The kind of liberal we all could use a dose of is not the prepackaged political kind. It's simply a state of mind. A person with a little liberalness in them does not let society dictate their actions. A liberal does what they think is best for them and society, and takes what everyone else might think of them into little consideration.

MIKE WEATHERFORD/Collegian

Naturally, even being liberal has its boundaries, and I'm not promoting an if-it-feels-good-do-it attitude here. What's happening to America goes much deeper than the cut and dry distinctions between pleasure and displeasure.

The problem is people tend to suppress true feelings and wants in order to blend in with everyone else. That's a natural inclination; everyone wants to be able to fit into some corner of society. However, sometimes it's necessary to go against the grain and risk the splinters.

Why? Improvement and change doesn't come when people tip-toe gingerly around sensitive issues, taking special care not to offend. It's certainly worth the risk of pissing someone off if there's something important to be said.

People get offended. And when that happens, they want the offending party to know exactly how they feel and what their opinion is on the issue at hand. That's also natural. When provoked into coming out of their conservative shells, humans want to make sure that their side of the story is heard.

And in the midst of this word war between conflicting views, each side slowly slips back into their shells and closes their minds, letting the other point of view just bounce off the outside.

For some reason, each side firmly believes that their opinion is the correct one, and whatever the other person is saying is nothing but a big load of crap anyway.

And this is where the whole free-thinking idea comes into play.

For example, it's hard for someone who is in support of homosexuality to listen to someone who is not of the same opinion. However, when we stop talking long enough to listen to what someone else has to say and open our minds, our own scope of opinions broaden. And, if nothing else, though our stance most likely will not change, we will understand where the other person is coming from.

And then there are the folks who refuse to budge from their close-minded view point, despite the promises of enlightenment a tiny shift might bring. They wade through life unquestioning of the values that were passed down to them generations ago.

What will become of these conservative turtles stubbornly stuck in their shells? Nothing, probably. Life will come and go for them without so much as a hair out of place. They can die happily secure in the knowledge that they were good law-abiding, God-fearing citizens of the United States of America. And that's it.

Then there are those of us who refuse to obey what someone else decided was right for society governing our actions. Those of us willing to question the forces that be, to be advocates for opinions of all breeds, not just our own. When we immerse ourselves in this volatile medium, life isn't just blowing by us. We're making it happen. Hair will fall out of place, people will get offended.

It's not always easy, but in the long run, the discomfort of opening your mind and speaking the truth is far less than the discomfort of squirming silently in tight, binding underwear.

destination self destruction

MATT HAWKINS/Collegian

Capitalizing on addicts' problems feeds greater menance

Doom is at hand.

A contagious tradition of chronic self-destruction has intersected an epidemic of indulgence in instant gratification, and the result is cultural suicide.

The unaddicted or, more accurately, the unaddictive population could not possibly realize the peril lurking around every seemingly innocent desire or the obsessive potential amidst the camouflage of the suggestive sensory assault of images we are subjected to every day.

The urgency of what you might call a movement for sensory reform is easily dismissed, because there is no accurate method of calculating the casualties of such excess.

Statistically, we die of heart attacks or cancer, not of smoking or over-eating. We die in car accidents or as victims of homicide, not from alcohol, sex addiction or in the pursuit of illegal drugs.

The destructive nature of the instant gratification-oriented society promotes behavior that stirs competition for resources and vices and ultimately to destroy ourselves of compulsion and excess.

The resulting paradox is that as our culture emulates the reputation of Greek discipline under the pretension of some kind of higher standing in the civilized universe, our social evolution presents evidence of a suicidal nature more characteristic of Roman society.

Our ability to identify or translate our own physical needs is manipulated by those attempting to capitalize on synthetic needs from such a young age. It is surprising that any of us survive with any measure of instinct intact.

To be initiated into membership in the indiscriminant union of self-destruction requires no secret handshake, nor dues or fees just a passionate commitment to death by excess.

I have to admit, I will never outrun the warped life-ambition to die of a heroine overdose.

For me, it all started with what my mother called a bad habit.

I developed an appreciation for salt, then a dedicated compulsion and, finally, a tolerance that ended at the doctor.

Eventually, my generally overwhelming obsessive nature began to be less-than-systematically filtered into a series of legal and not-so legal vices including caffeine, aerobics, cigarettes, work, alcohol, sex and drugs.

Thus began a long pattern of both ritualized and spontaneously addictive behavior that cannot be tamed, only transferred to more positive or at least neutral addictions.

The popularity of 12-step programs, as well as the mainstream gravitation of the mental-health business and success of the self-help industry, reveals a striking trend.

Money is made in creating an appetite for instant gratification (advertising, marketing research, etc.) in the fulfillment of these needs, and in the treatment of the compulsion or excess.

The propaganda of capitalism suggests that addicts are, in some cases, victims of a hereditary predisposition or general weakness in character.

It is possible that such deviants are only victims of a higher tolerance to gratification or a taste for less socially acceptable vices.

So a multi-billion dollar industry is created for the treatment and/or punishment of such deviants.

But there is more money to be made from the failure of such treatment, because a society that needs instant gratification can never have enough and must keep producing more.

So to succeed in raising young addicts, whether it is an addict of sex, coffee or heroin, makes a lot of people a lot of money.

To not hold such industries accountable for the reproduction of addicts assumes that we act independent of our environment, denying the obvious correlation between a cultural atmosphere that both promotes and condemns the quick-fix mentality.

Spring break alternatives feature service projects throughout U.S.

REBECCA AISTRUP
staff reporter

St. Isidore Catholic Student Center, along with K-State and the Student Governing Association are sponsoring Spring Break Alternative 1997.

The week-long trips, which are open to anyone, are intended to serve the poor and those who are in need of raising their quality of life, materially and spiritually, according to a trip brochure.

"We hope students become more aware of social issues and social problems," Kim Ebben, coordinator, said.

The students will be serving different needs on the trips, but they all have the general purpose of helping the less fortunate.

The Salinas, Calif., trip will serve the homeless, migrant workers and physically or mentally handicapped adults.

The students who travel to Washington, D.C., will be helping an organization called So Others Might Eat. SOME attempts to alleviate pain, hunger and isolation.

In Chicago, the students will be helping children and families with the problems of poverty and hunger. They also will be helping to provide the basic needs of food, clothing and shelter.

Students will provide services in a domestic-violence shelter, a rescue mission for men, a soup kitchen and a food pantry in Osh Kosh, Wis.

Those who choose the Kansas City trip will be helping the Christian Foundation for Children and Aging.

They will be working in a soup kitchen as well as in other areas.

"You learn ways in which they are alleviating problems," Ebben said. "You can bring that knowledge back to K-State and help people and communities on a local level."

But spaces can fill up.

"There is a limited amount of space available," Clint Leonard, coordinator said. "Each site can only accommodate a certain amount of people."

The cost of the trips will include transportation, lodging and food, except for those who travel to Kansas City, who will need to provide their own transportation.

The costs are $280 to Washington, D.C.; $240 to Salinas, Calif.; $210 to Chicago; $190 to Osh Kosh, Wis.; and $80 to Kansas City

Students who have participated in the Spring Break alternative in past years said they decided to get involved for different reasons.

Amy Martin, junior in pre-medicine, traveled to Saltillo, Mexico, in 1995 and 1996.

"I got involved for the initial fact that it sounded exciting and it was a way to leave the area for spring break," she said.

Reflection on one's own circumstances in relation to other people's is motivation for some students, Ebben said.

"Getting involved in these trips makes you aware of things that we take for granted," Ebben said. "We have been so far removed from our society today, that we don't know what poverty is like.

"You realize when you are helping others in poverty that they are a human being just like you. You learn more from people you serve than what you could ever give them," she said.

Applications for the trips can be picked up at St. Isidore's. The deadline for applications is Feb. 12.

"It's not just a college experience, but a life experience," Martin said.

Students anticipate break; agents urge early planning

RACHAEL KRUEGER
staff reporter

On March 21, K-State students will hit the slopes, hit the beach or just hit the sack. The last option is the cheapest, and usually the least popular. Some want to make spring break 1997 one to remember.

"By this time of year, I just want a change of atmosphere and something exciting to look forward to," Marlys Barrons, junior in Human Resource Management, said.

Many students begin the spring break process with the help of a travel agency. At no extra cost to the traveler, agencies access airline computers and other channels, saving clients long distance phone calls and unnecessary legwork.

Barrons, who is traveling through New England and New York during spring break, used a travel consultant.

"I told her where I wanted to go and how much I was willing to spend, and she found a great deal," she said.

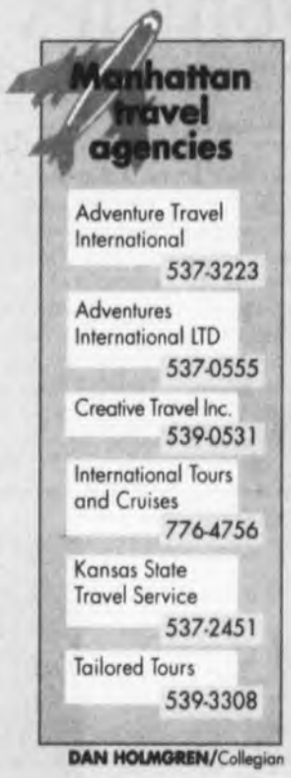
Cancun is a popular spring break destination this year, said Nancy House, a travel consultant for International Tours and Cruises.

Tara Houston, a consultant for Creative Travel, said the most popular road trips are to Padre Island, Texas, various spots in Florida and ski resorts in Colorado.

"These are really incredible deals," Houston said of the packages they were offering.

Creative Travel uses the tour operator Student Travel Services. Houston said she saw first hand that the service was trustworthy by traveling through them as part of her consulting.

Occasionally travelers encounter unfavorable tour operators. Houston said that one such service was to blame last year for clients experiencing a 36-hour airport layover.



"You have to watch out for the gimmicks," she said.

If a travel agency is not appealing prospect, the Union Program Council also has spring break ideas.

Start planning immediately. Many packages and deals are already sold out.

Houston said she has advice for students for next year.

"If you can make plans before Christmas break, you can get a big jump on what's out there," she said.

Women's tennis smashes rivals during weekend

SHANE McCORMICK
sports writer

The K-State women's tennis team rebounded from a season-opener loss by serving up victories against Southwest Missouri State and Creighton over the weekend.

The Cats opened the weekend on Friday night by posting a 7-2 win against Southwest Missouri State. In singles action, junior Yana Dorodnova continued her successful singles campaign. Ranked No. 9 in the ITA's Central Region, Dorodnova posted a 6-1, 6-4 win against Tova Hegna.

Dorodnova breezed through the first set, but struggled in the second.

"Yana allowed Hegna to dictate the play in the second set, Hegna was controlling what was going on out there," Coach Steve Bietau said.

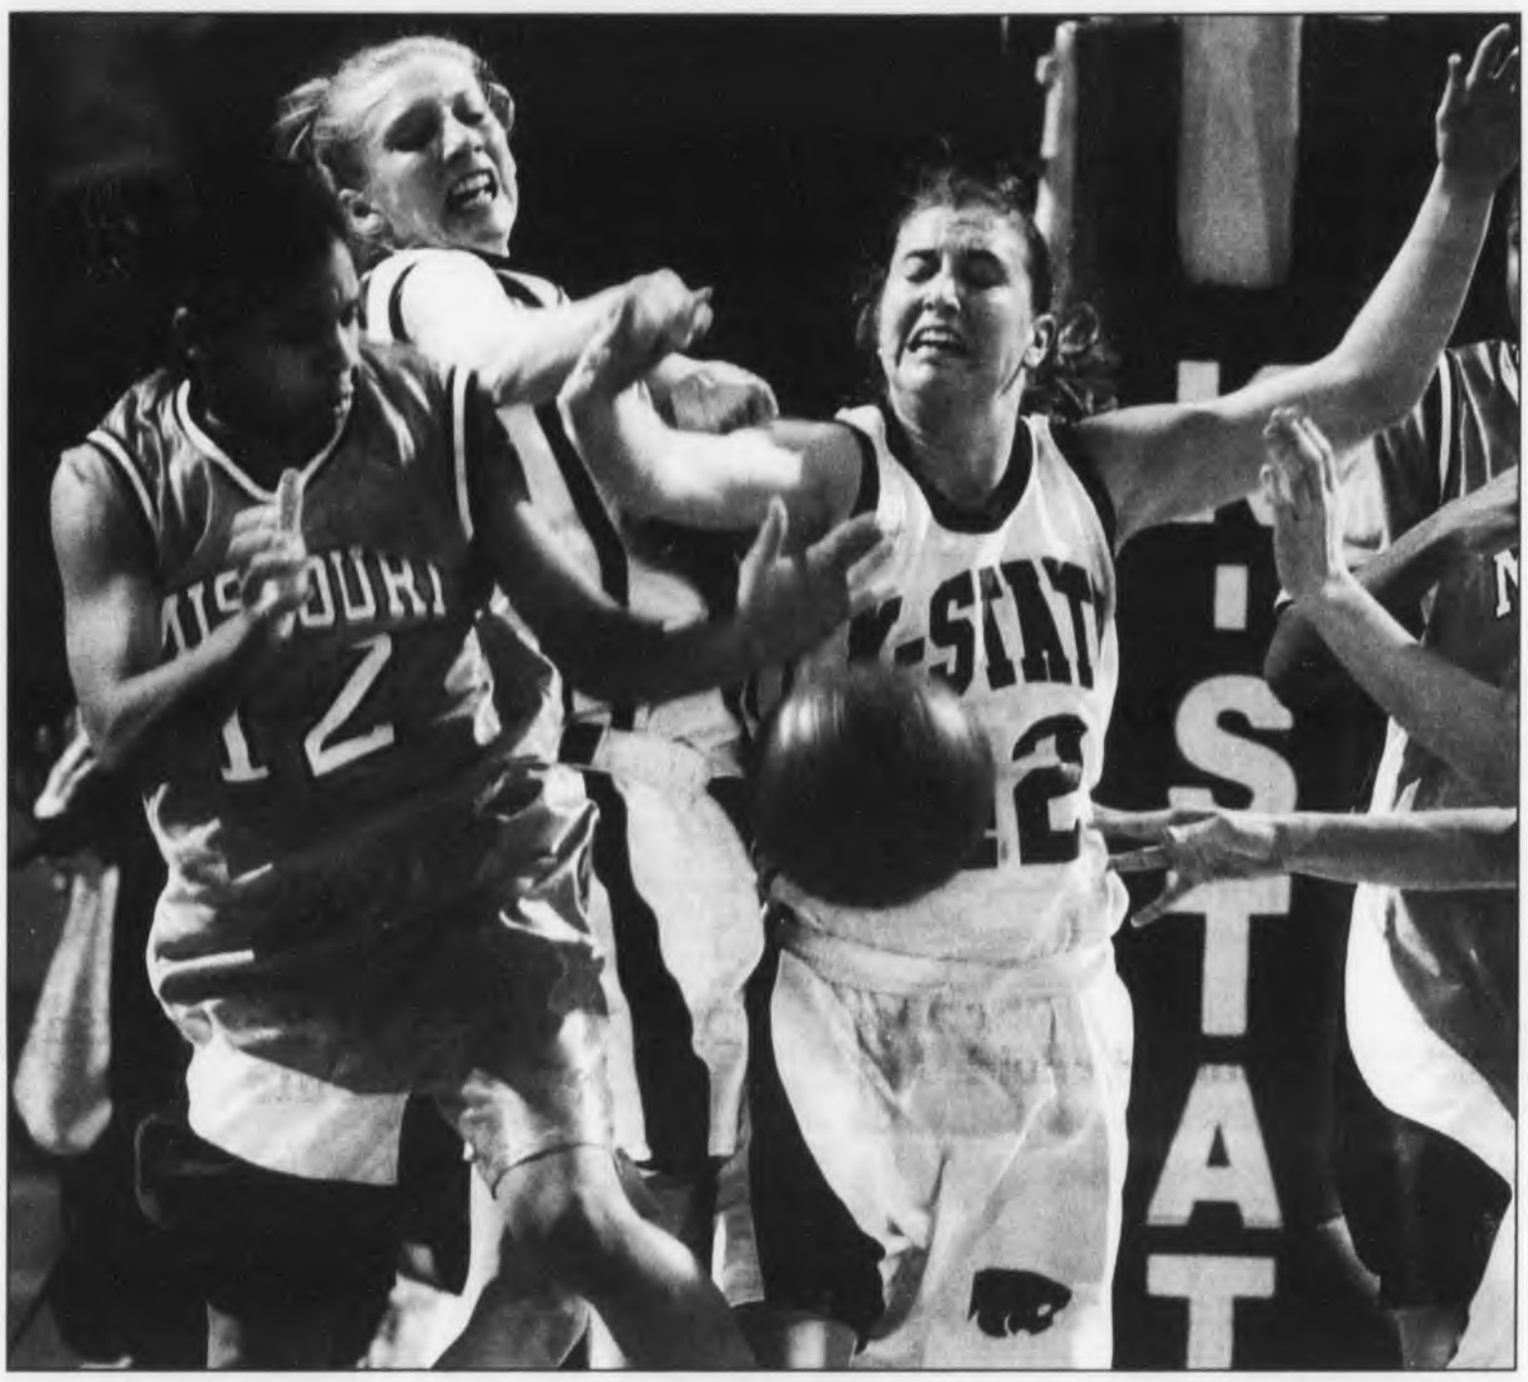
Dorodnova said she agreed that it wasn't her best match.

"My play wasn't that good on Friday, I lost my concentration in the second set when I shouldn't have," she said.

Freshman Aisha Butt made her spring season debut by posting a 6-1, 6-0 win against Molly Gunter.

Also making her collegiate tennis debut was sophomore Kelli Rettenmaier, who fell to Amy Lawson 6-3, 6-0. With the team battling injury problems, Rettenmaier earned a spot on the team as a walk-on earlier this week. Also walking on to the squad was sophomore Amy Dawson. Dawson did not see any action against either team.

The Cats swept the rest of the singles matches, only losing a total of seven games in those matches.



The Cats picked up two of three doubles victories against Southwest Missouri State. At No. 1 doubles, Dorodnova and junior Lena Piliptchak posted 8-4 against Hegna and Nancy Shannon.

Before the Creighton match on Sunday, Butt's family passed out noisemakers to cheer on the Cats. The Cats made plenty of noise on the court, routing the Bluejays 8-1.

Dorodnova got the Cats off to a good start by routing Traci Miller 6-0, 6-0. Unlike the Southwest Missouri State match, Bietau said Dorodnova played aggressive tennis.

"What happened Friday night, I didn't see happen today with Yana," Bietau said. "She came in off her K-State's women's team bounced back with a vengeance from its loss to Colorado on Wednesday. The Cats bombed the Missouri Tigers Saturday night, 77-42.

"I never felt like we were bombing them," Coach Deb Patterson said. "We've never done that. Missouri is a young team. You see that they're ready to make a move, but then they make the young mistake."

Tiger guard Julie Helm got the ball into the basket after the tipoff to post the first score of the game. She went on to score 20 points, the only Tiger to score in the double digits.

"You have to give credit to Julie Helm," Patterson said. "Going in, we knew she was a player, and I think she stepped up and did everything she could."

K-State's rebounding improved from the game before this one. The Cats pulled down 38 boards, up from their 25 at Colorado. Patterson said rebounds were a concern.

"After Colorado, we needed to emphasize offensive boards," Patterson said. "We have to hold teams to one good look at the basket."

The Tigers were on the Cats' tails during the first 10 minutes, down by only four at the 10:30 mark.

The Tigers were forcing the Cats to run 30 seconds of offense. With three seconds left on the shot clock, Missy Decker put up a three-pointer from four feet behind the line, beginning the soon-steady point climb.

At 8:35, forward Sara Munson saw her first playing time since Memphis on Nov. 22. She immediately pulled down a defensive board and brought the ball down the court for the Cats.

Shooting problems plagued the Tigers, and forward Kesha Bonds, last year's Big 8 freshman of

SOPHOMORE BOUNCES BACK FROM INJURY

In a 77-42 win over Missouri, K-State had four players who scored in double figures. But with the return of guard/forward Sara Munson, the Cats received a contribution that will help them down the road.

The sophomore from Junction City played in her first game since the season opener against Memphis. Munson had been sitting out, nursing a stress fracture injury to the left femur.

With 8:35 left in the first half, Munson made her long-awaited return to the floor of Bramlage Coliseum and quickly made her presence known. On the Tigers' possession, guard Tanisha Johnson missed on a jump shot. Munson grabbed the rebound and brought the ball up the floor.

"It really felt great to get back in the game," Munson said. "I really felt ready to get back into the flow of things."

Munson's first points of the game came at the 10:03 mark of the second half off a back-door layup. Munson gathered five rebounds and scored six points in 12 minutes of play against the Tigers.

Cat coach Deb Patterson said that Munson's intensity didn't stop when she came out of the game.

"Sara is a really smart player," Patterson said. "Whenever she came out of the game, she just didn't sit on the sidelines. She continued to study, analyze and observe the game.

"Young people that want to be players respond to being out of the game the way Sara did today," she said. "She played the four spot, three spot and the two spot, that is a player that knows the offense."

There had been speculation that K-State might redshirt Munson if the injury persisted. Munson said however, that she and Patterson had not gotten into any serious talks about red-shirting.

Patterson said that the next step is to get Munson more playing time in practice.

"She has had the green light for practice but she hasn't been getting a lot of reps," she said. "She has been with the second group in practice, so she hasn't been getting a lot of time. But I've been really pleased with how far she has come."

Munson and the Cats will look to extend a 10-game home court winning streak Wednesday night when they face Oklahoma State.

Losing streak continues as Cats drop ball against Missouri Tigers, 85-63

JEREMY KELLEY
sports editor

COLUMBIA, MO. — Little mistakes aren't so little when they are reoccurring mistakes.

K-State dropped their ninth straight and eighth straight in the conference Saturday because they made too many little mistakes.

"The bottom line is we have to stop finding ways to lose and have to start finding ways to win games," Coach Tom Asbury said.

From the start, it was played out to be a good game: the two cellar-dwellers duking it out.

K-State was looking for its first Big 12 win against an injury-plagued Tiger team. Guard Jeff Hafer had a sprained wrist, Missouri's leading rebounder, Tyron Lee, was out and forward Tate Decker was missing in action with a dislocated finger.

So what went wrong?

"I really don't know. I really can't come up with an answer to that one," guard Marcus McCollough said after an 85-63 routing.

Yet, it was a good ballgame to begin with. Down 10-4 with 14 minutes, 59 seconds left.

K-State rallied within one, 14-13 with 10:47 left only to see Missouri return the favor.

The Tigers went on a 10-3 run of its own and led 24-17 with 6:54 left in the half.

Missouri cushioned its lead to a 39-29 mark at the half and was leading the battle of two of the Big 12's run-of-the-mill teams.

Uncharacteristic of the Cats was their turnover count in the first half. K-State tallied 12 turnovers in the first half, a lot of which were mistakes like guards Chris Griffin and Paco May grabbing a rebound together then forcing a turnover between the two.

"That's how we've been playing," Asbury said. "That's how we're figuring out how to lose and not figuring out how to win."

Also at the half Missouri had made its mark at the foul line, hitting a perfect 13-13 from the charity stripe.

"They're probably a good free-throw shooting team because they are a good three-point shooting team," Asbury said.

"They were camped on the foul line. We kept them on the foul line all night," he said.

But the Cats opened second half with an 11-6 run cutting the Tigers to five, 45-40 with 15:19 left.

However, Missouri buried the Cats for good with a 13-4 spurt that put the Tigers on top for the remainder of the game.

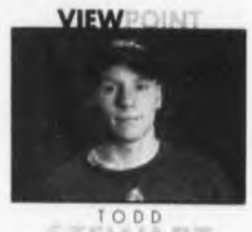
Plagued by turnover after turnover, K-State could not surmount a lead to get back in the ballgame, and Missouri reserves were having career days.

"We played hard, but we really didn't play smart," forward Mark Young said.

"We made a lot of stupid mistakes that really hurt us," he said.

Three different Tigers reached career highs Saturday: guard Corey Tate with 22 points, guard Danny Allouche who tallied 20 and forward L. Dee Murdock who chipped in 17.

Forward Kelly Thames also added 16 for the Tigers who improved to 11-10 overall and 3-6 in the conference.



May led the Cats with 20 tallies and McCollough added a career high 12 points.

As for K-State, they remain winless in the conference and are searching for any answer to their problems.

"We have to stop thinking we can't win and start thinking that we can. This team is still good enough to win," Asbury said. "We're good enough to be playing better, and I'll take responsibility for that."

Controversy raises questions about talk radio, Dies, intramurals

VIEWPOINT

TODD STEWART

TODD STEWART is a junior in secondary education/English. You can e-mail comments to Todd at (toddws@ksu.edu)

I would have to say my first week as Manhattan's Most Popular was quite entertaining.

I made four radio morning shows, two newspapers, two evening radio talk shows and Saturday's regionally-televised K-State and Missouri game.

But the highlight of my week was Sunday's intramural basketball victory. With onlookers and players quick to shoot the Manny Dies comments my way, 39 minutes of my offensive game was noticeably rattled, although I was able to reach double figures in rebounds. But when it counted, I responded.

With 4.1 seconds left, and my team down by one, I took the post-entry pass, turned and went up strong. The basket and foul brought my team to a 29-28 victory and my hecklers to a dead silence. I was the hero, to be heckled no more.

But in this week of letters, responses, criticism, hatred and heroics, I came up with questions I just couldn't find the answers for.

Have fun with it, draw your own conclusions.

On K-State's loss to Colorado on Wednesday:

Is K-State ever going to win a Big 12 game?

Just how good is Chauncey Billups?

Did my last column get Dies the start?

Will Dies ever receive a bigger ovation?

Did anyone notice the letters FTS on the backs of the shoes of the players' shoes?

What could that possibly mean?

How many people really do blame me for Dies' injury?

Is tearing a tendon in the arch of your foot a common injury?

On my new-found fame:

Do you think the radio stations would have been so bold had I been one of the listeners that called in with comments?

How much e-mail can my account hold?

Would a scheduled appearance by me on KSDB-FM 91.9's "A Purple Affair" and on a Manhattan radio morning show get ratings the likes of which have never been seen before?

Will I get that chance to uphold my good name?

What is the world coming to when Kansas City Star columnist Jason Whitlock writes to me in response?

Wouldn't all of you love to know what he said?

On K-State coach Tom Asbury:

What does he really think of me?

Did Asbury get tired of all the questions about me on his radio show last week?

What would Asbury say if I told him I received several letters in the past week that said Gerald Eaker, not Dies, was in fact the worst player in college basketball history?

Would Asbury even care if I told him I thought Eaker was one of the most valuable players on this team?

Did Asbury really take a copy of my column into a team practice?

Did he hope the team would be able to rally behind the article and finally pull out a Big 12 win?

On K-State's loss to Missouri on Saturday:

Is K-State ever going to win a Big 12 game?

After the Wildcats have been playing so many teams so close, could anyone have predicted a Tiger win by that much?

What would the score have been had Dies played?

Did anyone laugh as hard as I did when a TV announcer called me a moron and an idiot?

Did that same announcer really think I was trying to become the next Howard Cosell?

Was Dies somewhere smiling?

On Sunday's game-winning basket in intramural basketball:

How can I play so badly for 39 minutes, but play so well when it counted?

How can it be possible that my team needs only to win one of its last three to make the playoffs?

Do I currently lead intramurals in rebounding?

How good would I be with a good vertical?

Do those Strength Shoes really work?

On the one-on-one battle with Dies:

Could Dies beat me with a torn tendon in the arch of his foot?

Would Dies try and hurt me?

If so, would I ever walk again?

Did one Manhattan radio show really offer to try and put on the one-on-one battle?

Would people really come to watch me play basketball?

If Dies is healthy by Final Four weekend, could there be a better time?

If we did it for charity, what could be more harmless?

What charity could Dies and I raise money for with the event?

Could we sell out Ahearn Field House?

What would Asbury do if I did in fact beat the bigger, stronger Dies?

FIREFIGHTERS RESPONDED to a fire Saturday afternoon, west of the intersection of Seth Child Road and Marlatt Avenue. Changing wind conditions kindled the fire and kept the firefighters busy from 1:28 to almost 5 p.m. The Tattarax Fire Department fought the blaze. The fire threatened the home of Clark Linders, owner of the three McDonald's in Manhattan. Linders was out of town during the fire.

Speaker to give tips for developing skills to thrive in job hunt

TAMARA PETERSON
staff reporter

▶ Job Market: Sold Out
7 p.m. Tuesday in Forum Hall.
Admission is free.

Tom Ryan, an author and entrepreneur, is not your typical nationally recognized, blue-suit speaker.

"Ryan tries to get the audience involved in the lecture. He's a passionate speaker and tries to get the audience excited about his message. It's a stereotype that blue-suit business speakers are cold and boring," said Tiffany Pollard, lecture coordinator for Union Program Council Issues and Ideas Committee.

Ryan's lecture "Job Market: Sold Out," will be at 7 p.m. Tuesday in Union Forum Hall. Admission is free.

Ryan's motivational lecture is intended to teach students how to succeed in the job market.

When he isn't featured as a speaker at colleges and business organizations, Ryan works in a successful consulting firm. He has also been featured on every major television network.

"A consulting company helps the personnel set the criteria for employing people for positions. For example, he consulted Vans Shoes," said Karen Schlabach, chairwoman of the UPC Issues and Ideas committee.

Ryan will address the criteria he sets for employers in areas such as résumé writing, interview skill and job performance.

"Since he's setting the standard for what employees are looking for, it would be wise for students to come. He will tell us how to achieve those standards, suggested by consulting firms like his, that employers follow," Pollard said.

Even students graduating this spring can benefit from Ryan's advice.

"His advice will always apply. It will never be expired," Schlabach said.

Ryan knows the ups and downs faced in the business world.

"He's worked for himself his whole life. He went from a millionaire to nothing, rags to riches, to rags and now, to riches. He'll be able to identify with students," Pollard said.

At 18, he started his first business as a door-to-door salesman. By age 25, he was the president of his own multi-million dollar apparel company. At age 29, he lost his business, his marriage and all of his money.

He sold sweat shirts off of a borrowed card table at flea markets, and at one time resorted to sleeping in his truck.

"He still believed in his goals even with this extreme set back. He was able to rebuild himself and achieve that pinnacle of success," Pollard said.

Ryan authored a book titled, "One More Try: A Story of Entrepreneurial Passion." It reveals the bad things that go along with success.

Schlabach and Pollard said they didn't know if the book would be available for purchase in Manhattan.

A question and answer session will follow the lecture.

Classified employees lobby Graves, legislators for support to increase leave benefits, salaries

DANEDRI THOMPSON
staff reporter

The Classified Senate tried to gain legislative support for items including leave benefits and salary increases when its representatives met with state legislators in Topeka last week.

Classified employees discussed work-related concerns in appointments with Gov. Bill Graves, as well as members of the House Appropriations and Senate Ways and Means Committees.

In order for classified employees to attend what the Kansas Board of Regent Universities deemed "Legislative Information Day," they were asked to take a day of authorized vacation leave.

Although many classified employees were unable to visit the Statehouse, they wrote letters explaining the value of increased salaries and retirement options. The letters were hand delivered to the legislators by classified employee senators.

Classified employee senators also delivered a positions paper written in November by classified senate members from regents institutions. The paper outlined specific needs and concerns of the group.

In the paper, the group requested a comprehensive pay that would reflect the rising costs of living. The Senate also asked for a job-rate study.

Many employees expressed concerns about health care benefits and retirement. They asked for the option to contribute to a defined retirement or benefit plan and for the legislature to repeal the position reduction which replaces only 75 percent of the positions vacated by retirement.

The Senate requested the legislature to re-evaluate worker's compensation. According to the positions paper, current benefits cause low employee morale and loss of productivity.

The paper also highlighted employees' positions on sick leave and retention of quality employees.

RESOLUTION

The resolutions also support the recommendations of the Campus Awareness Makes for Protections and Ultimate Safety Task Force.

The recommendations outline ways to improve campus security including expanded campus police jurisdiction and increased funding for security.

The resolutions also support the continuation of state property taxes. The student group will caution legislators that cuts should not be made without ensuring monetary support for higher education, according to the resolution.

Theater entices Moore residents for opening night

REBECCA AISTRUP
staff reporter

Residents of the third floor of Moore Hall took a road trip this weekend to see a 20-year-old movie back in the theaters.

Eleven students attended the movie "Star Wars: A New Hope," Friday night at the Glenwood 4 Theater, Overland Park.

"We wanted to go to a movie theater with a big screen to get the full effect of special effects and sound," Heather Buckley, freshman in pre-health, said.

"The theater held 800 people and tickets were $4.50 for adults. A friend of ours from Paola was able to get tickets for the 10 p.m. show that was sold out," Brett Haffener, sophomore in computer engineering, said.

The movie was an enhanced version of the original "Star Wars" movie.

"They added a few extra scenes," Haffener said. "One scene with Jabba the Hutt I didn't feel was very realistic."

Some students were seeing the movie in a theater for the first time.

"I would go see it again. The special effects were pretty impressive. The whole experience of seeing the movie in a theater was out of this world," Haffener said.

Hal Taylor, junior in pre-health, agreed.

"I believe they have the biggest screen and the best sound in Kansas. I had never seen a "Star Wars" movie in the theater," Taylor said. "I think that there is a whole new generation that has not experienced it, either. I thought it was really cool to see it on the big screen. The added special effects were cool."

Movie theaters across Kansas sold out of tickets on opening night.

"There was a lot of new scenes, and it was definitely worth the money," Kirby Kinsch, sophomore in anthropology, said.

Re-release causes stir at box office, excitement for fans

BENJAMIN YODER
staff reporter

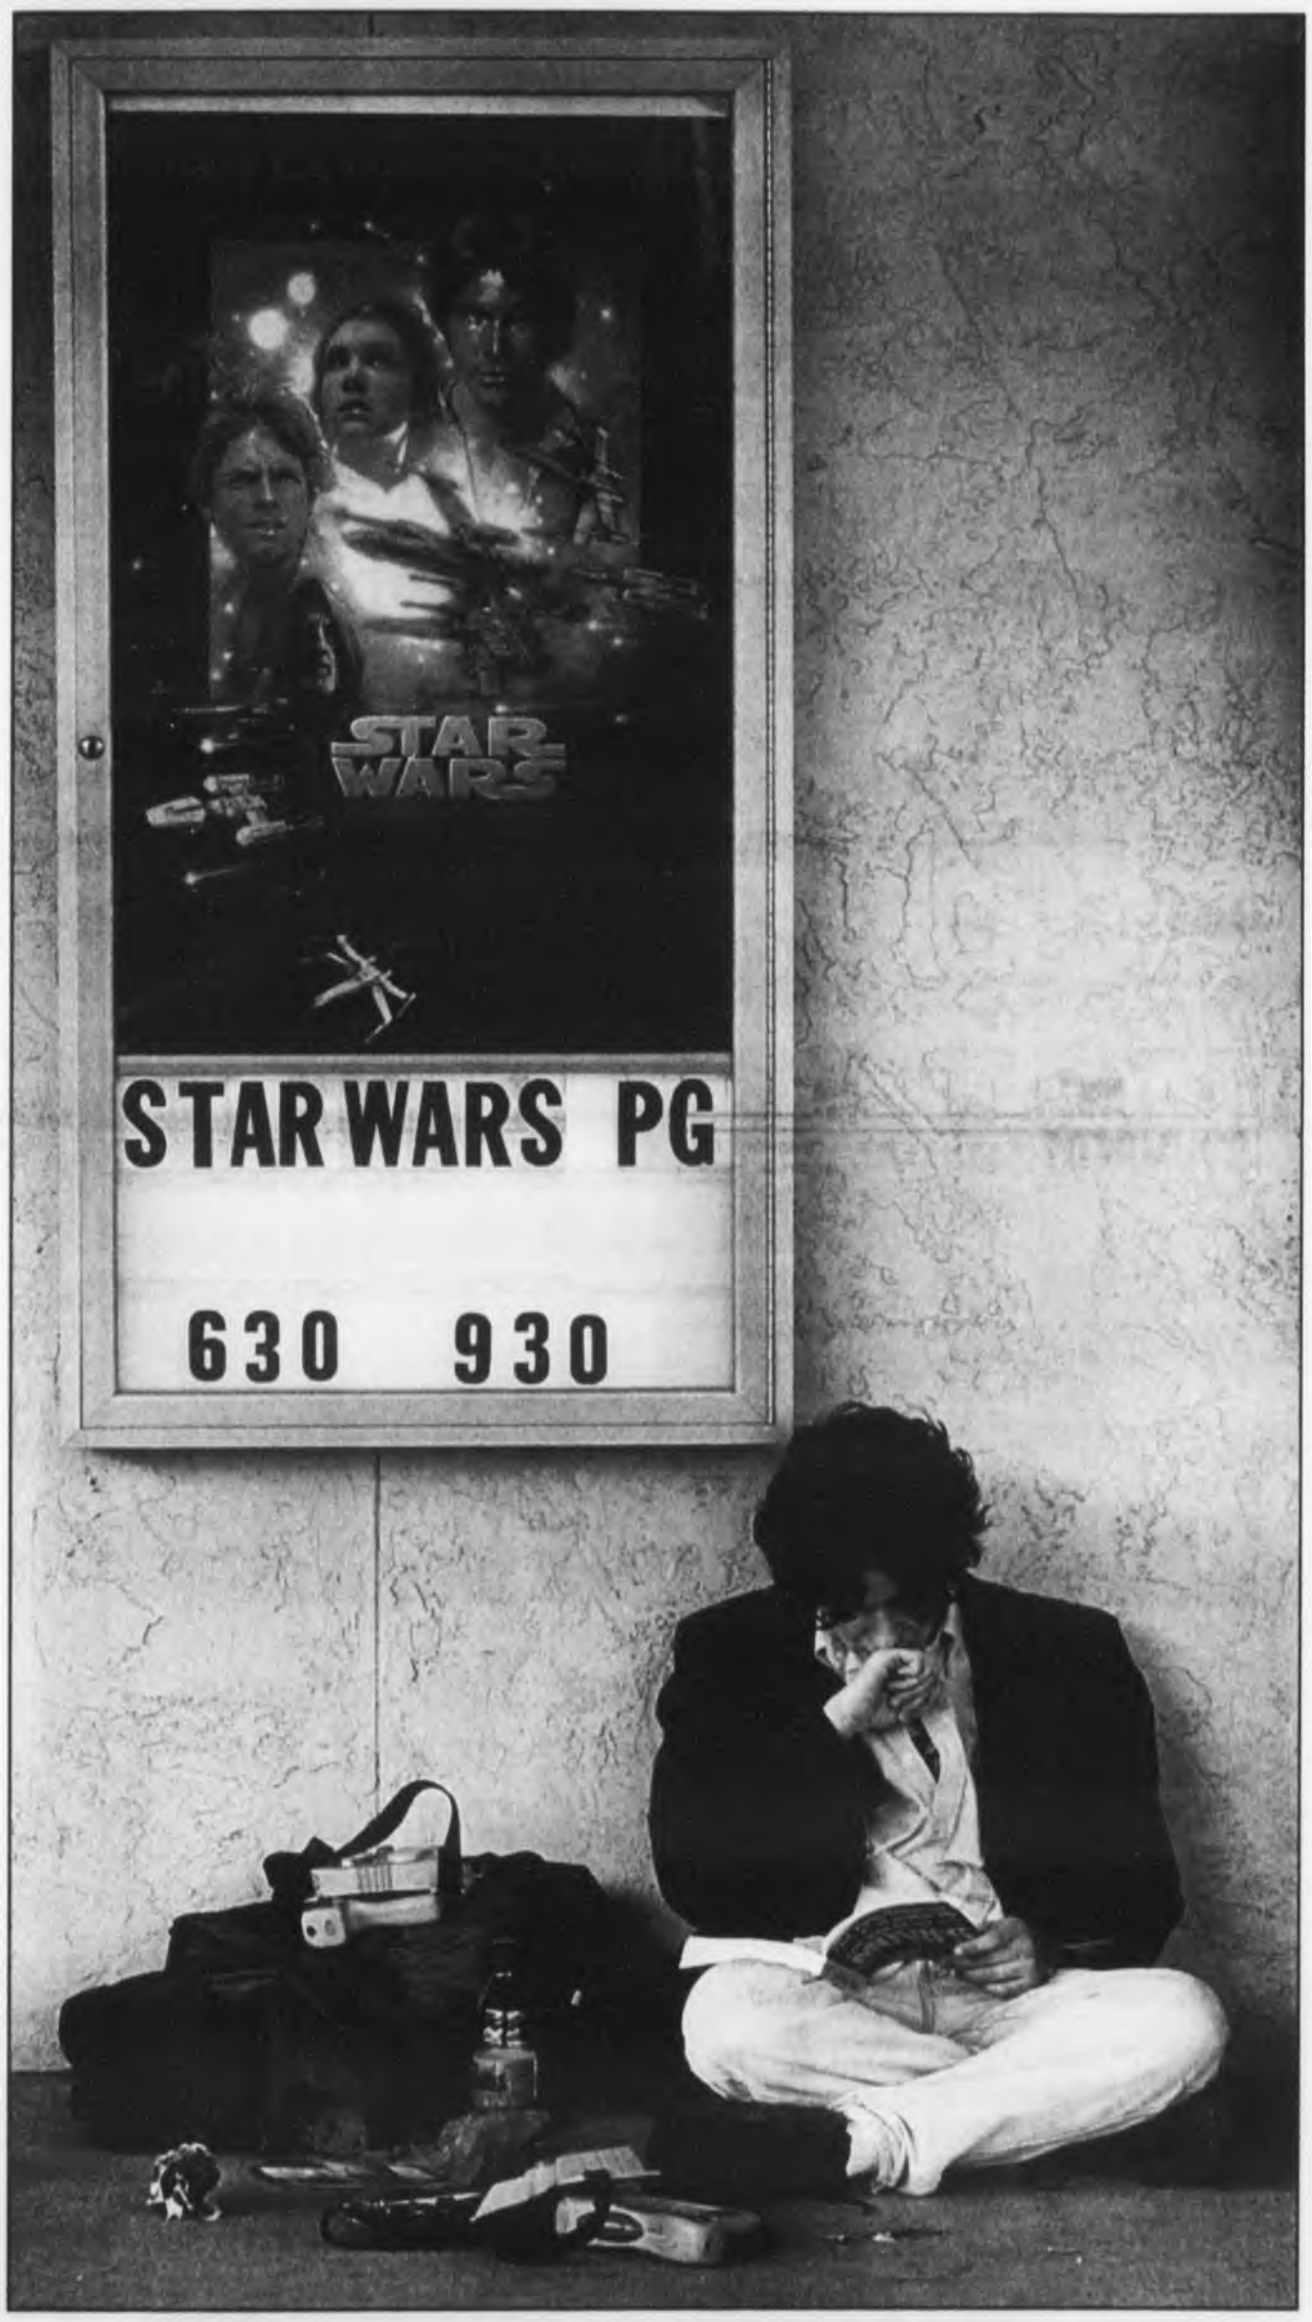
Unless you've been in a galaxy far, far away, you know that "Star Wars: A New Hope," George Lucas' classic science fiction movie, opened this weekend.

The re-release of the movie has created excitement in Manhattan and across the nation.

"I remember seeing it three times when I was a kid," Matt Miller, graduate student in chemistry, said. "It's one of my first memories."

Miller said he and his father stayed in the theater for the late show because they enjoyed the movie so much when it first came out.

Rich Smith, manager of Seth Child Cinema, said he expected people to show up at the theater hours before tickets went on sale.



"It's insane," Smith said. "It'll be bigger than anything we've seen."

To accommodate the crowds, the theater showed the movie in two auditoriums, adding an extra 300 seats.

Smith said he has hired more people to work in concessions and ticket sales to help handle the large crowds. He increased security opening weekend with employees walking the parking lot every 15 minutes during the movies.

"It's finally out, and I'm part of it," Smith said. "It's going to be

New scenes, improved technology help 'Star Wars' thrill audiences of all ages

CYNTHIA NEILL
staff reporter

Put down your light sabers and head to the theater, because "Star Wars: A New Hope" has finally hit Manhattan, and it has taken over like a squad of Storm Troopers.

Movie Review

Several new scenes have been added to the original film. One of these included some "Jurassic Park"-like creatures. Movie-makers actually used the same technology from "Jurassic Park" to make the alien creatures of "Star Wars" come alive. But you'll have to see for yourself what they were doing in that galaxy far, far away.

The special effects were also different in this special edition.

Technology has certainly improved in the past 20 years, and it was good to see this classic brought up to date. The laser scenes were more realistic. Overall, the film had a much sharper look to it.

Seth Child Cinema used Sony Digital Dynamic Sound, a new technology that allowed for a bigger, sharper sound.

The sound in this film was incredible. Seeing it in the theater probably had a great deal to do with the sound quality, but the sound seems to have improved at the same pace as the visual effects. At times it felt as though the battles were taking place right there in the front row of the theater.

Unfortunately, this incredible sound did cause a slight problem. "Star Wars" ran in adjoining theaters, but apparently start times were about a minute apart. The problem did seem to correct itself, though, as the audience was drawn into the movie.

The audience was in awe throughout the show. Children who had never had a chance to see "Star Wars" on the big screen crowded the front rows of the theater. There were also many adults in the audience, and most of them were as excited as the younger viewers.

"Star Wars" is showing at Seth Child Cinemas. The re-release of "The Empire Strikes Back" will be here Feb. 21 and "Return of the Jedi" opens March 7. May the force be with you.

CLOSING OUT the 1997 K-State Jazz Festival, members of the Count Basie Orchestra perform Saturday night at McCain Auditorium.

ALL JAZZED UP

'Big' musical events add spice to K-State Jazz Festival

REVIEWS BY RUSSELL FORTMEYER • PHOTOS BY BRANDON WHITE

THE NEW YORK VOICES sing a number with the Count Basie Orchestra Saturday night at McCain Auditorium.

Everything about Saturday night's Count Basie Orchestra concert was big.

There were more students, more performers and a concert that would not stop outdoing itself.

Back at the K-State Jazz Festival — or what could easily be called Basiefest '97 — for the second year in a row, the legendary swing band brought some welcome new friends along, the New York Voices.

The Voices, a vocal jazz quartet featuring Peter Eldridge, Lauren Kinhan (in a fabulous purple dress), Darmon Meader and Kim Nazarian, wowed the audience in the second act with its punchy scat singing and lushly instrumental voices.

If anything, the quartet's refreshing, mile-a-minute renditions of some old Lambert, Hendricks and Ross tunes ("Cottontail" and "Farmer's Market") added a delightful wit to the evening.

Particularly, the a cappella performance of "Farmer's Market" was pure glorious absurdity with its talk of beans.

Kinhan's bittersweet rendition of Gershwin's "Summertime" was perhaps the most beautiful moment of the show. Her pure, wailing cries vividly evoked the song's down circumstantial qualities and just for a minute you forgot you were in Kansas.

If the Voices were a reminder of anything, it was Ella Fitzgerald's masterful scat singing (Meader told the audience Fitzgerald has had more effect on the Voices' musical style than anyone else).

Members of the Voices began their part of the show with a salute to Fitzgerald called "Lady Be Good," featuring Meader's outta-sight scat, but this lady sounded quite different as the Voices interjected some mini-tributes to Fitzgerald's signature songs.

And how appropriate, because the concert was a celebration of the First Lady of Song (Feb. 1 was Ella Fitzgerald Day in Kansas, after all).

The Basie band didn't do much to disappoint the nearly sold-out audience either.

The band has seemed to discover a new talent with the alto saxophone giddiness that is Brad Leali. He's only been with the band almost two years (he played K-State last year, too). Almost every song in the evening's diverse repertoire was marked with some wonderful Leali rift.

"Easy Livin'" featured Leali in the whole number, giving him every opportunity to tweak his way through the relaxed swing of the tune.

Leali's solo prompted some comments from Grover Mitchell, the conductor and well-deserved father of the band.

"We got to start paying that boy," Mitchell said. "We'll have to put him on salary."

PERFORMANCES HIGHLIGHT PEOPLE'S EXPERIENCES

Saturday's K-State Jazz Festival was blessed with two Kansas rarities: good weather and fabulous music.

The campus buzzed with music from McCain Auditorium to the K-State Student Union with an almost continuous schedule of performances, not to mention some improvised student jams outside.

The 1 p.m. autograph session with the Count Basie Orchestra and the New York Voices in Union Courtyard drew a steady stream of fans, both students and families.

Scott Bradley, band director at Rock Creek High School, said the K-State festival differs from other festivals because it offers students more than an adjudicated performance and a clinic, but the chance to meet a group like the Count Basie Orchestra.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) If a project or a relationship seems to require more effort than you planned, abandon ship. Trust that the best thing you can do for yourself is stay out of your own way. Don't waste your time and energy pursuing pipe dreams when your attention is needed and appreciated elsewhere. Others may not be ready for your message and it's not your responsibility to make them ready.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Take advantage of an unplanned mental sabbatical to transfer your time and energy to those tugging at your intellectual shirttail. Others hungry for your insight will be trying on your skin as quickly as you shed it. Consolidate old philosophies with a series of unlikely influences for a potent internal transformation brewing.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Be especially conscious of the weight of your influence in family matters. Don't let your disappointment in un-met expectations keep you at a distance from those who need you most. Seek solidarity and cooperation among colleagues and you will surface as a natural leader, but don't force it.

TAURUS (April 20- May 20) Emphasize your modesty if you want to avoid the hazards of others' paranoia, but don't internalize the venting of neighboring karmic endeavors. Focus on stabilizing a foundation for the development of a long-awaited legitimate medium for your creativity.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Seem like a bad time for a spiritual enema? Mark your calendar for a roll in the hay with your conscience. You can't outrun yourself, because no matter where you go, you'll be there when you get there.

Take refuge in friends and just observe your inner wiring for a while. Don't enlist in the services, propose, take any oaths, switch majors, convert, drop out, sell CDs or make any other big decisions for a while.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Bask in the artificial glow of the spotlight, but don't take it too personally. You have an opportunity to get some exposure, but this too shall pass. Be leery of those around you who don't take you seriously and will exploit your passion as novelty.

LEO (July 23- Aug. 22) Wind up your vocal chords and prepare to be the verbal equivalent of the Energizer Bunny. You have a very deliberate message that will have to be weeded out later, but for now, don't wait for a translator, just start talking until someone starts listening. Avoid a gamble of or relating to love, money and foremost, situations where the two are intertwined.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Maintain an open frequency to those around you. Neglecting an unwanted proposal or request may be interpreted as compliance. Practice your rejection skills to dodge manipulation on people with good intentions but graceless technique or try pissing on your territory again. Take the risk of accessing new allies as emotional resources.

LIBRA (Sept. 23- Oct. 22) Follow your gut and put aside pride and judgment to be emotionally accommodating. Orbit an uncalculated turn of events with a gentle discretion. Retreat if you can to digest and renegotiate your role without neglecting your own agenda. You will need to eat more green leafy things or double up on vitamins for a while. Turn inward for solutions.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) Convert the couch, the road or the Internet into a shrine but search for the solace and inspiration in everything. Don't stretch yourself out, but allow every aspect of your life to blend together until an underlying theme becomes evident. Allow yourself to cling to superficial support for now, but pay close attention to the quietest of inner voices.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Pay attention to your presentation. Victory depends on how you package your demands, not on what your demands actually are. If your academic plate is full, don't go back for seconds. Give a lover some breathing space and wear more green — it will relax you and disarm potential foes.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22- Jan. 19) Feeling suicidal? Put down the gun — you're just bored. Embrace all things unfamiliar. The more drastic the better. Abandon your stale routines and don't be afraid to level with the anchors in your life, not just for the sake of self-improvement, but you may get laid in the process. Complacency will no longer insulate your pain. Your discontent has a lot to tell you.

BASIE

To that, Leali replied, "I agree." Which prompted Mitchell's retort, "Don't talk too much."

Such was the comfortable mood of the evening — evidence that the Basie band is starting to feel at home in the Little Apple.

The band rolled through some other favorites, such as the de rigueur regional number "Kansas City," with the great vocals of Basie standby Chris Murrell.

The festival's outstanding musician, Nick Cray of Blue Valley High School, performed his wailing tenor sax with the band on the number "On the Road to K-State." If Cray was nervous — as he attested — it didn't show in his well-received solos. But Chris Murrell had to literally push him on stage for a second bow.

Similar to last year's concert, the evening slowly built itself up toward the finale of the Basie classic "1 O'clock Jump." The K-State Concert Jazz Ensemble joined the Basie band on what has become a musical duel of sorts — what with the trumpet lines attempting to out dazzle each other.

The Voices and Murrell reappeared on stage to add their two-cents worth of scat to the mix, which was somehow kept in order by a frantically busy Dennis Wilson.

The perfect jumble of sounds synergetically brought the show to a close and the audience to its feet.

The show's success will be hard to top when February 1998 rolls around, but like the improvisational musical dialogues of the Basie band, the future is very unpredictable.

Stephen Christian and Matt Deffner, both eighth-grade friends from Maize Intermediate, came with their junior-high jazz band for the first time this year.

"I think it's better than staying in bed all day," Deffner said, jokingly.

Both Christian and Deffner said they wanted to pursue music professionally, but they hesitate to say whether or not they would want to join the Basie band.

"I don't know if we're that good," Deffner said. "If I had the chance (to join Basie), I probably would."

Debbie Bazzelle, a Wichita resident, came to the festival to see her son play with the Maize Intermediate Jazz Band and, especially, to see the Basie concert.

"I don't know very much about jazz," Bazzelle said. "I'm learning, too, today."

Bazzelle said she thought the festival was going great and that the kids were enjoying themselves.

"The kids enjoy it because it's a lot different from your regular concert," she said. "It takes a little extra practice and school time. They've practiced long and hard for this."

The highlight of the session, however, were performances by the K-State Jazz Trombone Choir and the United Black Voices.

UBV, which sang six numbers, attracted an audience of nearly 40 people stacked up throughout the Union's three floors overlooking the courtyard.

This delayed the festival's historical lecture in All Faiths Chapel, moderated by Dennis Wilson, director of jazz studies and the festival, about Ella Fitzgerald, to whom the day was dedicated.

A small crowd eventually gathered to hear Basie members Butch Miles, Johnny Williams and Bill Hughes discuss their memories of performing with Fitzgerald.

here for a while."

Area businesses also caught "Star Wars" fever. KMKF-FM 101.5, Wal-Mart and Raoul's Escondido participated in promotion of the movie.

K-Rock provided movie passes for the midnight matinee the week before release. They also broadcasted on location two hours before the midnight show.

K-Rock had trivia contests and giveaways in conjunction with the release. Wal-Mart donated "Star Wars" action figures, a hat and a shirt for the K-Rock giveaway.

Raoul's Escondido will have a daily drawing to give away two movie passes throughout the month of February. They will also provide a free appetizer Mondays through Thursdays this month with a minimum purchase of $5 for those who bring in their ticket stubs.

"Empire Strikes Back," the sequel to "Star Wars," will be released Feb. 21. "Return of the Jedi," the final installment in the trilogy, will follow on March 7.

the year, only sunk two of her eight attempts. Cat freshmen Angie Finkes and forward Nicky Ramage helped hold Bonds, who averages 12 points and 10 rebounds, to three boards and eight points.

"Bonds is the foundation of their team," Patterson said. "Each time she caught the ball, she had at least four hands in her face."

Ramage posted a career-high 10 points and eight rebounds against the Tigers.

"I'm getting my nerve up now, finally," Ramage said. "I was timid coming in, but I'm finally starting to get comfortable with it now."

Up 34-18 at the half, the Cats led off with another Decker three and dominated the second half. Mizzou shot a low 25 percent from the field and Bonds' only points in the second half were free throws.

The end of the game saw sister team members Sunny Jacobson and guard Brit Jacobson share the court for the first time. Sunny Jacobson, a freshman guard, and Amy Short, a freshman forward, spent 3:25 on the court.

"I don't think there's any better feeling than to see your entire squad get in the game," Patterson said. "To have that opportunity at home during a TV game, if you could wish anything for your young people, it would be that."

Brit joined Decker, Ramage and Andria Jones in contributing double-digit point numbers. Decker said the game was a real turning point for the team.

"We know what lies ahead of us in the season and in the conference, and this was the first step in terms of getting the ball rolling for the rest of the season," Decker said.

Bietau said. "She came in off her serve about 60 percent of the time today, she was much more aggressive."

At No. 4 singles, Chris Schulte struggled through the first set, winning the tight set 7-5. Schulte turned things around in the second and won the set 6-1 against Holly Bluml.

"Chris became very defensive in her match, that was evident today," Bietau said. "She didn't do much to take command in that first set, but she got things turned around."

At No. 3 singles, junior Karen Nicholson posted a 6-1, 6-0 win against Jodi Fougeron. During the week leading up to the match, it was uncertain as to whether Nicholson would even play. Since the season opener against Northwestern, Nicholson has been battling a bone chip in her toe. Last Thursday, Nicholson told Bietau she would be able to play.

Bietau said he could definitely see a change in play from Nicholson's first match against Northwestern.

"Her foot is hurting her, but two things have changed since last week," Bietau said. "One, she has had a week to recover and two, she just handled it much better this weekend. Her attitude changed, she really didn't think about the injury on the court."

The Cats swept all three doubles matches from the Bluejays. Dorodnova and Piliptchak skunked Miller and Maria Kermath 8-0, while Schulte and Butt posted a 8-3 win over Melissa Rosenthal and Rougeron.

At No. 3 doubles, Nicholson teamed up with sophomore Laura Williamson to serve up a narrow win 8-6 against Jeanne Daker and Jeanne Raynot.

"Overall, I am happy with how things turned out this weekend," Bietau said. "These were clearly matches that we had something to lose — ones that would affect us down the road. It was important that we got these two wins."

parking garage slated for construction around the same time.

John Lambert, director of public safety, said the parking council recommends the site of the parking garage be decided before construction begins.

Lambert said this would help consultants for the project identify where possible trouble spots could arise.

A steering committee formed for the Anderson project listed tentative dates for five informative meetings in its newsletter.

The meetings are set up to help communicate the project's objectives and agenda to the public.

KTA considers ways to relieve periodic traffic congestion

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The Kansas Turnpike Authority is considering ways to relieve periodic congestion on the turnpike between Topeka and Kansas City, but any solution is at least several years off.

"We are approaching the capacity of a four-lane facility that has a high level of service," E. Dean Carlson, Kansas secretary of transportation, said Friday. Carlson is a member of the turnpike authority.

Traffic is especially heavy when Topeka's Heartland Park race track is host to national events and when the University of Kansas has home football games.

KTA members have talked informally about options that include widening the existing road or providing an alternate road, Carlson said. An alternate road could be either new construction or could follow an existing route, he said.

Carlson emphasized there is no timetable for a decision.

"We have to embark on some good analysis before we talk about time," he said.

Sen. Ben Vidricksen, R-Salina, chairman of the Senate Transportation and Tourism Committee and a member of the KTA, said during a committee meeting on Thursday that the KTA was considering construction of a new four-lane road.

"We realize we're operating close to capacity on the turnpike," Vidricksen said. "And we realize that six-laning the present turnpike probably would be so expensive, acquiring right-of-way and all, that it wouldn't be feasible. A new four-lane roadway probably would be cheaper."

Vidricksen said turnpike authority officials expect traffic volume on the toll road to increase substantially when the Oz theme park in western Wyandotte County, outside of Kansas City, Kan., opens in about 2000.

At the University of Georgia, 90 percent of the roughly 2,800 Georgia residents in the freshmen class aren't paying a dime for college. The same is true for 96 percent at Georgia Tech, which has a total enrollment of about 13,000 students.

No matter what their grades, students can get the same deal at technical schools. And those with a B average who attend private schools in Georgia can get at least $3,000 a year.

Once they are in, they have to keep a B average or lose the money.

"This is an incentive for them to work," Miller said.

The president's plan, while tied to grades, is less ambitious.

Instead of a four-year ride, Clinton's program would offer a $1,500 tax credit to students who keep a B average plus a $10,000 tax deduction for the first two years. Families who make more than $100,000 wouldn't be eligible; Georgia's program has no salary cap.

There are second chances.

Students who lose their B average lose their money, but can get it back after a year if they bring their grades up. And students who enter college with high school grades below a B average can get a HOPE scholarship if they earn at least a B average the first year.

Miller won the governor's office in 1990 with a campaign based on using lottery proceeds for education.

By the time of his re-election in 1994, the HOPE scholarships had become so popular that they helped him overcome anger among whites over a failed bid to remove the Confederate battle emblem from the state flag.

Since 1993, $333.7 million in lottery money has been given to almost 239,000 college students. This year, $159 million was allocated to the program and the governor hopes to spend $167 million in 1998.

The program got off to a rocky start when parents complained that the rules were confusing and unfair, and that a B from one high school would have been a C elsewhere. That was solved by a statewide grading standard.

The scholarship program has boosted college enrollment in Georgia by 3.4 percent since 1993. And technical school enrollment is up 24 percent.

Blues artist performs with emotion, style

Sample Catfish. For a sample of Catfish Keith's music, contact David Kamerer at 532-7064.

YVONNE PEARSON
staff reporter

Catfish Keith walked casually onto the small stage Friday night wearing a baggy suit complete with brim hat. He seemed to have no worries despite the fact he arrived at the Manhattan Center for the Arts just five minutes prior to his performance, due to car problems.

Review

He tuned his steel guitar, adjusted the microphones and tapped his foot for a quick sound check. He did all this with a smile that made his eyes squint almost shut. He then welcomed the full house and began his performance.

What a performance it was. Catfish mesmerized the audience with his presence. His deep, smooth laid-back voice along with his contagious foot-stomping and awesome guitar techniques were well appreciated by the audience.

"He does what four people do, but with emotion. It was like he had four of five instruments going all at once. That's why it sounded so cool," Jeremy Tomlinson, fifth-year senior in mathematics, said.

Catfish would close his eyes as if he was in another world, looking and living in that song. His swaying became part of his music. He stomped his foot, played guitar and sang sometimes with a howl, yet sometimes with so much grace.

Not only does he live the blues, it could be said he is the blues.

Catfish sang lyrics inspired by old-time blues artists, whom he referred to as cats. He performed songs by Son House, Barbecue Bob, Blind Willy Johnson, John Lee Hooker and more. He also played some originals.

Between every song, he told a story of how that song came to him. His storytelling won the crowd over.

He proved himself to be a great entertainer as well as a brilliant blues performer.

"He's a great musician and a great entertainer too. To me, that makes the difference," Aimee Hammers, junior in interior design, said.

Vampire rapist gets life sentence for smoking marijuana in prison

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SHARPES, Fla. — John Crutchley, the so-called vampire rapist, got life in prison Friday for smoking marijuana on the night before he was released from prison after serving an 11-year term.

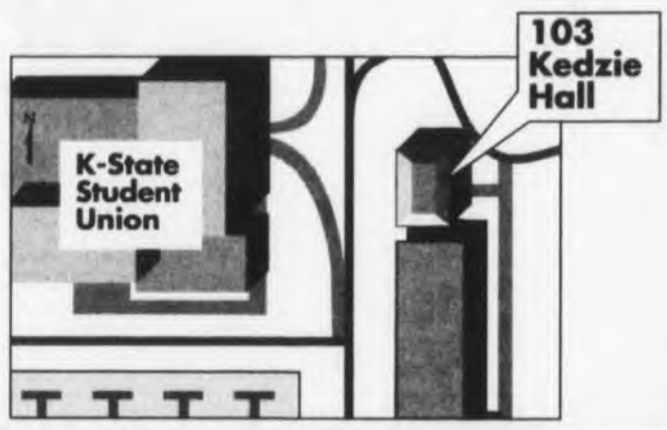
Authorities say Crutchley, 49, tested positive for the drug on the day he was freed last August to begin serving 50 years probation. He had served 11 years for kidnapping and raping a teenage hitchhiker in 1985.

Crutchley told Judge Tonya Rainwater on Friday that he was relaxing in his cell on the night before his release when a bunch of inmates visited him.

"They tried to hand me what looked like a marijuana joint but I had no desire," he testified.

Crutchley told the judge the men blew smoke in his face.

Earlier in the week, prosecutors played a tape of Crutchley telling a corrections inspector that he had smoked marijuana because he was nervous about his impending freedom and thought the drug would relax him.



Crutchley later said he only confessed to smoking marijuana to avoid implicating other inmates.

A former cellmate testified that if Crutchley is returned to prison, he'll be killed by inmates who got into trouble because of the investigation into whether he smoked pot.

Crutchley's victim almost died when he drained nearly half her blood and drank it over a 22-hour period. The 19-year-old woman survived by crawling out his bathroom window when he left her alone.

REC REPORT

February 1997

This is a Paid Advertisement

Tune in to our full page ad on the 1st day of each month for program information and monthly calendar of Recreational Services events!

WHO'S who at the REC

Tim Gust, senior in computer information sciences, management information systems and finance, has been a lifeguard at the Rec for four years. Tim is from Miami, FL, and transferred to K-State after attending Coffeyville Community College. He says his job allows him to be more familiar with the students and faculty of K-State and helps him out financially. Along with being a head guard, Tim's activities include aqua aerobics instructor, cheerleader, ROTC, the National Guard, Entrepreneurs Club, Society for Advancement of Management and a member of the Delta Sigma Phi fraternity. Tim plans on graduating in May 1998 with a triple major and work in the computer field.

Beth Hochberg began working at the Rec almost two years ago in the summer of 1995 as a weight room supervisor. Prior to her Rec days, Beth enjoyed working out daily so she decided to get her personal training certificate. This enabled her to get a job and utilize her ambition and skills. What Beth enjoys most about her job at the Rec is applying the information she has learned in class at work, keeping her interests fresh in her mind. Beth is a senior, graduating in May 1997 in pre-medicine/chemistry, with a minor in music. Currently, Beth is applying to Osteopathic medical school on the east coast, hoping to be closer to her hometown of Washington, D.C. Before she heads off to medical school, Beth will be studying in England for a year.

my FAVORITE workout

Graduate student in accounting, Justin Thacker can be found lifting weights at the Rec five to six times a week. Justin was introduced to progressive resistance training by a former roommate about four years ago. Since then the roommate has married but, because Justin feels he is able to accomplish more alone, he continues to workout. For Justin, progressive resistance training is a tool for maintaining a healthy life and body. Since his workout is more anaerobic, working his chest and triceps the most, Justin also runs three miles, twice a week for an aerobic workout. He will be graduating in May 1997 and said that by working out he feels better about himself and more self-confident.

You Asked It!

I know there are some complaints that it was too cold in the facility, but now it's too warm. This is a gym. After I do my warm-up, I feel too hot.

Sorry for the inconvenience; however, when we get changes in the weather, such as we've had this past month, it is difficult to keep the temperature in a building this size regulated. Right now, it is in its winter mode, and when the weather turns 60 degrees in a day or two, it takes the system a while to adjust. Thank you!

Nutrition Notes & Fitness Facts

Lately there has been some debate on whether it is better to eat a high carbohydrate diet or a diet high in protein. A diet high in carbohydrates may let you eat more because carbohydrates are low in calories, high in fiber and they are bulky. This allows the body to feel full before you eat too much. While this may be true, others believe that a large amount of carbohydrates leads to an increased insulin secretion. High levels of insulin cause the body to store more fat. The solution may be to eat a larger amount of low fat protein and less carbohydrates.

Everyone is unique in the way that their body metabolizes food. What works for some people may not necessarily work for you. There may not be a clear cut answer to whether proteins or carbs are better for you, but we do know that weight loss can only occur if you expend more calories than you consume. This happens through aerobic exercise. In order to lose weight, 20-60 minutes of continuous exercise (brisk walking, jogging, running, biking, swimming, stair climbing, stair stepping or cross country skiing) 3-5 days a week will allow the body to burn calories that may otherwise be stored as fat.

Clinton plans to give speech for new term

▶ When and where? President Clinton's State of the Union address will be broadcast live at 8 p.m. by the major television networks, ABC, NBC, CBS and Fox, and the leading cable news outlets, CNN and C-SPAN, as well as many PBS stations.

▶ STATE OF THE UNION address marred with mistakes year after year.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Strange things happen when President Clinton goes to Congress: The wrong speech winds up in the TelePrompTer. The president drones on for 81 minutes, testing listeners' patience. He issues a hollow veto threat.

And, to hear the analysts tell it, he's only had one good line in his previous State of the Union addresses.

Tonight, Clinton will ride up to Capitol Hill in a black limousine to deliver his fourth State of the Union address before a joint session of the House and Senate.

"Judging by the previous ones, it's just not going to be memorable or terribly important," said University of Virginia political scientist Larry Sabato.

"In his entire four years in office," Sabato said, "he has only uttered one phrase that will be historically memorable: 'The era of big government is over.'"

That was in 1996 as Clinton opened the campaign year.

After four years, there is a record of victories and defeats.

SHAC considers moving Lafene to Sunset Avenue

▶ ALL OF LAFENE'S SERVICES might relocate to Mercy.

CYNTHIA NEILL
staff reporter

The Student Health Advisory Committee is still considering the possibility of moving Lafene Health Center to space at Mercy Health Center on Sunset Avenue.

"The move is still in the discussing stages," said Lannie Zweimiller, director of Lafene.

The two hospitals in Manhattan, the former Saint Mary and Memorial Hospitals, merged in July 1996. The merger freed up space at Mercy Health Center on Sunset Avenue. Architects were called in to analyze and suggest uses for the space. The results of this study are not yet available.

If the space is rented to Lafene, a move could occur as early as next fall. All of Lafene's services would be moved, and the existing building would most likely be converted to classroom space.

Zweimiller said he is in favor of the move.

"The move would solve Lafene's access problem and allow us to upgrade services," he said. "It is a wonderful opportunity for students."

Students are encouraged to voice their opinions on the possible move. Questions and concerns can be addressed to Student Senate, the Student Health Advisory Committee or Zweimiller.

SHAC is also discussing changes in health insurance structure due to legislation for health-care reform.

The Health Insurance and Portability and Accountability Act of 1996, or Kennedy Kassebaum Law, is scheduled to Graduation deadline nears; applications due by Friday

▶ STUDENTS CANNOT GRADUATE without needed paperwork.

BRANDON ROMBERGER
staff writer

A stack of graduation applications two feet high sits on the desk of Diane Barker, Transcripts Specialist for the College of Arts and Sciences. By 5 p.m. Friday, the deadline for submission of graduation applications, it will be much higher.

This may seem too early in the semester to think about graduation, but Barker said it is important to get applications in on time.

"The sheer number of applications makes it so the date needs to set early," she said.

The combination of the May and July applications make it so there is no time to waste. If a student wants to graduate in July they must fill out an application by May.

Students should pick up their application forms in the office of the dean of their major. The applications are self-explanatory, but there are certain areas where students have had problems in the past, Barker said.

She said a lot of students think if they apply once and don't graduate it carries over.

Students who have transfer hours should begin that process right away if their graduation is pending.

A NEW AGE DAWNS

Commonly referred to as the crown jewel of Troy Design Manufacturing, the first dedicated alternate-fuel vehicle plant opened in Manhattan this past May, introducing the world to a new age of automotive technology.

The 60,000 square-foot facility, owned by Troy Design Manufacturing of Detroit and operated by Transportation Design Manufacturing, is expected to produce close to 4,000 alternate-fuel vehicles by the end of 1997.

With numbers increasing daily, converted Ford Contours line the parking lot, awaiting shipment to various nationwide destinations, while others coast through the assembly line with protective yellow bumper coverings.

The plant has produced the Ford Contour and six prototype Ford F-150 and F-250 pick-up truck models, and will continue production of the trucks along with the Ford Taurus and Mercury Mystic in March or April.

"It's a manufacturing miracle," TDM General Manager Jim Hague said.

As the flow of Contours continues through the assembly line, newly appointed Production Manager Terry Tobolski stands holding a stop watch, noting the tempo of production. He said the assembly line operates in 25-minute increments to maintain the production average of 17 Contours a day.

"What we do is disassemble it, modify it, reassemble it and then send it out," Tobolski said.

This bi-fuel technology incorporated in the Contour is regarded by Tobolski as being environmentally safe and cost-effective. It is currently used by federal, state and city vehicles across the nation.

"This compressed natural gas cylinder here," Tobolski said, pointing out the tank being installed in the rear of a vehicle on the assembly line, "would equate to 4.3-liquid gallons. The difference between gasoline and compressed natural gas is that gasoline is about $1.24 a gallon, whereas compressed natural gas is about 64 cents a gallon. It gets as comparable gas mileage as gasoline."

The conversion process includes a series of 10 assembly-line stations. Once the Contour completes modification, a quality-control engineer test drives the vehicle, testing the cylinder's performance with the newly installed in-dash harness that allows the driver to switch between compressed natural gas or gasoline.

Quality Control Engineer Clint Salada accelerates a converted Contour to 40 miles per hour using compressed natural gas. After the half-mile test drive, he parks the car in the parking lot and documents observations and data in a performance log.

This particular Contour passed the test. Once the car is re-examined and checked for leaks, it will be ready for shipment. According to the bumper sticker, it will be shipped to Des Moines, Iowa.

"What we do is disassemble it, modify it, reassemble it and then send it out."
TERRY TOBOLSKI
TDM PRODUCTION MANAGER

The Contour is the first of several automobile models to be converted by TDM. By the end of March, Tobolski anticipates the arrival of the Ford F-150 and F-250 trucks, which, unlike the bi-fuel Contour, will be modified to operate solely on compressed natural gas.

"As we speak, we have at least a few hundred orders already," Tobolski said. "That number will increase as time goes on."

TDM also awaits the Ford Ranger, which will be the plant's first electric-powered vehicle.

"I'm not sure when that will start, but we're still looking at that program," Hague said.

Hague said TDM will expand the number of assembly lines to accommodate the demand for different types of alternate fuel vehicles.

"We're slowly ramping up," Hague said. "Where we started with only one assembly line, by the middle of April, we should have three or four assembly lines going.

"In our first calendar year, we're going to exceed 2,000 vehicles easily. We may be close to 3,000 vehicles by May of 1997."

Student plugs expired meters in protest of parking tickets

MATT SPURGIN
staff writer

One K-State student has been going through the metered lots on occasion with a handful of change, feeding the meters of those whose time has expired.

Richard Schnorenberg, senior in mechanical engineering, was feeding the meters about 1 p.m. Monday when a parking attendant saw him.

He said a parking attendant approached him as if he were attempting to physically restrain Schnorenberg.

When he asked the attendant if he was going to restrain him the attendant said no and backed off.

"I put a nickel in the meter, and he wrote the ticket anyway," Schnorenberg said.

"According to our employees, the gentleman was putting nickels in the meters where they were writing tickets," said Peggy Winkler, interim director of Parking Services.

Winkler said the employees had already started to write the ticket when Schnorenberg put the money in the parking meter.

She said the employee said he put his arm up as Schnorenberg approached and when Schnorenberg asked the employee if he was attempting to restrain him, the employee said no.

"We have no problem with him putting change in," Winkler said.

She said it is not against the rules to feed someone's meter, but if he were to put money in a meter where the car had already been ticketed, the owner would become upset about the ticket if he were to see time still on the meter.

Schnorenberg said he got the idea from a speech instructor a few years ago.

He said the instructor was late to class one day because he was in the parking lot feeding the meters for people.

"He urged the whole class to pick it up," Schnorenberg said.

He said this is his revenge against parking services.

He said he buys a parking permit, but it always seems like the parking attendants get him just as his time expired.

"I think I've paid over $200 in tickets in the past three of four years," Schnorenberg said.

▶ NATION AND WORLD

• WOMAN HOLDING CHILD KILLED IN DRIVE-BY SHOOTING.

WICHITA — A young woman was killed in a drive-by shooting during the weekend, hit as she sat on a living room couch with her 1-year-old child in her arms.

Another child, 3, was playing nearby on the floor when the mother, Brandy Martin, 20, was shot and killed Saturday night.

Wichita Police Lt. Ken Landwehr said someone in the street aimed a rifle at the front window of the home and fired three shots, with one of them striking Martin in the back.

• BOMBINGS BLAMED ON SCHEME TO SABOTAGE COURTS.

VALLEJO, Calif. — Bombings at a courthouse and bank were aimed at subverting a drug trial by disrupting the criminal justice system, police said Monday after arresting two of three suspects.

The third suspect, Kevin Lee Robinson, 29, of Vallejo, hired the two other men to try to prevent his upcoming trial on narcotics charges, Lt. Ron Jackson said. Because of prior convictions, he faced the possibility of life in prison under the state's three strikes law, Jackson said.

Robinson, who was considered armed and dangerous, was expected to surrender today, said agent Mike Morrissey of the Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms bureau in San Francisco.

Federal agents recovered 500 pounds of stolen dynamite, an amount that Police Chief Robert Nichelini said could easily have made the series of bombings catastrophic.

• RUSSIA, MONGOLIA SIGN MILITARY AGREEMENT.

MOSCOW — Russia and Mongolia signed a military cooperation agreement Monday and pledged to tighten business ties as well.

Russian Defense Minister Igor Rodionov called for true partnership relations in all spheres, including the military one, in the interest of the defense of our countries, the Interfax news agency reported.

A former Soviet satellite, Mongolia, had Russian troops stationed on its territory — mainly along the Chinese border — until 1993.

Mongolia threw off hard-line communism in 1990, but it was governed by former Communists until they were voted out last June.

• 2 TRAINS COLLIDE IN SOUTHERN EGYPT; 11 KILLED; 8 INJURED.

CAIRO, Egypt — A cargo train slammed into a passenger train Monday in southern Egypt, killing 11 people and injuring eight after a railway controller accidentally signaled the freight train onto the lone track.

The trains collided Monday morning 60 miles north of Aswan, a popular resort. All the casualties were Egyptians.

The passenger train was en route from the Mediterranean port of Alexandria to Aswan, 425 miles south of Cairo. It had slowed down at el-Radisiya, a mountainous area where rails are being repaired, when the cargo train rammed into the last carriage.

• AT LEAST 18 SOLDIERS REPORTED KILLED AS REBELS BATTLE ARMY.

BOGOTA, Colombia — Guerrillas fought helicopter-borne soldiers Monday on the third day of a fierce battle in mountains near the capital.

Some 400 rebels were caught up in the fighting, leading to speculation that the army had stumbled on the headquarters of the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia, known by its Spanish initials as FARC.

Guerrillas rarely gather in such large numbers unless they are planning a large attack.

About 400 overran a military base in the southern jungle on Aug. 30, killing 27 soldiers and capturing 60.

Escort service to restructure

JESSICA CULLISON
staff reporter

A restructuring of the campus escort service may be complete by the beginning of the fall 1997 semester.

Changes planned for the program include expanding services farther from campus, creating a 24-hour station in Farrell Library for the escorts, opening the opportunity to volunteer to all K-State students and expanding the budget.

Restructuring the escort service has been a vision of Student Body Vice President Aaron Otto's since the middle of this past semester. Concerns about the escort service included number of volunteers, proximity, response time, budget and equipment.

Otto said under the current plan only people who live in residence halls can volunteer because the escort service was started by the Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls. This limits the number of potential volunteers.

The volunteers are also stationed at the residence halls, which is on the edge of campus. Otto said when the escort service moves to Farrell Library response time would improve.

Farrell will be opening a new 24-hour study room in the summer or fall and agreed to give the escort service enough space to create a station with its communication facilities for the two escorts on duty at all times.

"They were very enthusiastic about it, and we couldn't have hoped for a more central location," Otto said.

When KSUARH created the escort service, K-State Telecommunications donated equipment, such as walkie-talkies, to the service. However, the escort service is unable to rotate or repair equipment because it has a small budget. Also, the service has no budget for advertising, which could increase the number of volunteers as well as the number of students using the service.

Otto said the plan to restructure the service includes putting the organization under its own board of directors including representatives from the K-State administration, KSUARH, Farrell Library and Student Governing Association. The escort service hopes to hire an organizer who will be in charge of recruiting, training and organizing the staff.

Otto said the escort service needs enough money so the new organizer could receive a salary and advertise and promote the service. There also needs to be enough money to repair and replace damaged or old equipment.

Otto said this was a huge road block because the escort services are not considered a campus organization. After registering to be an official organization, there is a required waiting period of one year before that group can receive any funding from SGA.

This expansion could not take place without money, Otto said, so the problem was taken to administrators. They agreed to help the escort service for one year until funds could be allocated by SGA.

"Everyone has been exceptional working on this, but it has taken a long time," he said.

Otto said he hopes the restructuring will eventually enable the escorts to increase the distance from which they

Trying to cope with the strains of married life or the trials of child rearing can sometimes be too much for active-duty soldiers. That's where the Family Advocacy Program at Fort Riley was developed

The Family Advocacy Program deals with two family issues: child abuse and domestic violence. The program deals with these issues through both prevention and treatment. The main focus of the program is to prevent the violence before it becomes a problem.

"The more information and education someone receives, the better the outlook will be for the family," said Santos Bonilla, Family Advocacy Program manager.

The Family Advocacy Program reaches individuals through prevention with a number of services. The program offers command, troop and community education programs on both child abuse and domestic violence. These programs include everything from safety education classes for parents and children, to premarital workshops for soldiers and their future spouses, Bonilla said.

Bonilla said the workshops are intended to prepare couples for the ups and downs of married life. In addition, stress management programs are in place to reduce work-related stresses for soldiers and their families. Also, for future dads, effective fathering programs teach parenting skills so they can become positive role models for their children.

Family advocacy also works as a safety net for families of soldiers who are away from home. If something goes wrong while soldiers are gone, their families can turn to the program for assistance.

"Ideally, family advocacy is here to support the soldier and his family so if he does have to go to war, he will have the security within himself to know that his family is safe. He can then go on to give 100 percent to his current mission," Bonilla said.

In total, there are 10 family advocacy sub-programs that include prevention, treatment and special events.

In April, which is Child Abuse Prevention Month, the program will offer workshops, will establish informational booths and will publish articles about preventing child abuse.

The program also benefits victims of abuse through treatment. To achieve this, the program works jointly with different social service centers. Through these centers the program provides basic necessities such as food and shelter as well as support and counseling services, said Diane Sanders, social services representative and family advocacy staff member.

The Family Advocacy Program has contracts with the Kansas Children Service League, the Child Development Center and the Crisis Center in both Manhattan and Junction City. By providing their services through multiple outlets, the program was able to reach more than 12,000 individuals last year, Bonilla said.

"I reach around 100 people a week either personally or with materials supplied by the Family Advocacy Program," said Mina Foster, parent/child advocate and social worker at the Crisis Center in Junction City.

In total, the Family Advocacy Program provides an array of services to active duty soldiers and their families both at Fort Riley and in the surrounding community. By giving these people support and helping them cope with the stresses of life, the program is achieving its set objective.

North Korea appeals for more food assistance

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEOUL, South Korea — North Korea acknowledged Monday that it has only enough grain to last until late spring and appealed for international food donations.

The World Food Program is preparing to issue another appeal — the third since last year — for large-scale food aid to North Korea, which it said was in the throes of a life-threatening food shortage.

North Korea said Monday it is short 2.3 million tons of grains this year — about the same amount estimated by the U.N. agency.

Quoting a government official, the North's Korean Central News Agency said the country needs 4.8 million tons of grain a year to feed its population. It harvested only 2.5 million tons last year because of devastating floods.

The news agency said the official, who was not identified, also thanked the United States for its efforts.

Easing its 47-year trade embargo on North Korea, the Clinton administration this past week allowed non-governmental organizations to provide humanitarian food aid to the North.

Government rations in North Korea were cut a few months ago from 14 ounces daily per person to 3-1/2 ounces. In contrast, refugees in U.N. camps in Africa receive 22 ounces of rations a day.

Beach Museum not geared toward students

The Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art opened its doors last semester. Too bad students weren't invited.

When the Beach art museum was built, the intent was to give K-State's campus a museum like other state schools. It was meant to be a resource for students, faculty and the surrounding community, as well as to drum up tourism for the campus. The Beach art museum might have reached its other goals, but it still hasn't met the needs of students.

The museum needs to get students involved. Programming at the Beach art museum is more community based, and not geared to the average student who has a low entertainment budget but an interest in the arts.

Activities planned at the Beach art museum are too expensive for students. A brunch planned for Sunday costs $15 per person for a meal and a tour.

The museum should be a resource for students and the Department of Art. Campus money is devoted to the upkeep of the museum. With student money being spent on the museum, students should feel welcome at the museum, and have the opportunity to become involved in the activities at the museum.

With the threat of reduced space for the Union art gallery, the Beach art museum should show its support for the talent of K-State students in the art department by promoting student shows as well as regionally and nationally acclaimed artists.

With a location on the remote edge of campus, this makes it even more difficult for students to become involved in the museum. It is vital for the museum to promote its events, and get the students involved in their museum.

Students should consider taking the initiative during their next lunch break and stop by the Beach art museum. Perhaps with increased student interest, the museum will be forced to consider planning more student-interest activities.

• STUDENTS SHOULD LOOK CLOSER AT HOUSE BILL.

Editor,

We are writing this letter to express our great concern with a bill that was recently passed out of the House Taxation Committee and now has been returned for review.

House Bill 2030, offered by Rep. Phill Kline of Johnson County, would drastically cut state property taxes, but in doing so, it would cause significant cuts in K-State's funding. It would also limit state budget growth to 1.4 percent in Fiscal Year 1999 and 0.8 percent in Fiscal Year 2000.

These are unreasonably slow rates of increase that do not even keep pace with our state's low inflation rate. If these increases in the state budget remain the same, there will be little hope of seeing K-State's budget increase during the next two years.

In fact, K-State will likely see a decrease in its actual budget in order to provide funds for K-12 education and Social and Rehabilitation Services spending, both of which are required by state statute.

Rep. Kent Glasscock of Manhattan expressed some very serious concerns about this bill's implications and what it would mean for K-State in recent newspaper articles. Gov. Bill Graves has also expressed his opposition to the plan and called it an idea that you would write up on a napkin at a bar.

However, much to our surprise, Rep. Jeff Peterson seconded the motion to vote this bill out of the House Taxation Committee and then voted against a motion to send this bill back to the committee for further review. Peterson, whose district includes the University, said this bill will not affect K-State's funding this year or in the future.

The fact of the matter is this will significantly affect K-State's funding now and in the future, and will also negatively affect the Manhattan economy.

We encourage anyone who would like more information about this issue to contact the University President's office at 532-6221, or the Student Government office at 532-6541.

• READER SAYS K-STATE IS EFFICIENT.

Editor,

I've meant to write this several times before, but I've always put it off. It needs to be said.

After 20 years in the Army, I'm no stranger to big organizations trying to do a lot of things with a lot of people all at the same time. Just to keep it short and simple, K-State is second to none in efficiency, friendliness and a certain smoothness in everything it does. And I don't mean just an office or two, a professor here or a secretary there. It's everywhere — and everyone — on campus.

I, for one, appreciate it.

I have had some difficulty living in Manhattan lately. You see, my brain has been swirling with all these ideas to improve this fair city of ours. I've even gone so far as to make a list.

If I were in charge around here — we should all thank God I'm not — this is what I would do. If you have the power to make any of these needs become reality, please feel free to make it so.

In no certain order they are as follows:

● We need a real night club in this city. I'm talking a warehouse with a huge mirrored ball twirling from the ceiling, a security detail outside the place and lots of crazy people. I'm thinking something similar to the one in "Basic Instinct."

● We need a local celebrity. When I go to the grocery store I just don't have anyone to gawk at. Maybe we should write Orenthal James Simpson and ask him to move here. If he says no, we could ask Judge Lance Ito.

● A Taco Bell in Aggieville. There is nothing like the Bell when you're all loaded up from a night in Aggieville.

● A wider selection of restaurants. Maybe an Olive Garden Italian Restaurant. No offense to Spaghetti Jack's.

● A men's basketball team.

● A humane book-return policy from the K-State Union Bookstore. They wouldn't let Mother Teresa return a book if she kept it longer than a week.

● A brewery in Aggieville would be nice. How many pizza places can you stuff into a one-block area? Perhaps Little Apple Brewing Co. should consider moving.

● A men's basketball team.

● We need a real civil engineer. The person who designed the streets in Manhattan had to be smoking crack before it was even fashionable. The first step would be to add some green arrows at the stop lights on Bluemont and Anderson avenues.

● We need a huge casino lighting up the night sky. I hope it will come equipped with pimps and prostitutes. This will give the Riley County Police Department something to do besides drive around on the poorly planned streets.

● A full-sized ice rink. Believe it or not, K-State has an ice hockey team. From what I gather, the team members fight more than Mike Tyson. Probably because they're upset about having to drive to Overland Park just to practice.

● A wider selection of radio stations. If my compact disc player were to break, I'd be forced to slit my wrists.

● More bars like Rock-A-Belly Bar & Deli.

● A guy with dyed-purple hair and a trench coat standing on the street corner selling Rolex watches. I've always wanted a Rolex. I figure a guy with purple hair would be selling them cheap.

● A University president who sees fit to cancel school when it's minus 50 degrees outside. President Jon Wefald, do you drive up to Anderson Hall when it's cold? I walk a couple of miles every day. I, like most other people, do not enjoy frostbite.

● Each student on this campus should be equipped with a map of Farrell Library. A bloodhound could get lost in that place.

● Public transit. Maybe if we all rode a bus, I wouldn't get frostbite, and we could build a nice, new building where the parking lots used to be. Yeah, right. The day Midwesterners take public transportation rather than driving is the day Tupac Shakur rises from his ashes and sings a duet with Frank Sinatra.

● A men's basketball team.

● A blues bar and grill with some stellar barbecue. Hey, I was born and bred in Kansas City. I have a fundamental right to good barbecue.

● A local music scene. Too many power chords, too little time.

● We need to close off Moro Street to traffic from 11th Street to the dollar theater on Friday and Saturday nights. This would allow people to mill in the street with their drinks in their hand creating a Bourbon Street atmosphere.

● We need to deprive the City of Manhattan from a large source of income and create a shuttle service to and from the bars. DUIs would drop and so would city income.

● Lon Krueger.

● Less window-rattling bombs being set off at Fort Riley. I live on the east side of Manhattan and my windows still rattle. Bombs are just bad.

● Keep the student art gallery in the K-State Student Union. It just makes sense.

● Fewer slum lords and more landlords like mine. It is a nice feeling to know that your landlords care if something goes wrong.

● A men's basketball team.

If this all seems a little too negative, maybe next week I'll focus on all the positive things floating around this city.

our NATION'S Capital

Public involvement in Washington D.C. politics helps set policies for nation

Washington, D.C., is a city of contrasts.

Only a narrow creek, called the Anacostia River, separates some of the most opulent public architecture in the country from the shantytowns that house its poorest citizens.

Homeless mendicants line the street as limousines whiz by, carrying fiscal conservatives and welfare liberals who show bipartisan cooperation in ignoring the hungry faces just outside their smoked-glass windows.

The leader of the world's oldest surviving democracy lives in a small southern mansion on Pennsylvania Avenue, in imperial majesty befitting an Asian potentate, surrounded by his own cadre of janissaries and untouchable alike by public insult or private prosecution.

The same city that houses some of the world's wealthiest people, and furnishes a place for even wealthier others to do their business, is so strapped for cash that it has to be bailed out frequently by the federal government.

Now it has two police forces: a non-emergency service that takes down reports of crimes that have already occurred and pretends to investigate them for perhaps half a minute, and an emergency response force that is supposed stop crimes in progress but winds up spending most of its time shuttling streetwalkers among Capitol Hill, Lafayette Square and Embassy Row.

The nation's capital is so rich in dichotomies that some are found embedded within others. Seen in the light of the morning sun, the Capitol is really two colors: the brilliant white of the dome, finished in 1867, vs. the very pale rose of the side wings, finished much earlier using stone taken from a different quarry.

TheWashington Monument, a fitting symbol of many Congressmen's sexuality, turns piebald about 200 feet above the ground, where gray stone laid down before the Civil War meets rose-colored stone put on top of it 10 years later.

Nearly every public building in Washington shows some signs of collision between the opulent dreams of the architects and the penny-pinching, nickel-and-diming stinginess of 19th-century Congresses.

Nor do the suburbs improve in consistency. In Maryland prosperous middle-class black academics live in segregated splendor in Bowie and Upper Marlboro, while white lawyers at least as affluent live in Montgomery County and measure status according to their proximity to the Bethesda Country Club and the fairy-castle turrets of the Naval Medical Center.

Archaeologists dig up remains of the colonial past in Glenn Dale while astronomers and space policy planners, looking at the skies through telescopes in Greenbelt, plot to inflict the colonial future on Mars.

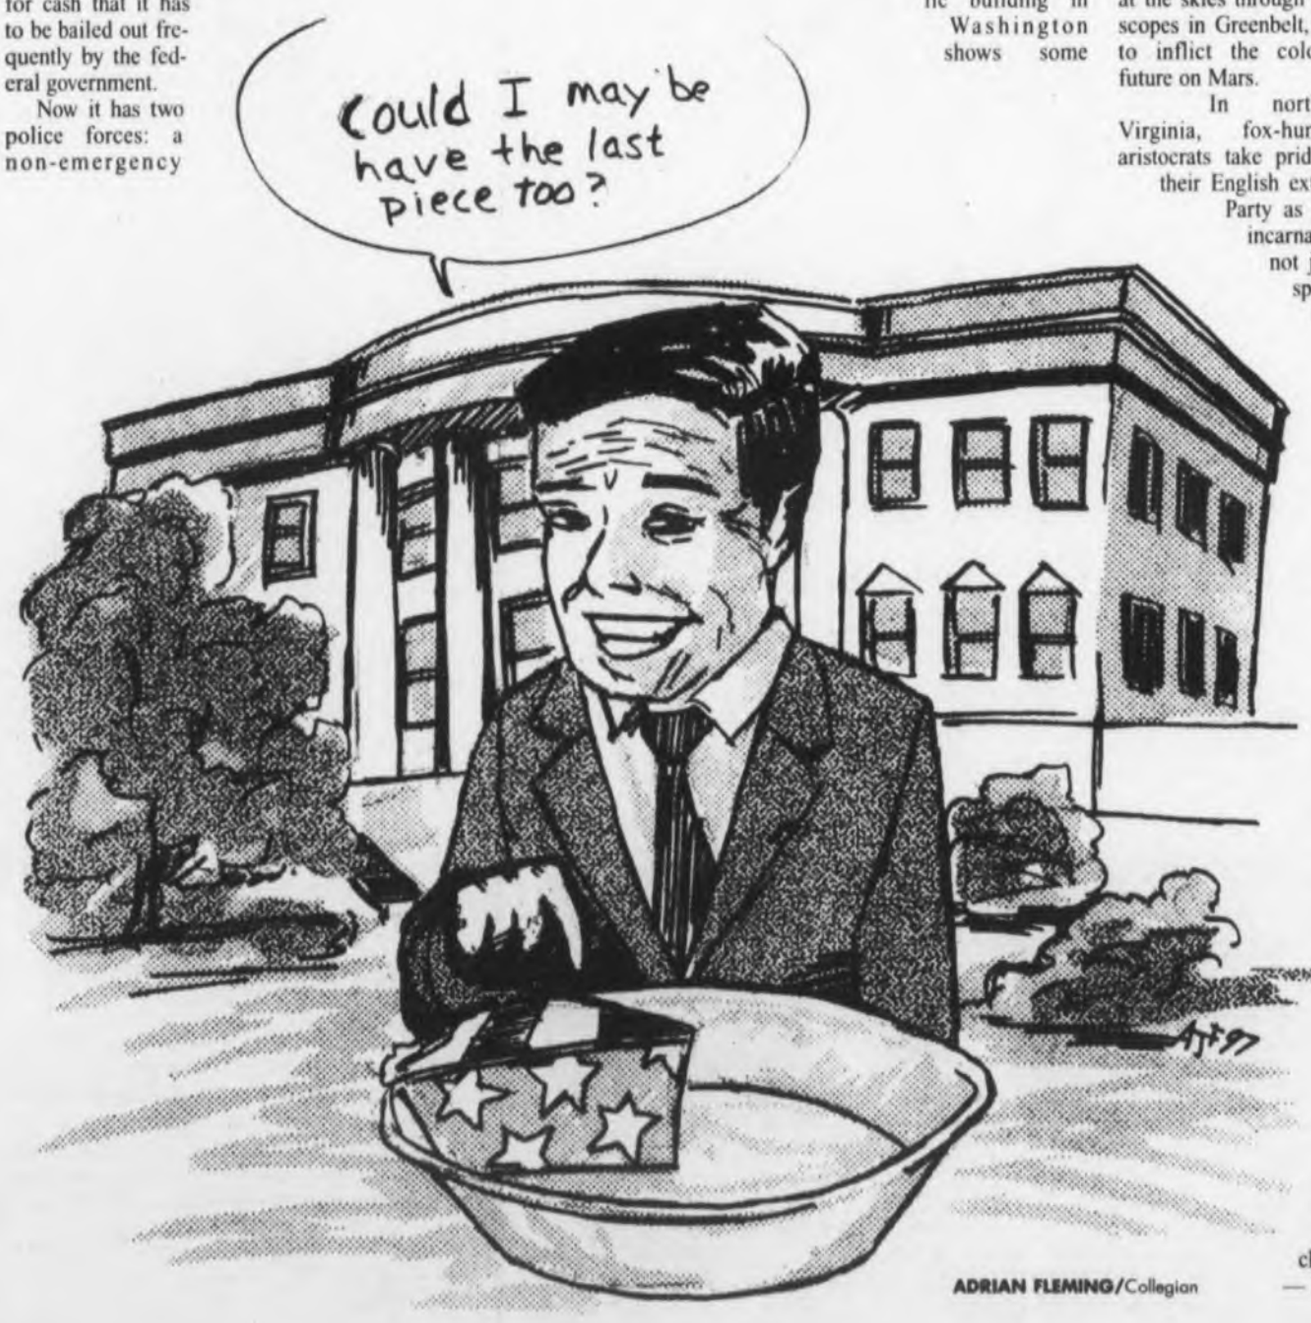
In northern Virginia, fox-hunting aristocrats take pride in their English extraction and admire the Republican Party as the fiscally conservative American incarnation of Toryism. Then, when they're not jumping stiles, they calmly discuss spending $3 billion to double-deck the Beltway for 24 miles.

Washington and its surrounding area are so ripe in contradictions that it takes special mental adaptations — what we in the boondocks would call neuroses or psychological blind spots — simply to survive.

People willingly exchange favors with others whom they wouldn't recognize if they met them on the street. Politicians dole out promises and sympathy to competing special interests, as if those could substitute for sincerity, and as if sincerity were something that could be cut into equal shares like a pie.

Everybody in Washington has a superior form of truth. For bureaucrats it's plausible deniability, for journalists it's the half-mendacious mutterings of confidential sources.

Contrary to what you might think, Washingtonians prize sensitivity to the wishes and feelings of the constituents back home — but nobody has it because nobody can shake off the narcissistic self-regard of the capital long enough to think of the folks back home as people, rather than demographic constructs.



It's up to you to pull on their chains and get the policies you want — if you don't, someone else will.

CAROL ADOLPH, ticket office manager, and her staff processed 34,000 ticket orders for the Southwestern Bell Cotton Bowl in Dallas. Adolph was presented with a framed Cotton Bowl poster by Cotton Bowl officials for her help in making the bowl a success.

MOST VALUABLE PLAYER
manager honored for high ticket sales

Four days after K-State had received its first-ever New Year's Day bowl bid, K-State athletic director Max Urick walked into the ticket office at Bramlage Coliseum.

Urick knew ticket sales had been more than brisk in the days following K-State's invitation to play Brigham Young University in the Southwestern Bell Cotton Bowl in Dallas, but this was a little too much.

"Those numbers can't be right," Urick said to ticket office manager Carol Adolph.

"He had been gone for a few days and when he said that, I proved it to him on the computer," Adolph said.

In all, nearly 45,000 purple-clad fans descended on northern Texas for the Cotton Bowl, to watch BYU win over the Cats 19-15. Of the 45,000, 34,000 ticket orders were processed by Adolph and her staff, which numbered from eight to 10 people during the first part of December.

For her efforts, Adolph, in her 42nd year as a part of K-State athletics and 30th as ticket office manager, was showered with praise from those associated with the Cotton Bowl.

On Dec. 13, less than a week after the official bid was accepted by K-State, bowl personnel sent the office 61 yellow roses for their help in making the 61st Annual Cotton Bowl a rousing attendance success.

And last week, at halftime of the Colorado/K-State men's basketball game, Adolph was presented a framed Cotton Bowl poster by officials who also presented the team with its trophy.

The poster read: "To Carol Adolph — our most valuable player."

"They told me earlier in the day they had something to present to me," Adolph said.

The gifts were just small tokens for the amount of work turned in by Adolph and one other full-time employee, several students and a number of part-time workers.

University officials received the bid on Dec. 8, and for the next week, Adolph and company were putting in 12- to 14-hour days trying to meet the huge demand for tickets.

For two weeks before K-State officially was invited, the ticket office had been taking orders for those fans who wanted bowl tickets regardless of the Cats' holiday destination.

"We had about 9,000 orders by the time we started at 8 Monday morning," Adolph said.

The Cotton Bowl's initial allotment of tickets to the participating teams was 12,500. "And those were almost gone by the time we opened up Monday morning," Adolph said.

Each day, Adolph would call Dallas asking for more tickets, and each day, she would get the same response.

"They were just amazed," she said. "After the first day, the Cotton Bowl people were here, and I went to them and said we had taken over 18,500 orders, and they just couldn't believe it."

The 34,000 tickets also included packages sold by Catbacker clubs and Alumni groups throughout the state, but the ticket office still had to process those orders.

And then there were the over-the-phone orders.

"For the first three days, we had five lines, and it was just constant," Adolph said.

The previous three years, the ticket office had sold 11,000 tickets for the Copper Bowl in 1993, 2,500 for the Aloha Bowl in 1994 and around 9,000 for the Holiday Bowl after the 1995 season.

But nearly 7,000 K-State fans purchased Holiday Bowl tickets through the bowl itself.

Adolph said she was confident the Cotton Bowl number would surpass the combined total of the first three K-State bowls because Dallas was within practical driving distance, and it was the program's first New Year's Day bowl. But nearly 35,000?

"I knew we would have a good response — 20-25,000," Adolph said. "But I was shocked."

The poster she received from Cotton Bowl President Rick Baker will go up in the ticket office, while a picture of the flower arrangement hangs near Adolph's desk.

"The whole bowl was just tremendous to us," Adolph said. "They were happy because we really made the bowl for them because we did the work."

21-year-old Tiger Woods turning into golf superstar

If you did not watch any of the Pebble Beach National Pro-Am this past weekend, then shame on you. Shame on you because you missed one of the most exciting golf tournaments in a while and the most exciting player in the game right now, Tiger Woods.

Just take a look at what Woods had done before the Pro-Am:

He earned over $1 million faster than any player in PGA Tour history: it took him nine tournaments. Of those tournaments, he won three, finished in the top five six times and posted a scoring average of 69.32. None of the great ones won in their first nine tournaments. Not Arnold Palmer, Jack Nicklaus, Lee Trevino or Tom Watson.

VIEWPOINT

SHANE McCORMICK

SHANE McCORMICK is a senior in print journalism. You can e-mail comments to Shane at (shanem@ksu.edu)

The guy is just a pup at 21-years-old.

At the Phoenix Open, Woods recorded an ace on the par-3 16th hole in front of a crowd that exceeded 30,000. Thirty-thousand people at one hole, to see one man. I doubt Bramlage Coliseum will seat that many people all year at the men's games.

Just when I thought I had seen the greatest of individual performances, Woods amazed all at this past weekend's tournament.

After the second round of the tournament had finished, Woods was tied for 67th place. On Saturday, he fired an amazing 63 to pull himself closer to contention. Going into the final round, Woods was only seven shots back from the leader.

The final round began with David Duval leading all.

After the first nine holes, Woods had posted an incredible 31 that brought him two strokes from the leaders, Duval and Mike O'Meara. Down the stretch, Woods shoved off any pressure by making birdies on holes No. 16 and 17. Although O'Meara responded with birdies also on 16 and 17, Woods still had one last shot on the par-5 18th.

Needing an eagle to have a chance, Woods pulled out his 3-wood from 267 yards and drilled it on to the green, rolling 40 feet short of the pin.

Nobody had even reached the No. 18 green in two during the whole tournament. But Woods didn't care because if he has any shot at all, he lets it all hang out. With Woods looming around, you can never count him out. He's too much of a fierce competitor and tremendous talent.

Although he missed the eagle try and finished in a tie for second, he excited everyone by finishing the last 36 holes 17-under par.

Even when he lost, Woods still made headlines with his courageous effort. O'Meara may have won the tournament, but it is clear that Woods has won the hearts of the fans.

You would think he would be happy with his incredible comeback over the last 36 holes. But when asked about it, Woods replied, "Second sucks."

That is what makes Woods one of the greatest players in the game. Despite his tremendous play, he wasn't satisfied with a $167,200 check for second place.

All the money and efforts don't matter to Woods if he doesn't win the tournament. Woods really thinks he can win every tournament he enters. He expects nothing less out of himself.

Woods is Montana- and Jordan-like, he seems to have a knack for performing his best when the spotlight is on him.

Last year, Woods was selected as the Sportsman of the Year by Sports Illustrated. He even overcame the so-called Sports Illustrated cover jinx.

He always seems to have the largest crowds following him at tournaments. The crowds love him. He's charismatic and takes everything in stride.

He is the best thing that has happened to golf in a long time. His presence is much like the one Nicklaus made when he broke into the tour scene.

Nicklaus went on to become one of the greatest golfers to play the game.

But with everything Woods possesses, it will only be a matter of time until he passes Nicklaus and others as the greatest golfer of all time.

Parachute club wins medals at national competition

JILL JARSULIC
staff reporter

The K-State Parachute Club jumped out of a plane and into three medals during the National Collegiate Parachuting Championships Dec. 27-31.

Four events made up the competition: a four-way jump, two-way jump, style and accuracy.

Club president Eric Wessel, senior in mechanical engineering, placed first in the four-way event with a team of students from other schools.

"A lot of colleges don't have their own parachute clubs, so people will mix and match colleges to put together a pick-up team," Wessel said.

Students from Duke University, the University of Minnesota and Daytona Community College were on Wessel's team.

In the four-way event, teams must attempt different formations like a circle or a star.

The team is then judged on how many formations they complete in 35 seconds.

"My team all met in Florida on Dec. 22, and practiced from then until when the competition started," Wessel said.

"We jumped as much as we could, maybe 40 practice jumps. When you're not used to someone, a lot of it depends on their experience," he said.

Wessel competed in the master division.

Tim Smith, freshman in fisheries and wildlife biology, placed first in style and second in accuracy in the novice division.

The novice division is for those who have jumped less than 100 times, intermediate division is for those who have jumped between 100-300, and a master division is for those who have jumped more than 300 times.

Sebastian, Fla., was the site for the Championships.

"The best part about it was placing first in style," Smith said. "But it was nice to meet new people from all over the country."

Twelve members of the K-State Parachute Club competed.

Wessel said there are 20-25 active members of the club who jump regularly, but last calendar year, they trained 160 first-time jumpers.

Baseball team looks forward to best home schedule in program history

BRIAN SMOLLER
staff reporter

Exciting players. Exciting plays. K-State baseball.

That's the theme for this year's edition of Wildcat baseball. With the basketball team struggling to remain near .500 and the hope for a new baseball stadium by next year, Coach Mike Clark called this season the most exciting of his 11-year career.

"We have the best home schedule in the history of K-State," Clark said. "With a non-conference schedule like ours, who can argue?"

The Wildcats, in addition to having home games with schools like Texas A&M, Oklahoma and Kansas, will play host to Oral Roberts and Wichita State.

"You don't have to watch ESPN to see the good games," Clark said. "You can watch them right here."

While attending the games, two players to watch are second baseman Todd Fereday and shortstop Heath Schesser. Schesser, a three-year starter, is billed by Clark as being a top 10 pick in the draft.

"The preseason all-America shortstop is out of Texas," Clark said. "And Heath batted 40 points higher than him and had better power numbers."

Clark also pointed out Schesser has had to play on grass, which gives more unpredictable hops, while Texas' stadium is artificial turf.

Fereday is returning for his senior year, but at a different position.

As a freshman, he was an all-American at third base, and Clark counts on him to deliver at second.

"Todd was a little quicker on defense, and that's why we made the move," Clark said. "Todd and Heath give us very strong defense up the middle.

Perhaps the best strength of this year's team is pitching. The Cats' pitching staff consists of many hard-throwers. David Johnson, the single season save record holder, turned down a pro contract with the Minnesota Twins and returned to strengthen an already-strong bullpen.

"I've never had as much depth in pitching as I have this year," Clark said. "We have at least eight guys who could be starting pitchers at the Division I level."

One possible trouble spot for the team is lack of experience in the outfield. The outfield will have a few new faces this year, including senior Scott Poepard, who played second base last year.

"We felt he would be better suited out in the outfield," Clark said.

It's also possible the starting centerfielder will be a freshman. Garret Bell, one of six freshmen, is dubbed by Clark as the fastest player on the team.

"Bell along with freshman outfielder Nick Wood are two players that we're excited about," Clark said.

Depth and experience are the key words for Clark and his team. A blend of eager young talent might offset the lack of experience.

After losing two starters and other important components to last year's team, the Cats added seven new players to a squad already low in game starting experience..

"We don't have a lot of experience, but we have quality experience," Clark said. "We also have Brian Bobier, a transfer from Georgia that started 40 games. That will help."

fashion sense

Big names do not necessarily mean fashion with staying power

Calvin Klein.

Giorgio Armani.

Dolce and Cabbana.

What do these names have in common? Perhaps extreme prices, disoriented tastes and style, and models willing to wear paint-on apparel.

It's a certain apparel on people while walking to a weekly lecture, preparing for a night in Aggieville or just casually lounging with friends.

No, I'm not describing any drug addictions, rather an air of importance triggered in the eyes of the beholder: fashion.

Who can afford to purchase this over-priced garbage? A $250 Chanel blouse — nothing extravagant — is not my idea of an irresistible bargain. Then again, it is hard enough to find a generic brand of blouse under $35.

The problems with these fashions are not so much the prices, but the overbearing ugliness of the garments themselves, which disgusts perspective buyers.

Hideous clothes can be found printed all over magazines, news reports and runways. Who are the successful advertisers? Models.

And can models look great in trendy, metallic colors and laminated jeans?

Cindy Crawford has created a demand for tiger-print leggings. Any normal person wearing these fashions would be laughed at, harassed or receive a severe beating. Pumpkin-colored loafers and psychedelic-print minis? I don't think so.

Not all designer and runway collections are considered garbage. Some collections actually display unusual and tasteful fashion as well as aid in giving personal fashion ideas.

The key to fashion success is to apply these influential fashion styles, then search for cheaper fabrics and lower prices at local stores such as thrift stores, or even your dad's closet.

The influence of fashion does not apply to everyone at K-State.

K-State could be described as a smorgasbord of fashion ranging from sweats to neckties and corduroys. But more importantly, students should always look presentable for school.

I've always thought good personal hygiene and the proper attire is helpful in making attention spans longer, people happier and self-esteems rise.

One way to ensure the proper attire is to dress more practical, not trendy.

Oops, I forgot, welcome to the '90s — a world of offbeat, wanna-be hippies and a poor excuse for the reinvention of the '70s.

Instead of spending a fortune at the mall every season to update your trendy clothes, such as silver-metallic jackets, buy your fashion once.

Those people who cannot stray from trendy clothes, at least buy them cheap at a Goodwill, Disabled Veterans or any second-hand store. Just don't expect any of us to be impressed.

It doesn't require large amounts of money to become a practical dresser, just careful analysis.

Focus on clothes that could be worn as a professional, not just on the spur of the minute. Remember, less is more, meaning simple, yet personalized.

It is true that all people, with the exception of nudists, are required to wear some sort of clothing in public. But whether he or she conveys style, well that is an issue I'll argue.

I will explore all areas of fashion — designer inspirations ranging from modern minimalism to urban vintage. Your fashion questions and concerns are encouraged.

Not everyone becomes a fashion diva overnight.

I hold true to the saying that fashion can only be seen in the eyes of the beholder.

No matter how many times I tell my grandma Fern to throw out her pastel polyester pants, she continues to religiously wear the vivid garment.

Just remember, fashion followers, personal style reigns within each individual, whether inspiring or vomit-inducing.

Locals to perform Broadway hit about pet, owner

▶ Reserve your seat. "Sylvia" will run from Feb. 7-9 and Feb. 13-16. All seats are reserved and must be prepaid. Call 539-6000 between 11 a.m. and 3 p.m. to reserve seats.

BECKY WINTER
staff reporter

Man's best friend will take center stage at 8 p.m., Friday, Feb. 7, at the Manhattan Center for the Arts in the Broadway comedy hit "Sylvia."

The play tells the story of a man who tries to compensate for his unhappiness at work by bringing home a playful canine, Sylvia, portrayed by Christy Scott, graduate student in psychology. However, problems soon arise at home when the man's disgruntled wife begins to get jealous.

"It's almost like he's having an affair, but it's with his dog," Scott said.

Paul Berger, director of the play, said it is a light, sophisticated comedy that shows how people interact with their animals.

"It's about how people can learn things from their relationships with their animals," Berger said.

Local cast members have been rehearsing six nights a week for the last four weeks to create a show that will keep the audience's attention.

"Whether you're a nine-to-five worker or a student, this play creates a world of fantasy that you will lose yourself in," Scott said.

Scott said she appreciated the freedom and the creativity of Sylvia but considers it a challenge.

"It's such a contrast to be a serious graduate student by day and a rampant dog by night, but it's also a lot of fun," Scott said.

The play ran last year in New York City and received rave reviews. The Manhattan performers are hoping to have the same response.

"I hope that the Manhattan community comes out and supports the show. For anyone who has ever had a pet, this play is a good way to see what your animal is thinking. Sylvia speaks for all pets," Scott said.

Valentine love letters composed on Web page

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Speak to me, love, in words poetic. With passionate phrases edged in desperation, intellect touched with regret. On this day of romance, let your tender, written words find their way into my heart.

▶ Look it up on the World Wide Web. The Cyrano Server can be found at (http://www.nando.net/toys/cyrano.html).

And if you can't, let the Internet do it for you.

For the romantically impaired, the appearance of red boxes of chocolates and an abrupt rise in the price of roses signal not the approach of the day of love, but the day of dread. It's Valentine's Day, when missives so moving as to melt the hardest heart are called for.

But dread not, oh ye for whom words of love do not leap eagerly from pen to paper. Are computers not meant to aid mankind, free us from labor, allow us to expand our reach? Or, maybe, just to get us out of a serious jam?

If the thought of writing an epistle of love brings terror to your heart and tremors to your hand, if you know you'll say the wrong thing or you can't think of anything to say at all, the Internet has the answers.

Hie thee over to the Cyrano Server, where Fraser Van Asch has created a site in honor of that most persuasive writer of love letters, Cyrano de Bergerac.

What do you feel for that obscure object of your desire? Desperate longing, intellectual connection, misty-eyed regret? Perhaps steamy passion, poetic ardor or even surreal concern?

Whichever it is, simply click on one of the options listed above, supply a few bits of information about your beloved — a descriptive adjective, a name, a favorite food, the most attractive physical feature — and voila! A Valentine to woo the hardest of hearts is written, expressly for you.

Not only that, but you can arrange it so that the e-mail is sent on the big day itself.

"My wife and I sat around with the original programmer and her husband one night, had a few beers and went at it," said Van Asch, the art director for Nando net, the site's sponsor.

Lest you think that's not a proper qualification, Van Asch hastens to add that his wife was an English major in college.

"She was always great with words," he said from his Raleigh, N.C., office.

But what to do if the passion once so assiduously sought causes only heartbreak and pain?

Why rely on your own resources when, once again, Cyrano can find the words that now stick in your craw? Fill in the blanks, and he will write a note explaining to your soon-to-be-ex that he or she is just not the one for you.

There now. Isn't that better than "Dear John"?

Students receive help with English

HEATHER PERKINS
staff reporters

Students from all over the world unite weekly to learn about one another's culture and improve their spoken English skills.

This is one of the goals of the Conversational English Program sponsored by the International Student Center.

"The Conversational English Program was established to help international students new to K-State get accustomed to K-State outside the classroom environment," Alan Aubert, coordinator of the program, said.

"It is often difficult for them to make friends outside the classroom," he said. "The program serves as a bridge to help them make contact with other students."

The program was started in 1978 on a volunteer basis to assist international students with their spoken English skills and to help them build confidence in their speaking abilities.

"I hope that they come away with an increased comfort level at K-State," Aubert said. "When they come to K-State and the United States for the first time, having a native friend lets them get used to the campus easier."

Students are asked to spend at least one hour a week with their partners. They might meet at any time that is convenient for them and are allowed to do any activity they want as long as it requires a lot of conversation.

"My partner and I went bowling, out to eat every once in a while and just got together and talked and played board games," Erin Bowersox, junior in pre-health professions, said.

Bowersox volunteered last year and again this semester because she enjoyed learning about other cultures and meeting foreign students.

"My partner and I both enjoy learning about other cultures. He is from Colombia and I am studying Spanish, so we were able to practice our foreign languages with each other," Bowersox said.

This semester Bowersox will get a new partner, but she plans to keep in contact with her current partner.

"I have gotten a good friend and knowledge about Colombia from this experience," Bowersox said.

Partners are paired up by common interests.

"International students and volunteers fill out an information sheet that asks about their hobbies, interests, their experience in teaching or learning a foreign language," Aubert said. "It gives us an idea of which international student to pair the volunteer up with."

There are about 20 students involved with the program. Volunteer applications are available throughout the year. To volunteer contact Aubert at the International Student Center at 532-6448 or by e-mail at (aaubert@ksu.edu).

KU tries for specialized tags

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — University of Kansas alumni and friends are trying to get the Legislature to make specialized school license plates more feasible.

Rep. David Adkins, R-Leawood, a former Kansas student body president and 1986 graduate, introduced a bill three years ago to let fans from any state college show their support for their school with a mascot tag.

It also would allow part of the money from license plate sales to help schools fund scholarship programs.

The bill passed, but the cost and length of time to get the plates has proved to be a big hurdle.

State policy is that the cost of the plates have to cover the cost of production, which is not cheap.

The conditions, said Fred B. Williams, president of the KU Alumni Association, made that type of plate very difficult to market and very difficult to administer.

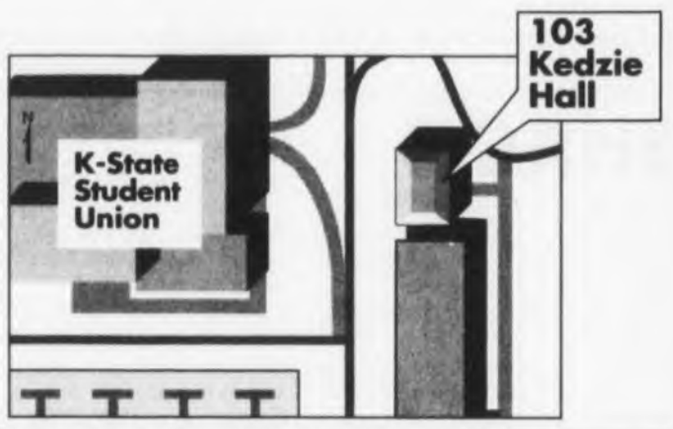
So, Kansas' alumni association has balked at starting a Jayhawk plate program.

Kansas State University put a program in place last year.

But the response was low — only 823 were sold as of the state's Aug. 15 deadline.

The Wildcat plates each cost $122.75, which includes $27.75 for the standard plate fee, $45 for the special tags and $50 for a royalty to support scholarships.

Those getting tags must pay the $27.75 standard fee and the $50 royalty each year. In following years, those wanting to get the special plates or renew their old ones have to buy vouchers from the KSU alumni association by June 30.



The wait will be between six and 17 months, depending on their vehicle property tax schedule.

CLINTON

On the loser list was the colossal collapse of Clinton's sweeping plan to guarantee health insurance for every American. Another casualty was the president's $30 billion economic stimulus program.

But the president also has a respectable record of achievement from the stack of proposals he's carried to Capitol Hill.

After his maiden speech to Congress in February 1993, Clinton won a $500 billion deficit reduction package, combining one of the biggest tax increases in history with deep spending cuts. The program put the government on a path toward four straight years of declining budget deficits. This year, however, it's expected to resume climbing.

In his first two years, after Clinton's pleas to Congress, lawmakers passed the Brady gun-control law, the family and medical leave act, a scaled-down national service program, the motor-voter registration act, the North American Free Trade Agreement, a direct loan program for college students and a crime bill to put 100,000 cops on the street.

The president's program stalled in 1995 after the Republicans threw the Democrats from power in Congress, taking control of the legislative agenda and shaking Clinton's confidence. The president opened the year with a State of the Union address that droned on for 81 minutes. Before it was over, about 20 Republicans had walked out.

A year of veto battles and budget fights ensued, resulting in two government shutdowns that voters blamed on Republicans.

By the time he returned to Capitol Hill in January 1996, Clinton was back in fighting form, lecturing the Republicans about their stands on welfare, tax cuts, the minimum wage, health insurance, Medicare and Medicaid, environmental cleanup, crime-fighting and foreign policy.

He told the GOP that it should never shut down the government again. The Republicans now agree.

Clinton asked Congress for $1,000 college scholarships for the top 5 percent of graduates from every high school. The proposal was ignored.

go into effect on July 1. This bill will affect health-care reform and insurance plans, even at the college level.

Portability allows for the changing of insurance companies from campus-sponsored to employer-sponsored, or vice versa, regardless of any pre-existing health conditions.

The bill does not specifically include campus-sponsored insurance plans under the group coverage heading.

The American College Health Association urges concerned students to contact the Health Care Financing Association, as well as Congress. Addresses, sample letters and information can be obtained by contacting Amy Donahy, Student Health Advisory Committee chairwoman, or Lannie Zweimiller at Lafene Health Center.

GRADUATION

"It can take a week or two to get the grades transferred," she said.

Many students have problems when it comes to incomplete work.

"If they are using an incomplete from a previous semester to graduate they should put down the class they took and the semester they took it previously," she said.

"Many students assume that a computer will keep track of them until they graduate," Barker said. "We're not going to graduate anyone until they come in and give us a signed application."

While many students don't graduate until July, they are encouraged to go through the graduation application process now.

"It is not uncommon for students who graduate in July to go through the May commencement," Barker said.

Above all else, Barker said students should go see their advisers before graduation is upon them.

"They can clear a lot of these problems up," she said.

Professors' salaries in question

TOPEKA — A conservative legislator today challenged the underlying assumptions state university officials have used in asking for budget increases.

Rep. John Edmonds, R-Great Bend, suggested the Kansas Board of Regents might be making its institutions look more needy by comparing them unfairly to those in other states. He also questioned whether the state needs to increase faculty pay to keep professors in Kansas.

Edmonds raised his questions during a meeting of a House Appropriations subcommittee on university budgets. The subcommittee is debating policy issues that would affect the entire regents system.

Edmonds' questions indicate that conservative Republicans might be skeptical of Gov. Bill Graves' budget proposals, which would increase spending on state universities by 4.6 percent for the state's 1998 fiscal year, which begins July 1.

"The subcommittee probably will be somewhere under the governor's recommendations," said Chairman Mike Farmer, R-Wichita.

The subcommittee's work represents the first step in the legislative budget process, but the House Appropriations Committee often does not make significant changes from subcommittee recommendations. Legislators first make general

8 fee categories up for consideration during semester for Student Senate

BENJAMIN YODER
staff reporter

Student fees will be a focal point in Student Senate meetings this semester. There are eight fee categories up for consideration.

"Hopefully, they'll all be done by the sixth of March," Jake Breeding, Senate privilege fee chair, said.

Senate appropriates money to various organizations on campus. The fee money is paid by students at the beginning of each semester.

Breeding said the minimum-wage increase of this year could cause fees to increase.

"We're looking for other ways to finance things, besides digging in our pockets," Breeding said.

Student fees are $241.50 for students enrolled in 12 or more credit hours.

For those students enrolled in fewer than 12 hours, fees are figured on a increment plan. Students pay $60 for one credit hour and $16.50 for each additional hour up to 12.

In January, Senate approved the fee for KSDB-FM 91.9 at $35,600. This money is used to finance the operation of the radio station. It will be reviewed again in three years.

Breeding said Senate would be voting on the Union Operations and Union Repair and Enhancement fees in the upcoming weeks.

Union Operations accounts for almost 12

Jury finds Simpson liable

Simpson

▶ SIMPSON ORDERED to pay $8.5 million in damages for deaths.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — A civil jury found O.J. Simpson liable Tuesday for the deaths of his ex-wife and her friend, a moral victory for grieving relatives who felt the football great got away with murder. The jury ordered him to pay $8.5 million in compensatory damages.

The mostly white panel, forced to start deliberations anew last Friday after a juror was removed for misconduct, snatched away some of the vindication Simpson claimed when he was acquitted of murder by a mostly black jury in 1995. That televised murder trial divided the nation about issues of police racism, domestic violence and the quality of justice.

This civil jury, using the lesser standard of preponderance of evidence rather than beyond a reasonable doubt, blamed Simpson for the June 12, 1994, deaths of Nicole Brown Simpson and Ronald Goldman.

The dramatic reading of the verdict was delayed more than three hours to allow the lawyers and families to get to the courthouse. Simpson's trip — in a black Suburban instead of a white Bronco — was televised live nationally on a split screen just as President Clinton began his State of the Union address.

The $8.5 million represented the 70 dead in Israeli helicopter crash

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SHAAR YESHUV, Israel — Two military transport helicopters collided in heavy fog and rain tonight in northern Israel, and Israel's northern army commander said at least 70 soldiers died.

Officials described the crash as the worst air disaster in Israel's military history.

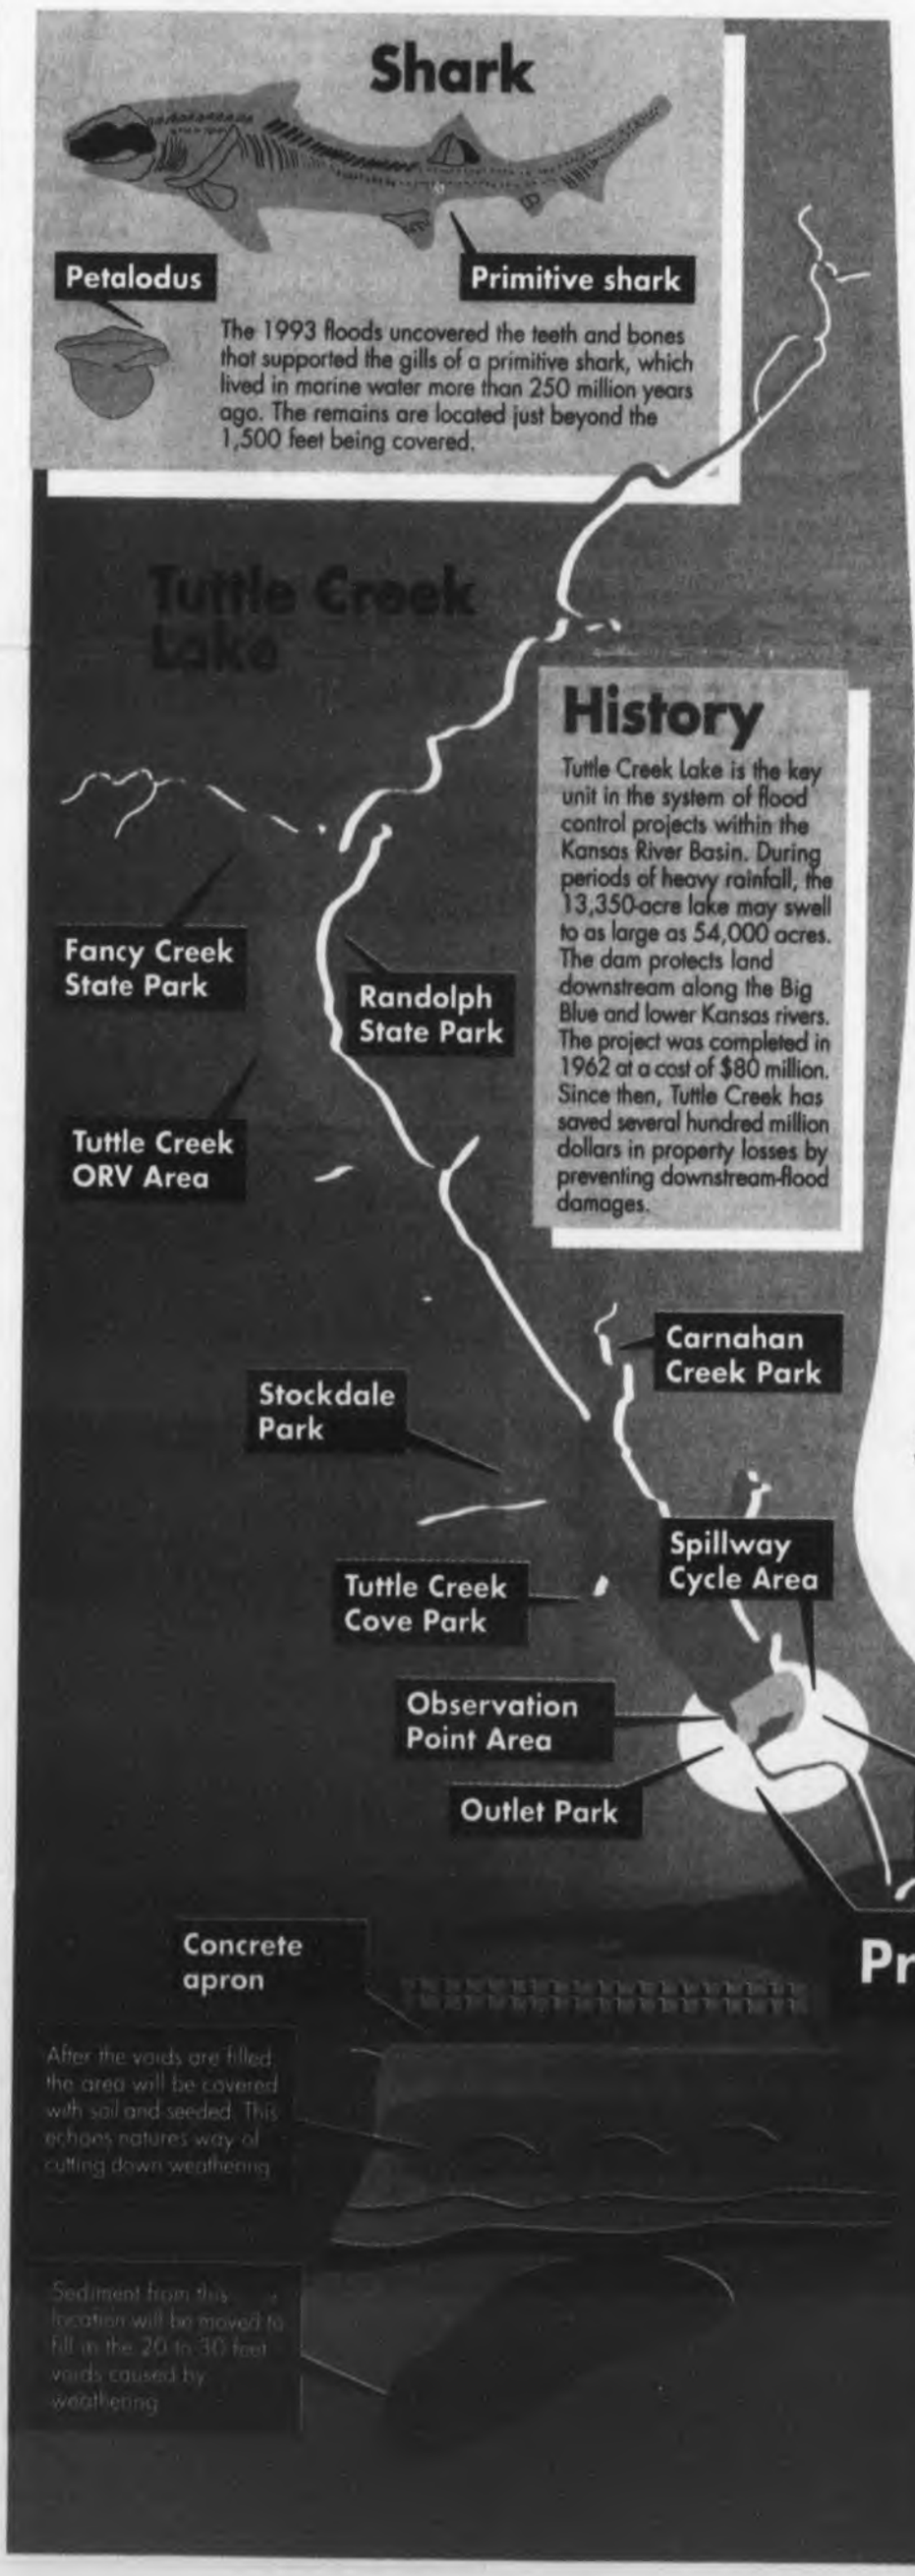
About 70 soldiers and officers were killed, Maj. Gen. Amiram Levine said.

The helicopters, loaded with explosives, had been heading toward southern Lebanon, the army said.

"There was a huge explosion," eyewitness Rachel Fromovitz told the Associated Press. "They crashed right above us, and the helicopters came down in a fiery blaze."

Another witness, Gabi Edri, told Israel's Army radio the two helicopters collided in flight.

Yoav Frenkel told the radio he saw the crash from his car window. Smoke poured from one helicopter as it went down, and the second was lighted by flames.



"We saw a helicopter in the air with smoke coming out from it, and then it crashed into the settlement," he said. "The second helicopter lit up in the air as it fell."

Israel's Channel Two television showed bodies being carried away from the crash site at the Shaar Yeshuv moshav, a communal settlement in the eastern Galilee, five miles east of Kiryat Shemona.

"This is a grave disaster, and a heavy heart goes out to the families of the victims," Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said. "The entire nation cries today for the loss of our young fighters."

Netanyahu canceled a trip to meet with Jordan's King Hussein on Wednesday.

No residents from the settlement were hurt, Fromovitz said. "One helicopter crashed into a home, the other into a building site."

ENDING THE TROUBLE OF EROSION AT TUTTLE

It didn't rain for 40 days and 40 nights, but the flooding from summer 1993 affected the Tuttle Creek Spillway in a way that is still being felt today.

Weathering of the area's natural sediments has occurred at a heightened rate. They were affected primarily due to the flooding in '93, but also because of daily exposure to the sun, wind and rain.

Because of these occurrences, the Army Corps of Engineers at the Tuttle Creek Spillway have devised a way to naturally manipulate the problem.

"Our first concern is the apron with intention to protect the dam. Our interest is not to return the spillway to its original state, a flat, vegetated area, but to protect the underlying rock from additional weathering," Paul Weidhaas, park ranger said.

IN ORDER TO FILL IN sections of the Tuttle Creek Spillway, large machinery has been brought in to facilitate the moving of large rocks.

The area will be protected by covering 20-30 feet deep voids. Shale that is readily available on site is being transported up and into the voids.

"It is more cost efficient to use the sediments already from the spillway, rather than bringing them in from another location," Weidhaas said.

After the rock is all in place, a layer of soil will be put down and seeded for grass to grow.

"Putting vegetation on a slope is a very reasonable and natural way to slow down movement of water on a slope," Ron West, professor of geology, said.

Covering the area with grass will restrict the accessibility of the underlying rock. However, rocks of that type can be found at other locations. They just will no longer be accessible at that site.

"The Corps of Engineers had to weigh the positives and the negatives of this. If they cover it, there will no longer be access to those rocks specifically. Also, if they cover the area it will stop the headward erosion toward

These briefs encapsulate the news of the past 24 hours, and they are from staff reports, wire reports and other news services.

▶ NATION AND WORLD

• ACCIDENTAL BOMB BLAST KILLS 4 IN SOUTHERN VIETNAM.

HANOI, Vietnam — A bomb left over from the Vietnam War exploded in southern Vietnam, killing a pregnant woman and three other people.

Nguyen Van Phong, a scrap-metal dealer, was trying to cut open the shell when it exploded, the Vietnamese-language People's Army newspaper reported.

Phong and three others died.

Many Vietnamese salvage scrap metal from discarded and lost ordinance from the Vietnam War, despite the risk.

Local authorities in November said three similar explosions killed at least eight people and injured eight others.

• IRAN QUAKES KILL AT LEAST 11, INJURE DOZENS IN VILLAGES.

TEHRAN, Iran — Two earthquakes struck several villages in northeastern Iran today, killing at least 11 people and injuring dozens, Iranian television reported.

A 5.4 preliminary magnitude quake hit the Khorasan province villages of Quchan, Shiravan, Sadval and Nayshapur. It hit at 1:24 p.m., and it was followed 40 minutes later by a 6.1 magnitude quake.

An earthquake of 6 magnitude can cause severe damage in populated areas.

• BHUTTO LOSES PRIME MINISTER'S JOB, WINS PARLIAMENT SEAT.

LAHORE, Pakistan — Hurt by voter apathy and political scandal, former Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto's party suffered a resounding defeat in parliamentary elections, according to results announced today.

Monday's vote was called after the president dismissed Bhutto on corruption charges.

Set to become Pakistan's next prime minister was Nawaz Sharif, who has held the position before.

He, too, was ousted for allegations of corruption.

• LA COUNTY WITHDRAWS REWARD TO HONOR COSBY'S REQUEST.

LOS ANGELES — Honoring a request from Bill Cosby that no taxpayer money be used, Los Angeles County withdrew a $12,500 reward Tuesday for information leading to the arrest and conviction of his son's killer.

The Board of Supervisors dropped the offer in a 5-0 vote.

Ennis Cosby, 27, was shot to death Jan. 16 while changing a tire along a road. The county posted the reward days later.

• US ARMY'S TOP ENLISTED MAN CHARGED WITH SEXUAL ASSAULT.

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Army's top enlisted man has stepped down from a panel investigating sexual harassment after a retired female sergeant major accused him of sexual assault and harassment.

Sgt. Maj. Brenda L. Hoster said she went public with her allegations after months of inaction by the Pentagon and only after Gene C. McKinney, the man she accuses of misconduct, was appointed to the panel.

• STATE OBJECTS TO REQUEST TO COVER COSTS IN CITADEL CASE.

CHARLESTON, S.C. — Lawyers for the state and the Citadel asked a judge not to grant roughly $5.8 million in fees and other costs to lawyers who waged a four-year battle to get women into the military college.

The amount represents "grossly duplicative and excessive hours, billed at rates far above those normally paid in South Carolina," Citadel attorneys said in papers filed in federal court last week.

Courts have continued to say that the standard to determine whether fees are reasonable is the degree of success in the case.

Task force helps EMTs handle daily job stress

▶ Whom to contact. For more information about the Critical Incident Stress Debriefing Team, contact Juli Eichem at 537-6333 or Terry Pfannenstiel at 587-4310.

CYNTHIA NEILL
staff reporter

Sirens wail as ambulances and patrol cars race toward the scene of an accident. Pressure mounts as the workers near their destination. Stress levels are exceedingly high.

In response to the demands placed on emergency personnel in Riley county, the Critical Incident Stress Debriefing Team was created.

"Emergency personnel in their daily lives see and experience events that are out of the ordinary," Terry Pfannenstiel, clinical coordinator for the team, said.

"Most people in the general population don't see someone die, for example. These people work with it every day," Pfannenstiel said.

Because of their work circumstances, these emergency personnel experience what is called a cumulative stress reaction. The build-up of stress comes from dealing with critical incidents on a daily basis.

Pfannenstiel defines critical incidents as any event in the line of duty that has a stressful effect proficient enough to overwhelm the usually effective coping skills of an individual or group. The effect on the individual has the capacity to decrease function in some fashion.

"One of the things that I want people to know is that first responders are a special kind of breed," Pfannenstiel said.

"They are able, because of who they are and because of past experiences, to do a very difficult job, and I think that's because of their personality makeup," he said.

Pfannenstiel also said that because of their personalities and jobs, these individuals may not realize the stress that is placed on them. He said he sees emergency workers as normal people having normal responses to abnormal events.

The Critical Incident team debriefings last one to two hours. Ideally, Pfannenstiel said they should take place as soon as possible after the incident. All individuals directly involved in the incident meet with two mental health professionals. Also included in the debriefing is an uninvolved peer member who can identify with the other members.

The actual debriefing involves working through a number of structured steps from the non-emotional stage to a re-entry stage. Pfannenstiel points out that this process should not be considered psychotherapy. It simply allows critically stressed workers to work through their problems and get back on the job.

All people experience stress on some level. This stress can be expressed through cognitive, emotional, behavioral and physical signs such as confusion, guilt, denial or fatigue.

The team had a different start during the floods of 1993. Families that were displaced by the floods were housed in the K-State Student Union, and needed an outlet for the emotions that they were experiencing.

"The team was an offshoot of the floods of '93," Pfannenstiel said.

A group, called the Mental Health Crisis Response Team, was formed to aid Riley county families affected by the floods. Part of this group organized what has now become the Critical Incident Stress Management Teams.

The CISM teams also hold continuing education meetings at 7 p.m. on the first Wednesday of every month. The meetings are held at the First Congregational Church on Poyntz Avenue and are open to the public. Pfannenstiel said that all college majors are welcome, but that psychology, social work, pre-med and criminal justice students might find the meetings especially interesting.

The debriefing teams work with all emergency personnel in Riley, Geary and Pottawatomie counties. The debriefings are confidential and free of charge to those involved in critical incidents.

7-foot metal sunflowers adorn library addition

Aluminum sunflowers are blooming at Farrell Library.

Six, 7-feet-tall sunflowers now adorn the southeast entrance arch of Farrell Library. The sculptures were created by Kent Bloomer, professor of architecture and ornamentation at Yale, and his student assistant, Martina Choi, graduate student in architecture at Yale.

The sunflower stalks are on a screen made of cast aluminum leaves, which is 20 feet long. The bottom of the sculpture is a foliated scroll decorated with sunflower blossoms.

The foliated scroll is a basic cultural symbol representing the cycles and energies of all forms of life. It dates back to the Egyptians, Bloomer said.

"It was taken out of modern architecture, and we're putting it back in, feeling it should be there," he said.

The large leaves and sunflowers were made by repousé, which means they are formed by hammering. Bloomer created the sunflowers and another student assistant, Ben Northrup, graduate student in architecture at Yale, created the large leaves, Bloomer said.

The background leaves were made from castings, and the scroll was made by a metal rolling device, he said.

The sculpture was assembled at Farrell Library with the help of Kevin Davis, a metal worker with Mogensen Steel.

"I loved working on this. It's a beautiful piece of artwork, and I don't get many chances to do a lot of ornamental metal work," Davis said.

The design of the sculpture went through several stages. Cardboard models of the entrance, called marquettes, were made. This was done to get an idea of how the sunflower design would look with the architecture, Choi said. She also completed detailed 12-feet-tall drawings of the sunflower sculpture design.

"This is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity. I consider it part of my education," Choi said. "I learned a lot from the people with the actual skills."

Choi took a year off from school to work on the project serving as the projects designer to Bloomer, the principal designer.

"The principal designer designs the piece, but Martina's voice found its way into the design, in particular the screen behind the sunflowers," Bloomer said.

The architecture of the addition and Bloomer's work on its ornamentation were influenced by architect H. H. Richardson and his style, Prairie Richardson, Bloomer said.

"Richardson believed buildings and important places should ▶ Columns are opinions expressed by the columnists. The opinions are not necessarily the opinions of the Collegian.

Black History Month opens opportunities

K-State is offering you yet another opportunity to broaden your horizons and learn.

The list of activities for Black History Month is extensive and exciting. Through lectures, plays, music and other events, students will be given the privilege of sharing in a culture most of them don't know about first hand.

This weekend, you can stop by Forum Hall in the K-State Student Union and check out Spike Lee's "Get On the Bus," which first came out on the one-year anniversary of the Million Man March. The show starts at 7 p.m. Friday and Saturday.

Workshops and panel discussions throughout the month center on topics like "African Americans and Healthy Choices" on Monday and "Black Entrepreneurship: The Pursuit of Power" on Tuesday.

Also on Tuesday is the dramatic play "Camp Logan," about the plight of a black regiment during the Civil War that was court-martialled for fighting Jim Crow laws. Make time at 7:30 p.m. to go to McCain Auditorium and learn about this true story.

On Feb. 21, leave 4 p.m. free to go to Union 212 for a poetry reading by Tim Sibeles, author of "Hurdy-Gurdy."

This is just the tip of the iceberg. There are posters all over campus advertising dances, banquets and movies designed to honor the black experience in the United States and at K-State.

Black History Month is not just for African Americans. It's also an opportunity for all people to learn about a group of Americans that has shaped and contributed to history in incalculable ways.

The agenda for K-State's celebration reflects this. In addition to award banquets and balls, it's full of events that teach and explore the black experience in ways anyone can relate to.

MARY RENEE SMITH

MARY RENEE SMITH is a junior in theater. You can e-mail your comments to Mary at (mojo@ksu.edu).

What's green and red and goes 100 miles per hour? A frog in a blender.

We've all told this joke. Probably the first time we told it was when we were in second grade. We learned the joke and others like it from some other child in class who had learned a bunch of jokes from his older brother. Some of the jokes we didn't understand, but we told them anyway. And when we had told all of those jokes, we made up new ones.

After extensive research, (I asked my mother) I have concluded a child's sense of humor develops somewhere between 7- and 8 years old. At least this is the time when a child begins to tell jokes; whether the jokes are remotely funny is another matter altogether.

Why did the chicken cross the road? Because the light turned green.

From the moment my first child was born, I feared the time when he would reach this age. This deep-seated panic is the result of teen-age trauma.

I can vividly remember suffering through my youngest brother's seemingly endless supply of stupid jokes when he was 7 years old. I was mortified as he would tell one dumb joke after another to adults at family dinners, who for some reason found the whole event amusing.

As a teen-ager, I was paralyzed with fear when my friends would come over and my brother would say, "Wanna hear a joke?"

Why did the frog cross the road? Because it was the chicken's day off.

Upon the birth of my own child, I vowed no child of mine would ever tell a stupid joke to another human being.

I had forgotten this solemn promise made almost eight years ago, until a few days ago. My boyfriend, two sons and I drove to Kansas City during the weekend to visit our families and (the real reason) to see "Star Wars: A New Hope" in a really cool theater.

During the 2-1/2 hour car trip, between "Are we almost there?" and "I have to go potty," my 8-year-old son, Thomas, told jokes he had heard at school.

What is the end of everything? The letter G.

I found myself laughing as Thomas told one joke after another. I was amazed to discover children are telling the same jokes now as they did when I was a child.

Thomas' material was an enchanting mix of witty jokes and mind-teasing riddles. His delivery was flawless. He was genuinely enjoying making other people laugh. And then ...

What is yellow and brown? A cloud in a spaceship.

I had a terrifying flashback. There I was, an awkward 14-year-old with all of my friends sitting in my parents living room and my little brother was telling an unfunny, stupid joke with no end.

Why are fire trucks big? So the firefighters can wear their coats.

I remembered my vow. I must put an end to the stupid jokes.

How do you stop an 8-year-old with a joke to tell without hurting his feelings?

I used the only weapon I had. A tool I am sure parents have used for generations. Throughout the ages parents have developed a great pool of wisdom to be used in just such an emergency.

"Okay, that's enough. Let's settle down now and try to get some rest. We've got a big day tomorrow," I said.

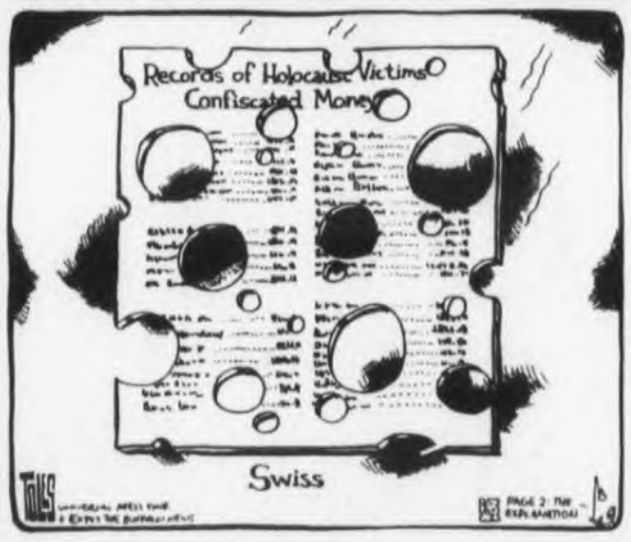
When we arrived at my mother's house, Thomas proceeded to share his jokes with my mohter. The entire routine was repeated for my sister when she came home from work.

Were they supportive of my attempt to impose a ban on childish humor? Were they at all sympathetic to my overwhelming fear of stupid jokes?

No. Not even a tiny bit. They encouraged him. They laughed. I stood in shock as they asked him to repeat jokes. I could only stand by, helpless, as they told him new stupid jokes and riddles.

What is bigger than the universe, dead people eat it and if we ate it we would die? Nothing.

My mother, my own mother, contributed to the crime. My sister, whom I love and respect, was laughing at jokes so stupid it hurt.



Then I looked at Thomas, laughing as only a child can laugh, enjoying his time in the spotlight. I felt terrible for trying to keep this fun from him.

In the years to come I'm sure I will embarrass him much more than he could ever embarrass me with a few childish jokes.

He does need some new material though. So, if anyone knows any good, age-appropriate jokes, let me know.

Why did the car go slow? Because it was carsick.

▶ YOUR VIEWS

• COLUMNIST'S LOYALTY NEARS BLINDNESS.

Editor,

The dust from Todd Stewart's atrocious column hasn't even settled, and you still decided to print Valeri Crenshaw's attack on Bob Lutz on Thursday.

Last Monday, Stewart, a collegiate sports columnist, wrote the most scathing indictment of a human being in recent memory, and the Collegian published it anyway.

However, when a professional sports writer in our state's largest city dared to criticize K-State's sacrosanct football program, Crenshaw calls him arrogant, ignorant and stupid.

How ironic this is, especially because Lutz has a legitimate case. Is Crenshaw so incredulous because the Wildcats won two bowl games and lost two bowl games in four years? Is it because K-State's biggest win was a tie three years ago against Colorado? Are feats such as these sufficient to deem Bill Snyder "absolutely the most successful architect of football"? Few coaches in any sport deserve such commendation, and Snyder would admit he isn't even close.

Nevertheless, Crenshaw would have us believe that the K-State vs. Wyoming game in 1993 was the greatest athletic spectacle since Jesse Owens decimated Nazi Germany at the Berlin Olympics.

Good writers know that name-calling begins when substantive argument ends. It is no wonder, then, that a columnist's objectivity was superseded by her blind loyalty to a second- or third-tier college football program.

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

RUSSELL FORTMEYER is a senior in architectural engineering. You can e-mail comments to Russell at (rmf@ksu.edu).

It seemed everywhere you looked this past weekend, somebody was playing jazz.

Pity those poor fools who lined up to watch "Star Wars: A New Hope" (it will be showing next week, right?) and missed one of the few opportunities to hear world-class jazz in Manhattan for next to nothing.

Friday night, some members of the Count Basie Orchestra, with a little help from a couple of New York Voices, packed the house at Auntie Mae's Parlor for a guest set with Wasted Potential.

After Saturday night's incredible concert, Brad Leali wailed on his saxophone at 12th Street Pub with a looser version of Wasted Potential.

Both nights were unforgettable: are we actually listening to some professionals improvisationally jamming in an Aggieville club? It was truly something that deserved a passionate response.

And, yet, the majority of the usual rag-tag patrons of nightlife in the Little Apple almost couldn't care less.

While there is a definite loyal jazz enthusiast crowd frequenting Mae's, the mostly greek (pardon the stereotype, but am I wrong? It's not like I said plaid-wearing) crowd at 12th Street was more intent on its weekly vapid social scene than to take some time to jam with the band, let alone dance.

Go to a place like Chicago, or even our own Kansas City, and club patrons are much more serious.

Admittedly, the physical structure of Mae's is such that a live band almost performs unto itself — secluded from half the bar crowd enough to drift into obscure background music.

At least the club and its fans support the music, which does manage to waft into the darkened corners of the cavernous basement.

BILL KRAAI/Collegian

The 12th Street arrangement worked nicely; it was hard to miss the quintet jamming inside as you passed the club on the street. The free admittance lured you in, too.

But perhaps it is this free admission (or $1 admission, whatever) that keeps patrons from respecting what they are patronizing. In a Chicago club, a $10 admission is a serious business investment.

I'm not about to suggest any act that plays an Aggieville club warrants an extravagant admission, but $5 is not out of the question in comparison to a movie.

It also wouldn't hurt to close the alcohol bar while keeping the club hopping into the wee hours (say 5 a.m.) for those die-hards who would rather jam than eat pancakes at Village Inn.

Especially to hear Leali (I know I've effused praise on him, but, gosh, he's just so good) smoke the pads and burn the reed off his sax to a mesmerized group of front-row fans.

Maybe some dear jazz soul could start an underground club with a secret password, where the music can get some respect. The basement club at Harry's Uptown Supper Club seems to work some magic by setting itself apart from the conventional Aggieville crowd and the disrespect that comes with it.

In Aggieville, it's too easy to club-hop to see and be seen. When folks go out in this town, it's generally not to meet a big group and hunker down in one place.

Going out in this town usually means meeting up with different crowds at different clubs during the course of the night. I would say this is no way to form tradition, but in some weird way, this has become a tradition.

It's a tradition that is keeping in line with our generational quality of impatience. Don't tie me down.

It also has a strange parallel to jazz music itself — with the sometimes rambling improvisational quality of the music that can be as flighty as any 20-year-old. Perhaps that's the paradox within this issue; the very youthful patrons of jazz music are encouraged by its distinct style into an itinerant lifestyle.

Not that most college students don't already feel the need for freedom and an independence from family, which might explain the appeal of the art form of jazz to our generation.

If only more of us were listening.

• READER BELIEVES FACULTY RESERVE STALL FEE INCREASE IS JUSTIFIED

Editor,

I would like those owners of reserved stalls who are complaining about the fee increase to try to remember the most basic concept of this campus: We (the students) are the No. 1 and most important thing on this university. We have deliberately chosen this institution over all others to further our education. And the price for that is called tuition and fees (otherwise known as your salary).

Everything on this campus is here for us to gain the knowledge we need to accomplish a set goal. Those things are the tools necessary for an education. Things like books, classrooms, buildings, computers, professors, faculty, staff and yes, parking spaces are all tools we need to achieve this goal.

Once the members of the faculty and staff realize that they are only here on the account of us, then things will go smoothly. But it seems as if the tools of our costly education have elevated themselves as being more important than the primary users of a university: the students.

Being able to park no more than 10 feet from a building entrance shouldn't be a privilege for a tool. They should be used for the students. But if you feel that you need to rise above the rest of us and park in a spot with your name on it, then it should cost you large amounts of money.

In essence, you are saying, "I, the tool, am now more important than you, the student." For the right to say that every semester, I think it should cost you a big portion of the money we pay you.

It becomes very clear when a member of the staff here at K-State says, "I think that there should be less student parking on campus. They should park over by Bramlage and walk over or be bussed," that the faculty and staff have lost touch with the basic concept of this campus.

We should be finding ways for this campus to be more accessible to students, not finding ways for our faculty and staff to have it better than us.

I'm all for the fee increase for reserved parking spots, and I'm not against those who have them. If a tool can afford the cost of saying that their Lexus or 3000GT is more important that a student's automobile … more power to them.

But for them to say that and then turn around and complain about the financial cost of it it absurd. Pay your fee and park there. But don't belittle us by whining how much is cost to say you're top dog.

• CAMPUS PARKING PROBLEM WILL NOT BE SOLVED BY COMPLAINING

Editor,

It seems like every year we hear the same old whining about parking spaces on campus. As a former student I have noticed that no matter how much one gripes about this issue, there seems to be nothing done about it. Therefore, is it worth it to hash out the same issue year after year? I don't think so!

• K-STATE WOMEN'S BASKETBALL TEAM DESERVES MORE EXPOSURE

Editor,

Congratulations! Finally some more coverage for the women's basketball team. The Collegian consistently prints stories about the men's basketball program, yet the women's team receives little exposure.

Why shouldn't the women get at least as much coverage as the men? It can't be because their record is worse. Come on folks, wake up! The women have been playing solid, exciting basketball and should get the kind of coverage they deserve.

Aren't stories run because of their news value? Keeping that in mind, isn't a win more newsworthy than a loss? Why don't you give the women's team a break and consistently report about them as you do the men's team? They're doing their part, why don't you do yours?

TWENTY-TWO-YEAR-OLD BILL WOLFE washes dishes at Little Apple Brewing Co. Wolfe graduated from Wamego High School in 1994, and he has worked with Big Lakes Developmental Center Inc. to gain employment training.

MORE THAN A SONG AND DANCE MAN

Most students have seen Bill Wolfe around town, dancing in Aggieville or cheering at a K-State sporting event.

His willingness to be the first person on the dance floor and his enjoyment of a good beer are familiar to anyone who frequents local bars.

But most don't know anything else about Wolfe. They don't know about his dish-washing job or his participation in the Special Olympics. Unless they have taken the time to talk to him, they don't know about Wolfe's sense of humor or his unrelenting positive attitude.

However, there are many people who do know these things about him. Wolfe has friends all over Manhattan who know his strengths and his weaknesses and are fiercely protective of him.

Darl Mast is one of Wolfe's friends. He helps look after him and is always open to a nighttime phone call from Wolfe, who might just want to chat. He also reminds him of daily details like shaving that might slip by unnoticed.

Mast is also the employment training specialist assigned to Wolfe by Big Lakes Developmental Center Inc.

"He doesn't look at me like staff anymore. We're friends," Mast said.

"We're good buddies, yeah," Wolfe agreed.

"We're friends, but we still gotta document everything," Mast said with a smile. "If there's a problem, I'm more like a confidante, so he doesn't feel like he's gonna get in trouble."

Mast helped Wolfe get his job washing dishes at the Little Apple Brewing Co. Mast and Wolfe had both picked up applications from all over town, and Wolfe filled out as much as he could. Mast filled out the rest and helped turn them back in.

Tim Lane, the kitchen manager in charge of production at Little Apple, said Wolfe has a great attitude.

"The guy I fired that Billy replaced, I fired because he wouldn't show up," Lane said. "Billy shows up every day early. I don't have to worry about that shift directly. I can worry about someone else that didn't show up instead."

Wolfe is proud of his good work record. He takes a cab to work every weekday, arriving at 10:30 a.m. and washing dishes until 3 p.m.

Each day, he peers through the dish-room window, greeting the servers and asking whether the restaurant is busy.

"I do all the dirty work," he said. "You take it and run it through the dish machine, so it does all the dirty work. It's a fun job. Not."

Although the work is dirty, Wolfe likes Little Apple.

"It's a good place to work. The employees are

K-State student faces drug-related charges

CHRISTA CAREY
staff reporter

A K-State student was arrested twice last Friday evening.

Patrick J. Carey, junior in sociology, was initially arrested on a Riley County warrant for sale of cocaine.

"When he was arrested, police saw the need for a search warrant," Sgt. William Reece, the arresting officer, said. Four hours later, after a search of his apartment, Carey was also arrested for possession of a controlled substance with attempt to distribute.

"There's really nothing unusual about this case," Reece said.

Carey was caught in December, unknowingly, selling to an undercover police investigator. Carey was not arrested in December, because he was part of an ongoing police investigation.

"I've known some investigations to last many years," Reece said.

This case ended up going through rather quickly compared to most, Reece said.

Carey was able to post bail Friday and was released.

Carey is facing four felony counts and one misdemeanor. Two counts for sale of controlled substances, two counts for possession of controlled substance with attempt to distribute, and possession of drug paraphernalia.

Carey was unable to comment at press time.

percent of the $8 million budget and finances the overall operation of the K-State Student Union.

Also up for consideration this semester are fees for the Office of Student Activities and Services, Student Publications Equipment, Recreational Services, and Recreational Center Repair and Replacement.

Breeding said the last fee to be discussed will be the Student Activity Fee, which budgets money for academic competition teams, college councils, campus-wide organizations and institutional services.

REGENTS

policy decisions for the regents, then draft individual university budgets.

Graves put enough money in his proposed budget to increase faculty salaries by an average of 3.5 percent.

Professors and regents officials have argued for years that it is harder to keep instructors and recruit new ones if salaries do not increase.

Pay at regents' universities has consistently ranked behind pay at chosen peer universities in other states.

"We are competing in a national market for the very best faculty," Eugene Hughes, Wichita State University's president, told the subcommittee.

But Edmonds said he has heard stories about prospective professors who cannot find a job because there are many applicants for open positions.

"It sounds to me like people are standing in line to be college professors," he said.

Hughes replied: "By and large, we want to bring the best faculty here and not just a warm body."

Edmonds also criticized the regents' selection of peer universities, noting that, for example, the list for the University of Kansas and Kansas State University includes institutions in Oregon and North Carolina, where the cost of living is higher.

The list does not include any institutions from Missouri, Nebraska or Texas, he said.

"My suspicion is that the attraction of this is that the institutions in the East or West are more expensive and have bigger budgets and make us look more needy," he said. "At least I don't see Harvard, and I'm thankful for that."

Regents Chairwoman Phyllis Nolan said the board uses a complex formula for choosing peers.

It is designed to include institutions in states of similar size and with economies similar to Kansas.

the dam," West said.

There was really no question of what had to be done, Weidhaas said, after seeing the amount of weathering that took place in the past three years.

West said it would be like having termites in a home. They would eat the foundation, and the entire house would fail.

In this case weathering would undercut an 18-inch thick piece of concrete that protects the dam. Without the repairs, another spillway release of longevity would compromise the dam.

The area being repaired is the first 1,500 feet off of the concrete apron stretching to the south and east of the dam.

The process began this past November and is expected to be finished this summer. The cost for the repairs is just more than $1 million, Weidhaas said.

The repair amount may seem large when standing alone, but when considering that since its completion in 1963 it has prevented more than $518 million in flood damages, it's a small price to pay.

Another effect that the floods have had on the spillway is the discovery of a primitive shark that lived in marine water more than 250 million years ago. Just beyond the 1,500 feet being covered is where the teeth and bone that supports a shark's gill was found.

"Where the fossils were found will not be disturbed or bothered. It's beyond the 1,500 feet," said Dale Forge, project manager for the Army Corps of Engineers.

Other aspects that will not be disturbed are the options available to visitors. Geology classes visiting the site, elementary and high-school students touring the area, and viewing of the spillway will remain the same.

be built to look like they're going to last forever," he said. "Buildings should look like what they represent, like justice and knowledge."

The use of local species of plants and animals was an important part in designing the ornamentation design for Farrell Library.

"I love the ornamental artwork being included," Bob Kreger, Farrell building manager and project coordinator, said. "It bridges a time span in architecture and helps incorporate the 1927 building with the present building by continuing in that style."

Building ornamentation, including sculpture and stone carvings, is not a high priority on most building projects, Choi said.

"This kind of work is just not done today. So it's just kind of a gift that Tom Beeby commissioned this," Choi said. "I'm hoping I get the chance to do this more often, but I wouldn't be surprised if I don't get to do it again in my life."

Bloomer was commissioned by Hammond, Beeby and Babka, Inc. out of Chicago. The firm is working with Brent Bowman and Associates on the $30-million Farrell expansion.

Swartzendruber exemplifies basketball play with hustle, hard work

DANA LEHNER
staff reporter

Hustle, team play and hard work are all words that describe K-State's point guard Aaron Swartzendruber. But maybe the best word to describe him is overachiever.

Recruited by former coach Dana Altman out of Kalona, Iowa, Swartzendruber was Iowa's Mr. Basketball his senior year. Swartzendruber edges out heavily-recruited Kansas forward Raef LaFrentz. However, his future at K-State was hazy when Altman left for Creighton and in stepped Tom Asbury. Asbury and his staff turned out to be a blessing in disguise, though.

"They have had a huge impact on me," Swartzendruber said. "I can't describe it. I am just thankful they gave me a shot to stay and play. Coach Asbury has helped me with my confidence so much. He really knows how to handle players, and the assistants all helped me out a lot individually with my shooting and watching tape."

Swartzendruber has become known for his non-stop hustle attitude and is usually seen on the floor scrapping for a ball. Most of the time he even comes away with it. But a lot of people questioned whether Swartzendruber would even see quality minutes on the floor.

"Hard work does pay off," Swartzendruber said. "There were a lot of doubters of my ability. I never really doubted myself, but I wondered sometimes if I could really play.

"I told myself that if didn't give a 100 percent and give it a real shot that I would always regret it," Swartzendruber said. "During the summer after my freshman year and at the beginning of my sophomore year I felt a lot more comfortable. I felt then that I could succeed."

Succeed is exactly what he did last season as he became one of the top sixth men in the Big 8.

This year Swartzendruber has stepped into the spotlight taking over the reins as K-State's leader on the floor.

Expectations are high, but he doesn't expect things just from himself. He expects things from the whole team.

"I don't really have any personal goals," Swartzendruber said. "My main goal is to just get us back to the NCAA tournament. I want us to get back and this year get past the first round and deeper into the tournament."

One reason Swartzendruber has had success this season is back-court mate Chris Griffin. Griffin pushes Swartzendruber everyday in practice and makes him a better player.

"Chris helps me out not only in games, but in practice as well," Swartzendruber said. "He makes me a lot better, and I make him better because we push each other all the time. It is also nice when he can come into the game and handle the ball and share some of the responsibilities."

The practice has paid off as well. Swartzendruber is pleased with his performance in the season so far.

"It is going pretty good," Swartzendruber said. "The first couple of games were huge for me. I learned a lot about being responsible, getting everybody in their places and running the team."

Swartzendruber has been able to excel at this level for K-State and has let basketball become a big part of his life. In fact, the coaches have had such an affect on him that he would like to get into coaching after his tenure with the Cats is over.

"I would like to get involved with coaching after college," Swartzendruber said. "If the right situation came up, I would love to take advantage of it. The coaches have helped me succeed and have had a huge impact on me. They made me realize that I would like to do the same thing."

TO END THE STRUGGLE

Cats need to push up intensity in offense

STORY BY JEREMY KELLEY • PHOTO BY JILL JARSULIC

K-STATE'S MARK YOUNG works the ball around Missouri guard Dibi Ray Saturday in the Hearnes Center. The Cats lost 85-63.

Nothing anybody says can change it — the Cats are struggling offensively.

"That's what it boils down to pretty much," Coach Tom Asbury said. "Not entirely, but certainly in large part, we've struggled offensively."

But rather than folding like a pitch tent, Asbury and the men's basketball program still keeps pressing on.

"We're not going to back down," Asbury said. "I'm going to tinker with things until I can get it right or until we can get a win."

The Cats continue Big 12 play tonight against the Oklahoma State Cowboys in Stillwater, Okla.

"It's tough down there," Asbury said. "Two of our poorer games have been down there, and they're really tough at home."

Both teams are coming off disappointing losses. K-State fell to a less-than-healthy Missouri squad, 85-63, while Oklahoma State dropped a barn-burner at Baylor 78-77.

Eight games into the conference, K-State is still searching for its first Big 12 win. No doubt the Cats have struggled, but so has their next opponent.

"I know they're struggling, but I think the same could be said for the Cowboys," Oklahoma State Coach Eddie Sutton said. "I know they're certainly a lot better than their record would indicate. I sure feel that way."

Despite K-State's record in the conference, Sutton said his Cowboys would not look past the struggling Cats.

"I don't think our basketball team would look past anyone right now," Sutton said. "We're down to eight scholarship players, and we're just not very deep. There's not any team in the Big 12 that you can look by."

The Cats go toe-to-toe with a team anchored on defense and hustle. K-State has won in Stillwater just once since 1989. The Cowboys are currently 10-1 at home and Asbury said defense is the key to their success.

"They've always defended awfully well in their games," he said. "They're tough defensively at home, which I would say is probably the main thing that helps them."

In his three years at K-State, Asbury said he has never been in this type of a slump. Even more so, Asbury said dating back to his high-school days, he has never experienced a streak like this.

"My first year here was probably the hardest year," Asbury said. "I don't even want to know how you're supposed to put a spin on this thing."

So what can the Cats do?

"All we have to do is believe. We believe that we can win these games," guard Aaron Swartzendruber said. "We're going to win if we keep up our emotional intensity level, and we believe that if we keep playing hard things will turnaround."

Women's basketball needs to carry intensity into Oklahoma State

SUN DEE MILLS
staff reporter

Coach Deb Patterson has a lot to smile about these days.

The K-State women's basketball team, 11-7 overall and 4-4 in the Big 12, are undefeated in their last eight home appearances.

"Relative to the league and the type of play we've seen, I'm pleased with where we're at right now," Patterson said.

The Cats will take on the Oklahoma State Cowgirls at 7 tonight at Bramlage Coliseum.

"We feel great about playing at Bramlage," Patterson said. "Our fans are helping us to gain a home-court presence. I don't think Kansas State could talk about that before, and now I think it's a reality."

The Cowgirls, 13-6, 5-4, are just a step above the Cats in the Big 12 standings. With tonight's game and looking ahead to Saturday's game at Oklahoma, Patterson said this is a big week for the team.

"We've got the home game against a great opponent, and then you take the road against an opponent that's ranked below us, but it is a game we need to win," Patterson said. "They're both programs that can prevent us from going where we want to go."

The Cats' goal is the NCAA tournament, and Patterson said with these wins, the tournament was possible.

"The first five teams in this league have a chance for the NCAA Tournament, and we're in a position where this is a possibility," Patterson said. "OSU is a tournament team, and they've beat opponents we haven't beaten. We've got to be 100 percent prepared for them."

Cowgirl coach Dick Halterman coached his 500th win last week, supporting Patterson's statement that OSU is a well-coached team.

"OSU likes to take you out of what you like to do," Patterson said. "If you take something away from them, they will use a different attack. We must be flexible and versatile during the full 40 minutes."

Cowgirl forwards Renee Roberts and Cheri Edwards are players the Cats will be watching. Roberts had 27 points and 8 rebounds against Baylor Saturday, and Edwards contributed 11 points to the 82-68 victory. Guards Kourtney Bower and Sarah Boyd also scored in the double-digits, and the Cowgirls shot 60 percent from the field.

"We've got to contend with their two post players," Patterson said. "They've got good size, and they've got the ability to penetrate and shoot the three."

Try the NBA for dynamic full-court action

In the wake of one of the worst slumps in K-State history, I ask that we turn our eyes to another basketball venue — the NBA.

And when the NBA comes to mind, one team and only one team comes to mind — the Chicago Bulls.

VIEWPOINT

JEREMY KELLEY

JEREMY KELLEY is a sophomore in print journalism. You can e-mail your comments to Jeremy at (weasal1@ksu.edu).

It's almost as if there are 28 high - school teams and one NBA team. The Bulls simply dominate the league, and there is no other team that can play with the team of the 1990s. There is not a team in the NBA that can keep the Bulls from posting their fifth title in the past seven years.

The Bulls are certainly on the way to their second consecutive 70-plus-win season, even without playboy Dennis Rodman. The Bulls are 10-1 without this rebounding god.

Of course, when you talk about the Bulls, you can't fail to mention Michael Jordan. Jordan has proven he can do everything except underwater basket-weaving. Again, Jordan and the Bulls are making a mockery of the NBA, posting 30- and 40-point outings every night, even if he has indeed turned into a jump-shooter, George Karl.

In their most recent burlesque, the Bulls, mainly Jordan, slapped the Seattle Supersonics silly. Jordan was the only Bull in double figures, and he had more points than the rest of the Bulls combined.

Jordan is running away with a record ninth scoring title, averaging four-plus points better than the onlookers. Furthermore, he is the only player above the 30-points-per-game mark.

Mr. Everything has to be the odds-on favorite for the league's most valuable player. The numbers speak for themselves.

● For Rookie of the year — my vote goes to Allen Iverson.

He is struggling with turnovers, but he has to be the favorite in this category. The guy is a human highlight reel, for crying out loud.

There is a little competition, though. Minnesota Timberwolves point guard Stephon Marbury is a more complacent floor leader but can't do the things Iverson can do on the floor.

Another player that could be in the running come the end of the season is Toronto Raptor small forward Marcus Camby. Camby has had an effect on an already struggling expansion team. But for some reason, Camby can't get a spot in the starting lineup, probably because he keeps getting injured.

Iverson will win for one reason — he has made a bigger splash in his transition from college to the NBA.

Again, the numbers speak for themselves. Iverson is averaging nearly 23 points a game, seven assists and four rebounds. The only spot to frown upon is his stats — 4.8 turnovers. That number might haunt him in the long run.

Marbury is averaging barely 16 points, 7 assists, and not even one rebound (.9). Just sign up Iverson right now.

● Coach of the Year — Doug Collins of the Detroit Pistons. Under Collins, the Pistons have made a complete turnaround from a year ago, mainly because of Grant Hill, but Collins has laid the groundwork that puts the Pistons just 7-1/2 games behind the untouchable Chicago Bulls.

In Collins' first season last year, the Pistons posted a 46-36 record and went back to the playoffs for the first time since 1991-92. However, the Pistons were defeated in the first round by the Orlando Magic.

This year, however, it's a different story. The Pistons are on pace to win 60 games. Barely halfway through the season, the Pistons are sitting on a 33-12 record behind Collins, NBA legend Joe Dumars and, of course, Hill.

Collins has completely changed a fledgling Detroit program into the successful program of old, and Collins is sure to take the Coach of the Year award.

TARA BRECKENRIDGE, junior in animal science, and Jim Crawford throw hay to cattle on Crawford's farm. Breckenridge, Crawford's newest tenant, was learning the daily chores that she will help roommates with while Crawford is out of town working.

COWS EAT their evening meal, at right, while Crawford works in the background. Below, Erin O'Donnell, freshman in veterinary medicine, and Breckenridge spend a few minutes chatting before O'Donnell leaves for the Rec Complex. Thanks to busy schedules, the three roommates and their landlord do not get to spend a lot of time together.

Farmer moonlights as landlord for student workers

Story by Heather Hollingsworth

Babies are born even on cold days. Jim Crawford can attest to that. Within three days five goats had been born. Despite the biting chill and temperatures in the mid-teens, Crawford labored away in the barn, making a pen for the kids and their mothers.

Crawford is frequently out of town, and it was only luck that kept his three tenants from spending their Saturday caring for the newborns. Crawford rents his four-bedroom farmhouse to students — preferably students with a farm background.

There were exceptions. "I've had city majors that were good too — that wanted to learn and know what it was all about," he said. "The city girls that have dogs and horses have a little more of a tendency to be interested."

Crawford's job as a welder requires him to travel extensively. That is why he began renting rooms in his four-bedroom house to college students during the early 1980s — a practice he plans to continue indefinitely. Raised on a farm north of Topeka, Crawford said the animals get in your blood.

"I don't really make any money like a big ranch would," he said. "If it's something you grew up on, it's just something you've got to have. It's like kids that grow up with their dads working on hot rods. They've got to have hot rods. I've got the cows instead of the hot rods."

When he is gone, his three renters — all female students — do the chores in exchange for a rent reduction of $5 per day. If the chores take more than half an hour, Crawford deducts $10 from the rent.

During his first years as a landlord, he said rowdy male renters caused problems.

"You would come back from a job, and the house would be a mess, and they wouldn't do chores," he said.

Plus, more females answer his ads because more women want to bring their horses to college, Crawford said.

"If you just run a blind ad, 'Roommate wanted: stalls and pastures for horses' you'll get maybe four-to-one tenants calling that are girls," he said.

On this particular weekend, Crawford was in town and able to take care of the newborn goats. Yet, despite his lifetime of farm experience, the goats' closely spaced births came as a surprise.

"I had to go to Kansas City Wednesday to take a welding test. I wasn't gone more than two hours, and one of them has babies," Crawford said. "That's the way it goes around here. If I leave to go somewhere, that's when everything gets sick and has babies."

As he talked about the births, two of the newborn goats snuggled together. Their long, floppy ears made the 10-pound kids look like rabbits. The goat watching over them was not their mother, Crawford said. She had lost her babies.

Inside, chili was cooking. Crawford provided meat to his tenants and admitted another reason he didn't like male tenants.

"The guys don't like to cook, and I like good food," he said.

Busy schedules kept the roommates from eating together very often, but on this night three of them were together.

Erin O'Donnell, freshman in veterinary medicine, was planning to live in an apartment in town, but one week before she was to move, her apartment was destroyed by a natural gas explosion. Homeless, she stayed with her landlord until she discovered Crawford's farm.

O'Donnell and her 9-year-old yellow Labrador retriever, Daisy, now call the farm home.

"I wanted someplace that would let me have my dog, and since I'm a vet student, I liked having all these animals around to mess with," O'Donnell said.

O'Donnell said she is interested in specializing in exotic animals, and the farm offered opportunities for hands-on experience.

"Most of the action is going to be in the springtime, when all the babies come," O'Donnell said. "Until then, it's just feeding them."

Unlike O'Donnell, who had limited farm experience, Tara Breckenridge, junior in animal science, grew up on a farm, and for her, chores were nothing new.

"You get up and brush your teeth," she said. "I get up and do chores. Then I brush my teeth."

Breckenridge said she plans to live on the farm until her marriage in September of 1998.

"I don't like to move a lot," she said.

She read about the farm in the newspaper. Five minutes after talking to Crawford over the phone, she went over to look at the farm. The same afternoon she signed a contract.

Crawford's third tenant is Stacy Merica, who moved to the farm in spring 1994. Merica was a junior in veterinary medicine before she chose to pursue a career in human medicine. Her experience at the farm has run the full gamut — from dehorning to an emergency caesarean section.

"She's probably delivered more goat babies than I have," Crawford said. "Seems like when I'm gone, something dies or get sick. Of course if I'm off in Iowa, all I can do is talk to her over the phone and get one of the neighbors to give her a hand if she's in a real bind."

Merica has witnessed success and failure.

She described her first emergency caesarean section as a lost cause.

"After we got in there, the babies were already dead, so there was nothing we could do to revive them, and the mom, she had crashed too," she said.

Crawford was gone from February until early June last spring, and Merica was the only one at the farm to do chores.

She estimated she delivered between eight and 10 kids in his absence. Merica, who was living in town at the time, grossed almost $300 per month.

Living on the farm isn't all work. Crawford taught Merica to ski at Tuttle Creek Reservoir, and the two were planning a trip to Aggieville that night.

"Stacy drinks and I drive," Crawford said. "That's our little deal."

"Tell her what kind of beer us real men drink."

"O'Doul's," she said.

"That's right. Us real men drink O'Doul's."

BRECKENRIDGE gets some pointers from Jim Crawford while milking a goat. Crawford's farm is home to several goats, cows and horses.

Live it up.

Passionately is the only way to live life students were told Tuesday night.

One-hundred-seventy-seven students who attended "Job Market: Sold Out" Tuesday night in Forum Hall were given everything they needed to be successful — in a cardboard box.

"We have three things in here that I have seen that everyone wants, and we're going to give them away," said Tom Ryan, entrepreneur and author of "One More Try: A Story of Entrepreneurial Passion."

Ryan gave the students a great relationship, fitness and a million dollars.

But he said people had to take responsibility for these things; they can't just be handed to them.

"Most people aspire to be financially sound, but if we gave them these things, they'd blow it," Ryan said.

Ryan showed three separate slide shows set to music. The slides included images of unemployment lines, homeless people, happy families, stressed-out business people, and quotations and statistics. One statistic read that only 23 percent of the U.S. population older than 25 has college degrees.

"I have never read an article, never heard a person say 'Don't get an education.' Never heard it," Ryan said. "Yet, most don't do it for whatever reason.

"What do you have because of that? An edge. You have an edge. Because of your education you have an elite status," he said. "You are in a position of power."

Ryan said there is an 89-percent gap between the average earnings of a high-school graduate and someone with a college degree.

However, education is not the only factor in someone's success, he said.

"If someone can pull it off, there's usually five things — one, they're focused. They know where they're going. If you don't know where you're going, how will you know when you get there?

"Two, your efforts must be balanced;

Workshop addresses empowerment

JOHN HENDERSON
staff reporter

Jeneena Hubbard recited lines to a small audience at the start of an empowerment workshop called "Life, Liberty, and the Pursuit of Power," Tuesday night in the Union Little Theatre.

"Be careful when you talk with me, remind me not of slavery," she read. "If you will fight with me then take my hand."

The lines were taken from "A Black Woman Speaks," a monologue by playwright Beah Richards. Hubbard, a graduate student in speech and theater, read in near-darkness, the room lit by three tapered candles.

The workshop, hosted by Hubbard and Jawwad Abdulhaqq, junior in political science and former president of the Black Student Union, was meant to encourage discussion about empowerment and responsibility.

It was part of K-State's observance of Black History Month.

Hubbard said she felt the monologue, which continued to describe in riveting detail the historical difficulty black women have faced as individuals and as a people, was useful to the workshop subject.

"We need to acknowledge the past to understand our future," she said.

This applies not just to black women but any people who would take moral responsibility for their own actions, and the effect they have on others, she said.

Andrea Morris, freshman in marketing, spoke up on this point.

"We get caught up in our own dreams and goals, and we don't think about the hard truths of our situation," she said. "I mean, someone died so that I could go to college. This wasn't always something that people thought I had the right to do."

Hubbard said she agreed.

"There are peop out there that may say they're living," she said. "But they get caught up in their day-to-day routines and don't stop to ask, 'What am I doing to live?'"

Abdulhaqq, who is president and CEO of Full Circle Edutainment Inc., a service to provide speakers and entertainment to seminars and promotions, said his little brother is one of his primary motivations to stay positive.

"I know he's looking at me," he said. "This is something we have to remember to ask ourselves: What are we going to look back on and say, 'This is what we gave?'"

The lack of community, he said, hurts everyone.

Omar Davis, junior in psychology and industrial labor relations, offered his definition of what power is.

"To me, power is being able to influence just by example," he said. Davis said he knows people in his life are looking at him as an example, and he said that motivates him to be responsible as a role model.

Hubbard then asked the audience members if they thought people had a moral responsibility to watch out for others who might not be enjoying life, liberty and the pursuit of power as much as they might. Abdulhaqq answered with a definite yes.

"I feel like less of a man if I don't give back," he said. "It's hard to make changes in another person's life if you don't understand their situation. Whatever I do, I have my community in mind."

Hubbard reminded the audience that there were more than just the people around to think about, that history would be watching, too.

Abdulhaqq said taking responsibility is never easy, but for the sake of ourselves and for our ancestors, we all must take it.

"Real power comes from within," he said.

Think again. Other factors wear down the system

STORY BY YVONNE PEARSON • ILLUSTRATION BY ADRIAN FLEMING

Ulcers are not caused by emotional stress.

For almost a century, doctors said lifestyle factors such as stress and diet caused ulcers. New findings show this is not the case.

Dr. Earl J. Reppert, Lafene Health Center, said there is not one single antibiotic that is effective for all ulcers.

Even though evidence refutes the belief that stress and diet cause ulcers, several lifestyle factors are believed to play a role. These factors include cigarettes, caffeine, alcohol and physical stress.

Although emotional stress is no longer thought to be a cause of ulcers, people who have ulcers complain of an increase of pain when under emotional stress.

"Stress affects almost every condition there is and helping stress is definitely helpful with all kinds of medical illnesses," Reppert said. "I don't want people to think that they are causing their illness due to stress. A lot of times if people think that they are causing something, they tend to say 'Well, I shouldn't be that kind of person. I'm a weak person.' Usually it's just an infection."

An ulcer is a sore or lesion that forms in the lining of the stomach. It is caused by excess acid in the stomach. Drugs such as aspirin and ibuprofen make the stomach vulnerable to the harmful effects of acid. The most common kind of ulcer is related to a bacterial infection of the stomach lining.

Someone with an ulcer will usually feel discomfort in the upper abdominal region after eating. It can get worse as time goes by if it is not treated.

There are also new techniques for treatment. In the past, a doctor might put ulcer patients on a bland diet and tell them to reduce stress in their lives. They might also prescribe acid-blockers such as Tagamet HB, Zantac and Pepcid A.C.

Doctors still prescribe acid-blockers to help ease the pain of ulcers and to lower acid levels, but it has been found that a bland diet is not a good way to treat an ulcer. Patients who test positive for infection are treated with a combination of antibiotics for a two-week period.

Because emotional stress can make ulcer pains worse and can cause other medical problems, it might be a good idea to keep stress levels in control.

"We can't get away from stress," said Sherman Sisco, outpatient therapist at Pawnee Mental Health Center. "There's stress all around us. Getting up and going to work or school every day is stressful."

There are many ways to manage stress. Pawnee offers a stress management workshop for students and Manhattan residents.

Exercise, talking, writing problems down and accepting what cannot be changed are some ways to handle stress.

"Many of us think that we have control of everything in our lives. Each and every day surprises us when we can't control certain things," Sisco said.

Sisco said to not use alcohol or drugs as an outlet because they will not solve the real problem and are only temporary.

Other things someone can do to reduce stress are to get plenty of sleep, learn to relax, do things for others and prioritize time.

Sisco said the most important thing to do is to keep an eye on stress levels.

"It's easier to handle stress when it's at a one or two scale than when it gets to a full-blown scale of 10 or so. Ask for help when you're feeling very stressed out," Sisco said.

So what do you think?

"If this trial had video, you'd have network executives shooting themselves."

Robert Thompson, a professor of television at Syracuse University, regarding the conflict between the O.J. verdict and the State of the Union address

Viewers weigh options for breaking news

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — On one coast, a president and a once-a-year address about the very state of the nation.

On the other, the case that captivated the nation.

It was choreographed politics vs. unpredictable courtroom drama, a perfect example of the dichotomy between what America wants to be and what it might really be.

The national verdict, reflected on national television — in nearly every way, Simpson trumped Clinton.

Even for a media society, Tuesday night's dose of sensory overload created a ticking clock that left many wondering — viewers about what they'd be watching, network executives about what they'd put on the air.

Almost the instant President Clinton ended his State of the Union address on live network television, unanimous verdicts emerged from a no-television-allowed Santa Monica courtroom: O.J. Simpson was liable for the deaths of his ex-wife and her friend.

The evening seemed an ambiguous moment in the national attention span, a wrestling match of conscience. Of course the Clinton address was conventionally more important, but in the context of the past 2-1/2 years it hardly seemed the news Americans craved immediately.

"Let's be realistic. Who cares what the president has to say?" said James B. Twitchell, author of "Adcult USA," which explored how advertising and the national attention span interact.

"We know that we can find that out tomorrow what Clinton had to say. There is nothing necessary about listening to it," he said. "But there is something incredibly galvanizing about hearing what this jury has to say. It has to do with law, with race, with the fact that there are two Americas."

Tuesday's Simpson denouement contrasted starkly with the scene in a Los Angeles County courtroom in October 1995. On that day, a camera that had captured virtually all that transpired in Judge Lance Ito's court sent the live criminal verdict and Simpson's response to the world instantaneously.

Judge Hiroshi Fujisaki, determined to avoid the spectacle many said Ito's courtroom became, took no such chances.

He banned cameras from the outset and slapped a gag order on participants.

But even lacking live television, the hunger for information went on. On Tuesday night, it reached all the way to the presidency.

Much remained unresolved as 8 p.m. approached. Would the networks stay with President Clinton's State of the Union address? Would they cut away for talking heads delivering a videoless O.J. Simpson verdict? Would they split their screens and hedge their bets?

"You may be wondering what we're going to do at that point," NBC anchor Tom Brokaw said just before 8. "We're wondering that as well."

Clinton, who had already moved his address up a day to avoid competing with the Miss USA pageant, made no mention of the trial. Through sheer luck, he managed to avoid being interrupted by a verdict.

But in a way, it didn't matter. Though viewership was undoubtedly up in anticipation of the verdict, a good portion of the Americans who watched his speech were there only for Simpson.

For television, only one thing could have been worse.

"I'll tell you one thing," Robert Thompson, a professor of television at Syracuse University, said. "If this trial had video, you'd have network executives shooting themselves."

Student responses mixed about verdict

YVONNE PEARSON
staff reporter

Some students are still trying to reach their own verdicts in the O.J. Simpson civil trial. But the jury reached its verdict after deliberating for three days.

Students have opposing views on the verdict finding Simpson liable. Some think the verdict is fair, some disagree and some couldn't care less.

"I don't really care. For me personally it doesn't affect my life like others. It's not like a raise in taxes or anything," James Vaughn, sophomore in kinesiology, said.

Although some students do not care about the verdict, others have stronger opinions.

"I personally thought he was guilty, therefore I believe he owes the families what is due," Brandon Knowles, sophomore undecided, said.

One student said the families probably will not ever see the money.

"He's a smart African American man, and apparently he's covered all angles of his finances. They won't be able to get the money anyhow," Angie Dunn, senior in social work and family studies, said.

Dunn said she thinks it is unfair the family of Ronald Goldman is taking money from Simpson, which could be used for his children.

"It's a power and money thing," she said.

"They're taking money away from the kids. That's where the unfair treatment really lies, unfortunately."

value of Goldman's funeral and the loss of Goldman's companionship, to his parents. Nicole Brown Simpson's family did not seek compensatory damages.

The jury's findings of malice and oppression triggered a second phase of the trial to determine punitive damages — money assessed to punish Simpson.

Already, plaintiffs' attorneys have asked for, and received, Simpson's latest financial records in preparation for a punitive phase.

The jury reached the verdict after 17 hours of deliberations during three days — more than five times as long as the criminal jury deliberated.

That was on top of the 14 hours in three days that were interrupted Friday when the judge replaced the only black member for failing to disclose that her daughter was a secretary in the district attorney's office that prosecuted Simpson at his murder trial.

The final six-man, six-woman jury consisted of nine whites, one Hispanic, one Asian and one of Asian and black heritage.

In its last day of deliberations, the jury spent three hours listening to readbacks of some 200 pages of testimony focusing on Simpson's opportunity and motive. It heard testimony about Simpson's alibi, a bruising argument with his ex-wife and a limousine driver's time line.

Jurors were particularly attentive when they heard the testimony of limo driver Allan Park, the only witness whose testimony the jury at Simpson's murder trial asked to hear again before it acquitted him.

A central issue in the case was whether Simpson would have had time to kill two people at Nicole Brown Simpson's condo, dispose of a weapon and bloody clothes, and return home in time to meet the limousine at 11 p.m.

Park, who drove Simpson to the airport that night, was a virtual human time clock because he could account for every minute of his activity through cellular phone records, a car clock and his own watch.

During the reading of Park's testimony, at least six jurors took copious notes. Park testified he didn't see Simpson's Bronco when he pulled up in his limo and got no answer when he repeatedly rang the buzzer at Simpson's gate.

Jurors also heard portions of Simpson's testimony where he described what he was doing from 9:45 to 11 p.m. Plaintiffs contended the killings occurred between 10:35 and 10:45 p.m.

Simpson maintained he was in bed, showering, chipping golf balls and taking his dog for a walk around the time of the slayings.

The wrongful death case brought by the victims' families was an abbreviated version of the criminal trial — 41 days of testimony rather than 133 — but with key rulings that took away the cameras and racial fireworks, and with the addition of startling new evidence.

Most incriminating for Simpson were 31 photos of him wearing the same style Bruno Magli shoes that left bloody footprints at the crime scene.

And for the first time before any jury, Simpson took the stand, testifying for four days that he never killed anyone, and never once hit, kicked or beat his ex-wife. He was not sure how he cut his hand, suggesting he nicked himself wrestling with his son.

But the main themes of his defense remained: Simpson was the victim of an elaborate frame-up, and physical evidence and witnesses couldn't be trusted.

When the first picture of him wearing the Bruno Magli shoes was produced, Simpson called it a fake. Later, confronted with 30 more pictures taken the same day, Simpson said he did not recall ever owning such shoes.

And as the trial drew to a close, plaintiff attorneys took direct aim at Simpson's character, angrily portraying him as a coward trying to deny the undeniable. Attorney Daniel Petrocelli said, "There's a killer in this courtroom."

nice," he said. "Good food and good beer."

Wolfe has also washed dishes at Village Inn and Chicago Bar & Grille, but the hours were overwhelming at the former and the latter closed.

Before working in restaurants, Wolfe learned job skills at Big Lakes, where he took a class and worked on woodshop and janitorial crews.

"I used to work at Big Lakes. I'm glad I work here now," he said after work at Little Apple. "I'm glad I have a real job."

Wolfe is a success story for Big Lakes. He wasn't always so self-assured and integrated into the community.

He enrolled in the center when he was still a student at Wamego High School, where his hyperactivity caused him trouble.

"It was rough when he was younger," Brenda Wolfe, his mother, said. "He's changed a lot."

His parents tried many different medications prescribed for him, but nothing seemed to work until he was taken to the University of Kansas Medical Center and given a new, successful medication.

He graduated from Wamego in 1994, and moved to Big Lakes in Manhattan in 1995. He said he was grateful to his parents for letting him move.

"I told them, 'Thank you for letting me live in Manhattan,' and they said, 'You are old enough to do that,'" he said.

Wolfe flourished when he came to Manhattan. The first year he lived at Big Lakes he was voted Client of the Year and was chosen to be a carrier of the Special Olympics torch.

Then he successfully moved into the community, working in restaurants and living with two other Big Lakes clients at Chase Manhattan Apartments.

"That's a lot of our program — getting everyone integrated into the community," Shannon Jennings, Wolfe's case manager, said.

Jennings asked Wolfe if there was anything else he wanted in life.

"I have a job. I live in Manhattan. I don't think there's any more I want," he said. "I about have it all."

No. 1-ranked Hawks fall to MU in double overtime

ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Top-ranked Kansas ran out of great escapes Tuesday night.

Corey Tate picked up a loose ball near the free-throw line and scored with 5.6 seconds to go in the second overtime — and two seconds left on the shot clock — as Missouri handed the Jayhawks their first loss of the season, 96-94.

Kelly Thames had 24 points and 11 rebounds and Derek Grimm had 20 points for Missouri, 12-10, 4-6. Grimm fouled out in the first overtime and Thames fouled out with 1:15 to go in the second overtime.

It was the second consecutive overtime game for Kansas, which hasn't played much like the best team in the nation lately, especially with starting center Scot Pollard sidelined with a broken foot.

Before this game, Kansas, 22-1, 8-1, survived an overtime scare from Nebraska on Saturday and had close calls against Texas Tech and Colorado before that.

On the game-winner, Tyron Lee was stripped by Jacque Vaughn when he attempted to drive the lane. Tate picked up the ball and didn't hesitate to fire.

After inbounding the ball, Kansas ran out of time before it could get off a shot. Raef LaFrentz launched a three-pointer that was off the mark after the buzzer had sounded.

LaFrentz had 26 points for Kansas, including an offensive rebound of a missed foul shot that tied the game at the end of regulation. Jerod Haase added 20 points and Vaughn had 19 points and nine assists.

Jason Sutherland added 18 points for Missouri after going scoreless in the first half, and Tate had 14.

In the 1990s, Missouri has played Kansas four times when the Jayhawks were ranked No. 1 and has won three of them.

Neither team led by more than three points after the first 10 minutes of the second half.

For the second straight game, free throws were a key for Missouri. The Tigers made 30 of 34, including 10-for-10 by Thames. On Saturday, Missouri was 30-of-32 in a victory over K-State.

Both teams shot well from three-point range, Missouri going 8-for-18 and Kansas 7-for-18.

The game was tied seven times in the first overtime, and two free throws by Tate with 10 seconds to go forced the second extra period. Vaughn was long on a shot from the side of the key at the buzzer.

Missouri blew a chance to win it in regulation. Grimm, an 84-percent free-throw shooter, made only two of four in the final 30 seconds.

Then, with seven seconds left, Vaughn missed the second of two free throws and Missouri failed to block out as LaFrentz rebounded and forced overtime with a putback with seven seconds to play.

Entering the game, Missouri had lost seven in a row to ranked teams, but the last victory was 77-73 over then-No. 3 Kansas last Feb. 10 at home. That was the highlight of an 18-15 season.

Clinton addresses nation in annual speech

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — President Clinton, declaring that Americans want us to be partners, not partisans, challenged Congress in his State of the Union address Tuesday night to give the nation's schools a big spending increase while balancing the budget by 2002.

Recycling popular ideas from his campaign, Clinton identified education as the top priority of his second term and said he wanted America's classrooms to be the envy of the world. He challenged communities to measure their students against national standards to lift achievement in math and science.

The president's proposals would boost education spending by 20 percent, to $51 billion for fiscal 1998. The increase — including the cost of tax breaks for college — would total 40 percent by 2002.

Two weeks after his second inauguration, the president lectured the Republican-led Congress to complete the unfinished business of the country — balancing the budget, enacting long-stalled campaign finance reform and reopening last year's welfare law to restore benefits to legal immigrants.

His tone was both conciliatory and challenging, calling for racial and political harmony but also pressuring Congress for action.

Balancing the budget by 2002 requires America's vote and his signature, Clinton said, brushing over the wide gulf with Republicans about how to achieve that goal.

He said the Republican-driven proposal for a constitutional amendment for a balanced budget was unnecessary and unwise, adding, "We don't need a constitutional amendment. We need action."

As Clinton stood before a joint session of Congress, the nation's attention was distracted by news of a verdict in the O.J. Simpson civil trial.

"Clearly the court should have realized that this speech was more important," freshman GOP Rep. Jim Gibbons said. "They could have waited an hour or two longer."

Clinton was on strong footing as he faced Republicans suspicious of his proposals. His political confidence, shaken by the Democrats' devastation in 1994, was restored by his re-election, and his recent approval ratings were among the highest of his presidency.

Rep. J.C. Watts of Oklahoma gave the traditional Republican response to Clinton. In his prepared remarks, Watts struck GOP themes of returning power to local communities, family values and balancing the federal budget.

"The strength of America is not in Washington," Watts said.

For the moment, at least, Republicans and Democrats alike are stressing bipartisanship and cooperation, although neither side pretends there won't be legislative fights.

Still, there was none of the bitterness and distrust that reigned a year ago after budget battles forced two government shutdowns that outraged Americans and tarred the GOP. Indeed, Clinton accepted an invitation from Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott and Speaker Newt Gingrich to visit Capitol Hill next Tuesday to discuss the legislative agenda.

Still to come, though, are ethics and legal investigations that could cloud Clinton's administration — and the bipartisanship. The president's vulnerability is mirrored by Gingrich's own ethics problems, and some analysts believe that may prompt both sides to be more conciliatory.

Obliged by the Constitution to report to the nation on its health, Clinton said, "The state of our union is strong, but now we must rise to the decisive moment, to make a nation and a world better than any we have ever known.

"We face no imminent threat but we do have an enemy: the enemy of our time is inaction," Clinton said.

He set a July 4 deadline for Congress to enact campaign finance reform, warning that delay will mean the death of reform.

The president talked at length about national security and foreign policy, devoting more time to it than he ever has in his State of the Union addresses. He said NATO must expand eastward toward Russia by 1999 and said the United States must pursue more dialogue with China — despite his recent acknowledgment that this course has not produced acceptable results.

"An isolated China is not good for America," Clinton said.

He urged ratification of an international treat banning chemical weapons, which Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., is delaying.

Education was the centerpiece of Clinton's speech. Promising to use the bully pulpit of the presidency, Clinton said, "We can make American education, like America itself, the envy of the world."

He said the government will pay for the development of national tests measuring fourth-grade reading and eighth-grade math and will encourage every community to measure students by those standards.

In calling for national-education standards, the president stopped short of saying the government would require students to be measured by the tests.

That will be up to individual states and school districts — although Washington will pay for preparing the exams and administering them the first time, in spring 1999.

Clinton also said he wanted to make health care available to more Americans by broadening coverage for unemployed workers and needy children. He proposed expanding the family leave law to provide unpaid time off for doctors' appointments and school visits.

third, one that most people miss: integrity. There must be integrity to the decision."

Ryan's favorite success factor was the fourth — passion.

"Passion is my favorite. Your efforts must be passionate," Ryan said. "And I'll tell you why, because the opposite of passion is blah."

Ryan told those in attendance they must be passionate when they go for a job interview. What's on the résumé is only as important as the interviewee can communicate it.

"If you go into an interview for a job, and you are not passionate, do you think they are not going to see that?"

Sheer willpower was Ryan's final aspect of success.

"You have to control," he said. "You have to choose."

"Please remember that the impact you can make on an organization, as an individual, is dynamic," Ryan said. "And please remember leadership."

What's important to the individual should be paramount, he said.

"I don't care if you want to be a cab driver in Manhattan, I want you to be a cab driver in Manhattan. I like cab drivers, as long as it's what you want," he said.

"But, if you do not want to drive a cab, I don't want you to. You know why? Because at the end of the road, in my opinion, you won't be happy."

"What we had to go through to get a restroom is unreal.
This was a really hot issue. Very political, very pro and con. I've been yelled at and cussed at."
Judy Roland, academic adviser for interior architecture

THE WAIT IS OVER

After a year, a women's restroom opens in Seaton Hall

JOHN HENDERSON
staff reporter

Crepe-paper ribbons were cut for the grand opening of a restroom on the second floor of Seaton Hall on Wednesday.

That's what happened at 10 a.m., just across the hall from the Department of Architecture offices. The Judy Roland Testimonial Restroom, named for the woman credited with its existence, officially opened.

It's for women. It's a women's restroom.

Roland, academic adviser for interior architecture, worked for a year with K-State Facilities through the planning, placement and construction of the restroom.

"What we had to go through to get a restroom is unreal," she said.

Roland said Seaton is extremely unbalanced in the number of restrooms available for women.

"There are 14 toilets and 18 urinals," she said. "Only four toilets were especially for females."

With the new restroom, there are three more.

The unbalance is University-wide, she said. Seaton had been originally designed in the early 1900s with women's restrooms as part of the design, but they had been removed because of such a low number of female students and faculty in architecture, she said.

"The reason I got involved," she said, "was for a female student who was in an accident and wheelchair-bound last January."

The student couldn't get around to use the restroom, she said.

"This was a really hot issue," she said. "Very political, very pro and con. I've been yelled at and cussed at."

Roland didn't say who yelled at her, but it took dredging up federal codes on occupancy to quiet them, she said.

The restroom is next door to the men's restroom at the southeast end of the second floor.

Roland was presented with a certificate naming the restroom after her at the ceremony. A sign on the wall thanked Randy Slover, director of maintenance with K-State Facilities, from "The Ladies of Seaton Street."

"Randy really helped," Roland said. "He was so easy to work with. And the craftsmanship is just great. They did a wonderful job in there."

STEVE HEBERT/Collegian

JUDY ROLAND, left, academic adviser for interior architecture students, holds the door open to the new women's restroom while Claire Waffle, right, assistant to the head of the Department of Architecture, finishes professor of architecture David Sachs' tour during the grand opening of the new restroom on the second floor of Seaton Hall on Thursday.

98 FIRST TENURE
In March 1996, La Barbara James Wigfall made University history when she became the first black woman to receive tenure from K-State.

100 SOLAR CARS
Traveling down the road at an average of 35 mph, K-State engineering students entered the solar-car racing world with Solution. Sunrayce 1997, a 1,250-mile race along secondary highways, would be Solution's first race.

106 GRAIN SCIENCE
New equipment and $5 million elevated the grain science department to a new level by replacing the feed mill housed in Shellenberger Hall. The new mill was scheduled to open in fall 1998.

110 JOB INTERVIEWS
Going into a job interview, the last thing students expected were mind games, personality tests or pop quizzes. But students who participated in the 3,290 interviews conducted through Career and Employment Services learned to expect the unexpected.

112 COMMERCIAL FOODS
Ice-breaking exercises took on new meaning in Commercial Food Preparation and Service, when the instructor gave students ice picks, putty knives and chain saws.

122 COACHING CLASS
Sports fanatics might have thought they knew everything about football, but the 40 students enrolled in Coaching and Officiating Football learned otherwise.

124 BIOFEEDBACK TESTING
The Biofeedback Training Center, the only center of its kind in Kansas, trained more than 200 students each year to cope with daily stress and anxiety.

136 LEADERSHIP SEMINAR
With scholarships in hand, 77 freshmen designed community-service projects, attended multicultural events and learned to cope with college as a part of Freshman Leadership Seminar, a two-credit hour class taught by members of Blue Key senior honorary.

138 NUCLEAR INTERN
After growing up in the shadow of Wolf Creek Nuclear Power Plant in Burlington, Kan., Eric Dalton jumped at the chance to intern at the company earning $10.59 an hour.

Walking into a classroom of 300 students was intimidating for most freshmen. Walking onto the court in front of thousands of cheering fans as a starting player was another problem all together.

264 VOLLEYBALL
It was the finest season in K-State volleyball history. The Wildcats found fan support like never before, packing an average of 1,307 fans a game into Ahearn Field House and earning K-State a No. 20 ranking in the nation for home attendance.

268 KATE DeCLERK
Post-season play was not the only honor established by the volleyball team. Earlier in the season, middle blocker Kate DeClerk was named the AVCA National Division I player of the week.

Manhattan may see changes in telephone rates

DAVID FAIRBANKS
staff reporter

Southwestern Bell and the City of Manhattan are planning to change the phone-billing system after using it for 46 years.

The first reading of the ordinance that will change Manhattan residents' phone bills took place at the city commission meeting on Tuesday. Contained in this 12-page franchise agreement is a move from billing residents' total bills at 2-percent to a flat-rate fee of $1.02 per phone line, or access line.

"Telecommunications is ever-changing, and now more than ever households are adding multiple phone lines. This new system simplifies the billing process," City Manager Gary Greer said.

This $1.02 fee on all access lines will be equivalent to paying 5 percent on the resident's total phone bill. This 3-percent increase is from a move by the city commission a year ago to increase all franchise agreements to a 5-percent fee, Greer said.

"With this agreement, service will be easier to administer. There will be no misunderstandings about the bills, because you can't argue about how many lines you have," Greer said.

If the commission passes this ordinance, the start-up date will be July 1. According to the ordinance, the franchise term will last three years. The term may also be extended.

Also addressed in Tuesday's meeting were the proposed street improvements for the Woodland Hills/Brier Heights area of town. Six petitions were submitted for approval, both by ULD, a property developer, and by the Brier Heights neighborhood.

Woodland Hills is a new development adjacent to Brier Heights. ULD, the developer responsible for Woodland Hills, wants to pave certain roads in the area to give the new development two access

It's Wednesday night and you sit down to watch your favorite television show. Just as it should begin, another show starts. What happened to your favorite show?

Todd Wells, junior in family studies and community service, experienced this when he and his roommates sat down to watch "Party of Five" on Fox.

"I got upset because my roommates and I planned to watch 'Party of Five' and even though it was advertised, it was not on," Wells said.

"Finally we heard that it is on Friday nights at 9, so we're okay," he said.

This scenario and others like it occurred because TCI of Kansas changed their television line up Dec. 31. While local subscribers noticed the addition of four new channels, they also found that they lost four channels and other channel numbers were rearranged.

Richard Cofer, systems manager at the Manhattan TCI office, said that, while mixing up the line up does cause some confusion among customers, it is done for a reason.

"People need to understand that our product revolves,"Coffer said.

Because television is a big part of society, any change is noticed by customers, Cofer said.

"Just having a house can help people change their own lives."
Kevin Miller, fifth-year student in architectural engineering

Window of Opportunity

KEVIN MILLER, right, fifth-year senior in architectural engineering, helped build 11-year-old Carl Siders' family home through Habitat for Humanity. The Siders, who own the first Habitat home in Manhattan, moved in almost a year ago.

Volunteers build more than homes

Kevin Miller, a fifth-year student in architectural engineering, said when he joined Habitat for Humanity 4-1/2 years ago, he just wanted to get out and build houses.

Now he knows there's a lot more to Habitat for Humanity than just construction.

Miller is one of more than 150 members of Habitat for Humanity on campus.

Miller said he had never heard about Habitat for Humanity until he came to K-State. But when he came to K-State in fall 1992, the organization couldn't build houses here because there wasn't a local group in Manhattan. The campus group had to travel to Topeka or Salina every weekend just to work on a house.

Volunteer: Lend a helping hand.
One story in a series

The K-State chapter helped drum up interest in the city so a local affiliate chapter was started.

"As they say, we were instrumental," Miller said.

Miller said the campus chapter does a lot of fundraising, publicity,and education throughout the city for the program.

So far, the Manhattan chapters of Habitat for Humanity have built two houses, and it hopes to break ground on a third house in March. Eventually it plans to build two houses a year.

Miller said the most rewarding part of the program is getting to meet the homeowners. He said he remembers a woman with children whom they built a house for. After the house was finished, she went back to school and got a degree, and her children started doing better in school.

"Just having a house can help people change their own lives," Miller said.

Miller said people who want help from Habitat for Humanity in building a house must go through a lengthy application process and help with the construction of their houses. They pay for the house — about $36,000 during 20 years with no interest.

Volunteers can spend as much time as they like working on the program, and they can do whatever they have time for. Volunteers don't need construction experience to get involved.

Miller said he thinks Habitat for Humanity is a great way to meet new people and to work on organizational and communication skills.

During spring break, volunteers in the program can participate in the Collegiate Challenge. This year, volunteers are traveling to Fort Worth, Texas, to spend a week building.

Habitat for Humanity has monthly meetings and new volunteers are welcome to attend. Its next meeting is tentatively scheduled for 9 p.m., Feb. 18 in the Big 12 Room in the K-State Student Union. Call Emily Emerson at 776-4169 for more information.

"What we had to go through to get a restroom is unreal.

THE WAIT IS OVER

After a year, a women's restroom opens in Seaton Hall

JOHN HENDERSON
staff reporter

Crepe-paper ribbons were cut for the grand opening of a restroom on the second floor of Seaton Hall on Wednesday.

That's what happened at 10 a.m., just across the hall from the Department of Architecture offices. The Judy Roland Testimonial Restroom, named for the woman credited with its existence, officially opened.

It's for women. It's a women's restroom.

Roland, academic adviser for interior architecture, worked for a year with K-State Facilities through the planning, placement and construction of the restroom.

"What we had to go through to get a restroom is unreal," she said.

Roland said Seaton is extremely unbalanced in the number of restrooms available for women.

"There are 14 toilets and 18 urinals," she said. "Only four toilets were especially for females."

With the new restroom, there are three more.

The unbalance is University-wide, she said. Seaton had been originally designed in the early 1900s with women's restrooms as part of the design, but they had been removed because of such a low number of female students and faculty in architecture, she said.

"The reason I got involved," she said, "was for a female student who was in an accident and wheelchair-bound last January."

The student couldn't get around to use the restroom, she said.

"This was a really hot issue," she said. "Very political, very pro and con. I've been yelled at and cussed at."

Roland didn't say who yelled at her, but it took dredging up federal codes on occupancy to quiet them, she said.

The restroom is next door to the men's restroom at the southeast end of the second floor.

Roland was presented with a certificate naming the restroom after her at the ceremony. A sign on the wall thanked Randy Slover, director of maintenance with K-State Facilities, from "The Ladies of Seaton Street."

"Randy really helped," Roland said. "He was so easy to work with. And the craftsmanship is just great. They did a wonderful job in there."

JUDY ROLAND, left, academic adviser for interior architecture students, holds the door open to the new women's restroom while Claire Waffle, right, assistant to the head of the Department of Architecture, finishes professor of architecture David Sachs' tour during the grand opening of the new restroom on the second floor of Seaton Hall on Thursday.

• 2ND MALE CADET LEAVES COLLEGE AFTER HAZING ALLEGATIONS.

CHARLESTON, S.C. — Two male cadets facing disciplinary action in the hazing of two first-year women cadets have left the Citadel.

One cadet resigned from the military college last week and another did not return for the spring semester, Citadel spokesman Terry Leedom said Tuesday.

The cadet who did not return has not officially resigned. That means he still could come back, but he would have to apply for readmission and would face disciplinary action, Leedom said.

Leedom would not identify the cadets, citing student privacy laws.

• ARMY READY TO RE-EXAMINE CO-ED TRAINING POLICIES.

WASHINGTON — The Army is prepared to re-examine whether it should continue training men and women together in light of widespread allegations of sexual misconduct by military instructors, a top Army officer said.

The Army's chief of staff, Gen. Dennis Reimer, told the Senate Armed Services Committee the Army might review its training policies if a task force looking into the issue decides it was a contributing factor to abuses.

"Some of the reports that I have seen said that this improves the performance of female soldiers in the gender-integrated training; others have said, no, it causes a problem," Reimer told the panel Tuesday. "So I think we have to lay that all out and look at it and make a determination as to what is best for the United States Army."

• SERBIA'S GOVERNMENT CEDES 14 CITIES TO PROTESTERS.

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — On orders from President Slobodan Milosevic, Serbia's premier promised to quickly prepare legislation ceding control of Belgrade and 13 other cities to the opposition — the government's long-awaited bow to 2 1/2 months of massive protests.

But even while he was making that political concession, Milosevic moved Tuesday to muzzle a private television station that has been reporting on the anti-government protests.

For many who took to the streets for the past 77 days, Milosevic's acknowledgement that his Socialist Party lost the capital and other locales in November elections was too little, too late.

Zorica Divcevic, 55, summed up the protesters' mood Tuesday after the president made his about-face: "It is great to see him weak and backing down. But what I really want is to see him resign."

• AID OFFICIALS HAVE EMERGENCY MEETINGS AFTER KILLINGS.

KIGALI, Rwanda — Aid agencies called emergency meetings today to review the increasing violence in Rwanda, a day after gunmen believed to be Hutu rebels ambushed and killed five U.N. human rights monitors.

Four men — a Briton, a Cambodian and two Rwandans — died when their vehicles were attacked while they were on a routine human rights investigation near Karengera, U.N. spokeswoman Marie Van Der Elst said. The area is 180 miles southwest of the capital, Kigali.

The fifth victim, a Rwandan, died of wounds while being transported to Kigali. The victims' bodies and all remaining human rights monitors in southwestern Rwanda were evacuated by a government plane to Kigali late Tuesday night.

• KING'S FAMILY SUPPORTS TRIAL FOR JAMES EARL RAY.

NEW YORK — The family of Martin Luther King Jr. supports a trial for James Earl Ray, who confessed but later denied that he killed the civil rights leader, the New York Times reported Tuesday.

"In the name of truth and justice, our family is calling for a trial, a trial James Earl Ray never had," said King's son, Dexter King.

Ray, 68, was sentenced to 99 years in prison after his confession.

A trial for Ray would resolve whether he was King's killer and possibly settle conspiracy theories.

GRAND OPENING

City provides computer access at senior center

City officials dedicated the Americans with Disabilities Association Computer Center at the Riley County Seniors Service Center on Wednesday afternoon.

The center invested about $7,500 in its two special adaptive computer systems, which will allow those with disabilities to easily access computer services.

"We have installed these two systems with disabilities and senior citizens in mind," said Allen Martin, human relations officer and ADA coordinator.

One of these is the Arkenstone system. Martin said its character recognition and voice capabilities allow those with seeing or hearing impairments to scan in a document and then follow along on screen while the computer reads it.

"This is a really useful tool," said Robin Brunner, computer instructor at the center. "It opens up new doors for people who can't read otherwise. It's simple to use and fairly accurate."

The second system has several adaptive traits that provide easy access for varying disabilities.

"For the visually impaired, we have installed the large monitors and special software to make everything bigger on the screen," Martin said. "We also have an ergonomic keyboard and a wireless mouse for people who have difficulty using their hands."

One of the systems will also provide Internet access for the users.

"Some of the folks are excited, because they can e-mail their kids now," computer instructor Jerry Bacon said. "We also have links set up on the World Wide Web to some other resources for the disabled and the senior citizens."

The center can accommodate from 20 to 40 users a week, but Martin said he hopes to add new hardware in the near future, including a printer that will produce braille type.

"We've already drawn up a plan for developments here," he said. "We would like to have four systems with different adaptive traits. We'll have some tremendous capabilities to help people."

The future modifications will cost about $32,000 for the equipment and are dependent on grants received by the center.

The center is open by appointment to senior citizens, those with a disability or those interested in assisting those people.

Former K-State professor dies from injuries after car accident

LILLIAN BEEBE
staff writer

A former professor emeritus of plant breeding died Wednesday from injuries sustained in a car accident.

Elmer G. Heyne, 84, was involved in a two-car accident shortly after 5 p.m. Monday at North Manhattan and Kimball avenues.

He was transported by ambulance to Mercy Health Center on College Avenue where he later died.

"He was a genuinely nice person, very talented and very caring," Gerry Posler, head of the Department of Agronomy, said.

Heyne was very proficient in plant breeding and developing different varieties of wheat, he said.

"He was a very respected plant breeder and known internationally for wheat breeding," Posler said.

The agronomy department has a lecture series, the Elmer G. Heyne Plant Breeding Lecture Series, named after him.

He remained active in the agronomy department even after his retirement, Posler said. He was especially active with the agronomy graduate reading room.

Heyne donated numerous books and journals along with money and his own time to the reading room, he said.

"He had a myriad of talents and abilities," Posler said.

One of those talents was evident from his license plate, which read, popcorn.

"He bred his own variety of popcorn," Posler said.

Heyne created a variety with purple and yellow kernels for his Kiwanis club to sell as a fundraiser, he said.

Heyne served on the Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 school board and was involved with the Boy Scouts of America, Posler said.

Tuttle cove to charge daily-use fees

CAMI SOWERS
staff reporter

When you visit Tuttle Creek Cove Park this spring and summer there will be one slight difference: a daily-use fee.

This program started because of legislation that was passed by Congress in 1994, said Steve Prockish, park ranger.

Tuttle Creek did not receive enough visitation, so the fee did not have to be enforced.

Now that more people are visiting, the fee will be enforced by ranger patrol.

Daily-use fees will be collected from April 1 to Oct. 31 at boat ramps and swimming areas where there are restrooms, security lighting and boat docks available.

Park patrons will be able to purchase their day use passes at the self-pay stations at honor sites.

"The fees will go toward upkeep of facilities and upgrading and adding additional facilities," Prockish said.

The fees will be $1 per person or $3 per vehicle at the swimming beach, and $2 will be charged at the boat docks.

An annual fee can also be purchased for $25 and is good at any Army Corps of Engineers lake across the country. Golden Age and Golden Access pass holders will be able to buy the pass for half price for themselves.

People who pay camping fees, which are sold by ranger patrol, and display the pass, will not have to pay the day-use fee.

Fight for coverage reflects overall American attitude about news coverage

Where were you last night?

If you were anywhere near a television, chances are you were watching one of two things — President Clinton's State of the Union address or coverage of the conclusion of the O.J. Simpson civil trial.

Not surprisingly, these two events captured the media's attention. The State of the Union address was meant to outline Clinton's plans for the country in the next year.

Clinton called for a larger focus on education, saying he wanted to make America's classrooms the best in the world. The president also stressed the need for racial and political harmony and urged Congress for more action toward balancing the budget.

Surely, these wide-sweeping goals will affect each of us in some form in the next year or so.

So why was it a struggle for network television to decide how much time to devote to the president's plan for the nation and the coverage of a civil suit in Santa Monica, Calif.?

The touting of O.J.'s trial as the trial of the century is a little hard to swallow considering the other cases that have been tried in the past 100 years, like the Nuremberg trials.

Perhaps it was the sense of witnessing a once-in-a-lifetime event that drew so much attention to the trial. After all, the State of the Union address happens every year.

Does the public's interest in sensational events outweigh its need to know which direction the country is headed? Does the outcome of one trial really define the state of race relations for an entire country?

What does the public want? The media can only use their news judgment to determine what should receive top billing from day to day.

It might be safe to say that most people are tired of Simpson coverage. But, in a week, how many people will remember what the president wants to do in the next year, compared to the amount of people who will remember that O.J. will have to pay $8.5 million?

• PROPERTY TAX CUT WOULD BENEFIT K-STATE

Editor,

Having attended K-State, I have learned to, or at least try to, distinguish fact from value judgments. The letter to the editor written by Hansen, Otto and Mann from the Feb. 4 Collegian seems to forward value judgments instead of facts.

The three gentlemen would like people to believe that property taxes cannot be reduced without hurting K-State, but nothing could be further from the truth. Under both the Governor's proposal and the House Tax Committee's plan, property taxes are cut and revenues for K-State increase.

It is normally true that with a tax cut comes a smaller state budget. This mistake that the three gentlemen made is that with a decreasing state budget, K-State's budget does not automatically decrease. It is possible for the state to spend less as a total and funding for K-State to increase. The two elements are mutually exclusive, but that fact was not addressed.

Another myth is that a property tax will hurt the local economy. Ask your parents or the local merchants of Manhattan what they think about property taxes, and you'll get an ear full. Having home and business owners spend less on taxes will spur growth, not discourage it.

Also, by allowing families to pay less in taxes, more money can be saved to send students to K-State, instead of community colleges that are less expensive and closer to home. Tax cuts are pro-student and pro-K-State. One would expect the Student Government Association to realize that.

The political reality that exists in the state capital is that a majority of legislators, on both sides of the aisle, were elected by promising property tax relief. Legislators who do not keep their promises, normally do not return to office.

If people would call their local legislator to ask questions, instead of using scare tactics at home, the legislative process would be greatly enhanced. The process would also be helped if the SGA leadership decided against blindly following the University administration and represent the needs of students. I believe that this has been done in the not so distant past and should occur again.

Germany's discrimination against Scientologists reminiscent of previous oppression

The closet of the 20th century is filled with skeletons; within this century the world has witnessed horror as never before, etched in black and white photographs and in the flickering of television sets. Exposure to events such as the Holocaust, Vietnam and Bosnia have reminded humanity of its animalistic nature.

Recently, the world was sent another reminder. Last Thursday, the U.S. State Department released an investigation it had conducted in Germany regarding the religion of Scientology. An excerpt from this document, according to CNN's web site, reads, "Business firms whose owners or executives are Scientologists may face boycotts and discrimination, sometimes with government approval."

In Bavaria, the civil service department screens applicants to weed out Scientologists, and will only allow certain contracts to companies who vouch that they have no contact with Scientology or its practitioners.

The German government contends the church is a money-making organization with some traits of organized crime, and that it represents a threat to democracy.

In turn, German Scientologists, backed by U.S. figures such as Tom Cruise and John Travolta, have implied that the German government is reverting back to Nazism. This claim has incensed the government even more, escalating the situation.

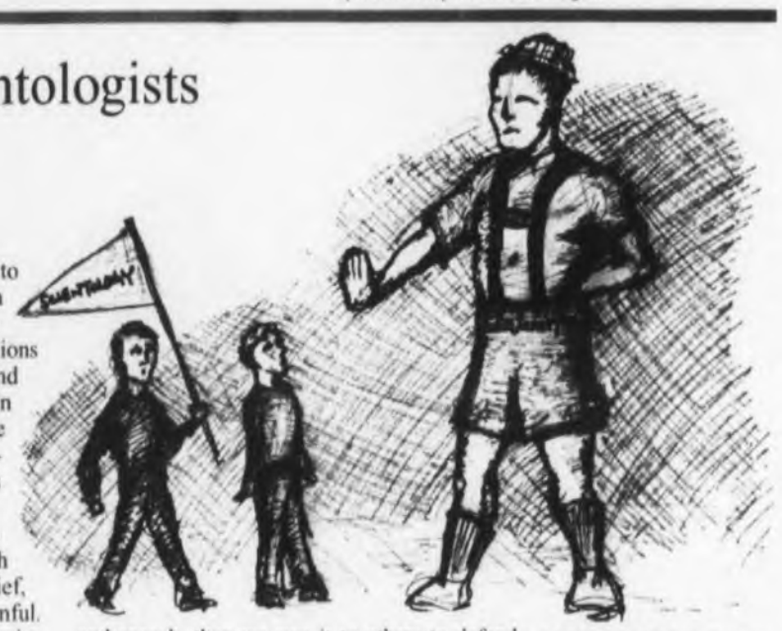
It would appear that some skeletons have rattled out of the Western World's closet and are dancing before our eyes.

First and foremost, I, in no way, wish to connect what is currently happening in Germany with the actual Holocaust. One cannot compare the murder and rape of millions of Jewish people, political dissidents and other individuals with the recent situation in Germany. To do so is unfair not only to the current German citizenry but to the memory of those who perished in gas chambers or before firing squads.

I do feel, though, that we must be a watchdog against any situation which oppresses people based on their chosen belief, and could evolve into something more harmful.

The fact that any government would discriminate against a people based on their religion is shameful. Whether one disagrees with a person's faith, to threaten their livelihood is wrong. Furthermore, to turn our eyes from such a thing is just as shameful as the current injustice Germany is imposing on a sect of her citizens.

In these situations, silence equals concurrence. I understand the line of thought which dictates no American involvement in foreign issues. A segment of the population wishes to focus our sights on domestic matters. After all, we cannot solve the problems of the entire world.



This train of thought often deals with matters of U.S. military involvement.

We can, as citizens, defend others from an ideological standpoint. If we live under a constitution whose contents regard freedom of religion and speech, then we owe it to others to defend their right to practice the same freedoms we take for granted.

In all likelihood, our government will probably have little to do with this matter. If America can give Most Favored Nation trading status to China, which has numerous human rights violations, then that same government can live in contentment with Germany's actions towards Scientologists.

We will never be able to rid ourselves of the past's horrors — the images of carnage are a part of our mentality. This does not mean we need to become comfortable with such images.

We must not live with intellectual carnage. By standing up to oppression, maybe we can prevent a few more bones from being added to the pile.

DO YOU CROSS DRESS

... or do you support K-State football and KU basketball at the same time?

VIEWPOINT

VALERI CRENSHAW

VALERI CRENSHAW is a graduate student in print journalism. You can e-mail your comments to Valeri at (vrc4359@ksu.edu).

I hate this time of year. The euphoria of football season is over, we are deep into basketball season and baseball is just around the corner. This is prime time for many different types of fans. In my opinion, there are only two types of fans: diehards and cross dressers.

Just to set the record straight, I am what you would call a K-State diehard. I was born across from the football stadium, left the hospital in a K-State T-shirt and haven't looked back.

I sat through all the football games in the 1980s and never questioned my loyalty. The consequences of this are that of course, I hate the University of Kansas. It is just a fact of life. K-State diehards will always hate KU.

Blood is thicker than water, and my blood is purple.

I am pointing this out for all of you fellow diehards who face the constant nagging of those cross dressers who come out of hibernation this time of year. We must stick together.

You cross dressers know who you are. You are the people who say such oddities as, "I can't believe you aren't pulling for the KU basketball team. They are from Kansas."

No one has to tell us they are from Kansas. Duh. That is why we hate them. My ancestors are from Germany, but do you think they would have supported Hitler in the Final Four? Gimme a break. Geography is not a factor when I direct my loyalty.

Sometimes it is difficult to know exactly where you fit in the realm of athletics. So, I have included a little test to help determine your personal fan type. This was developed by a team of renowned psychologists who dealt with dysfunctional families where cross dressers and diehards share the same name.

This particular test is aimed at the residents of Kansas. There is no mention of KU diehards, simply because that is a fictional idea. We all know that KU fans only support whichever team is winning at the time, hence their motto, "Wait 'til basketball season." This is often heard during all other seasons.

Please mark all that apply. If five or more apply, you are unquestionably a K-State diehard. Congratulations — we'll always have room for you on our team.

❍ "I get excited when K-State wins any sort of title, whether it be an invitation to the Cotton Bowl, the National Debate Championship, the Livestock Judging Championship or the Only-University-to-Drink-Dallas-Out-of-Beer-on-New-Year's-Eve Award."

❍ "I would cheer for the University of Libya if they were playing KU."

❍ "I refuse to sell athletic tickets to Nebraska fans even if they are willing to pay for my college tuition."

❍ "I support the basketball teams when they are winning, losing or going through a rebuilding year. I love those guys and gals."

❍ "I have been known to purchase the most trivial of gadgets simply because they have a Powercat on them."

❍ "I have ended a relationship because the person could not convert to purple loyalty."

❍ "I have shed tears after a loss on the field, court or diamond."

❍ "I get a little weak in the knees when I hear 'The Wabash Cannonball.'"

Please mark all that apply. If five or more apply, you are a cross dresser and should probably seek professional help.

❍ "My closet houses garments bearing both Powercats and Jayhawks."

❍ "I have cheered for K-State's football team, KU's basketball team and Wichita State's baseball team within a two-year span."

❍ "My car sports a license plate with a Powercat and Jayhawk with the words 'mixed household' on it."

❍ "I have harassed people, including loved ones, for not supporting homegrown teams and athletes."

❍ "After a Sunflower Showdown I have said, 'Oh well, it was just a game.'"

❍ "The words, 'I like K-State football and KU basketball' have actually trickled out of my mouth."

❍ "I think Scot Pollard's sideburns are attractive."

❍ "I view K-State/KU games as social events and wear neutral colors when I attend."

Now there is no excuse. Accept your place in life and leave the rest of us alone. This country is big enough for everyone, and we can live in harmony, if we all agree to certain regulations.

You cross dressers must stop trying to reason with us diehards. We are who we are, and there is no way to change that. We are not claiming that this is rational. There is nothing rational about emotions such as love and hate, but it must be recognized that they exist.

We diehards vow to keep our mocking behind closed doors. Please don't ask us to support your flying from one team to another, it is too foreign to us. But we do promise that we will wait until you leave the room to point out that you are missing one vital body part — a spine.

Hockey club searches for local ice rink, recognition, respect

Finding myself awake and active early Saturday morning (just a shade past 4 a.m.), I decided to peruse the offerings of cable television.

Flipping past old rerun's of "What's Happening!" and endless infomercials for the Dehydrator 2000, I found myself transfixed on a Bowling Green-Miami of Ohio match-up.

But this wasn't your carbon-copy basketball match-up.

VIEWPOINT

JON BALMER

JON BALMER is a freshman in pre-journalism and mass communication. You can e-mail comments to John at (jkb2004 @ksu.edu).

No, this was college hockey, a sport that stands nonexistent in the realm of Manhattan or the state of Kansas for that matter. And although the concept of fielding a team of purple-clad ice warriors seems farfetched, a large amount of little things could someday come together to make K-State hockey a NCAA reality.

Little known to most of Manhattan, K-State already has a hockey team. Although only a club team, the squad has been together for sometime now and travels from Minnesota to Colorado facing off against other clubs.

Mainly composed of K-State graduates, the team went 14-7 in 1996 and beat club teams from Nebraska and Kansas University that it swept in five meetings.

The main problem encountered by the club is the availability of a rink. Manhattan is devoid of an arena, and Bramlage Coliseum was built specifically for basketball, so all home games are played in Kansas City, Kan. Due to this distant facility, the hockey club remains unknown around Manhattan.

However, a little bit of sunshine might be on the horizon for ice lovin' Cats. An area group has recently proposed the idea of turning the Topeka Expocentre into a hockey arena, in hopes of luring an International Hockey League franchise to the town.

While this costly proposal has yet to be decided, the ramifications of the bill passing could greatly help the K-State hockey community.

If an arrangement could be worked out, club games would be much closer, thereby decreasing costs and possibly increasing exposure. With match-ups only a short roadtrip away, students might turn out in greater numbers to support the Cats.

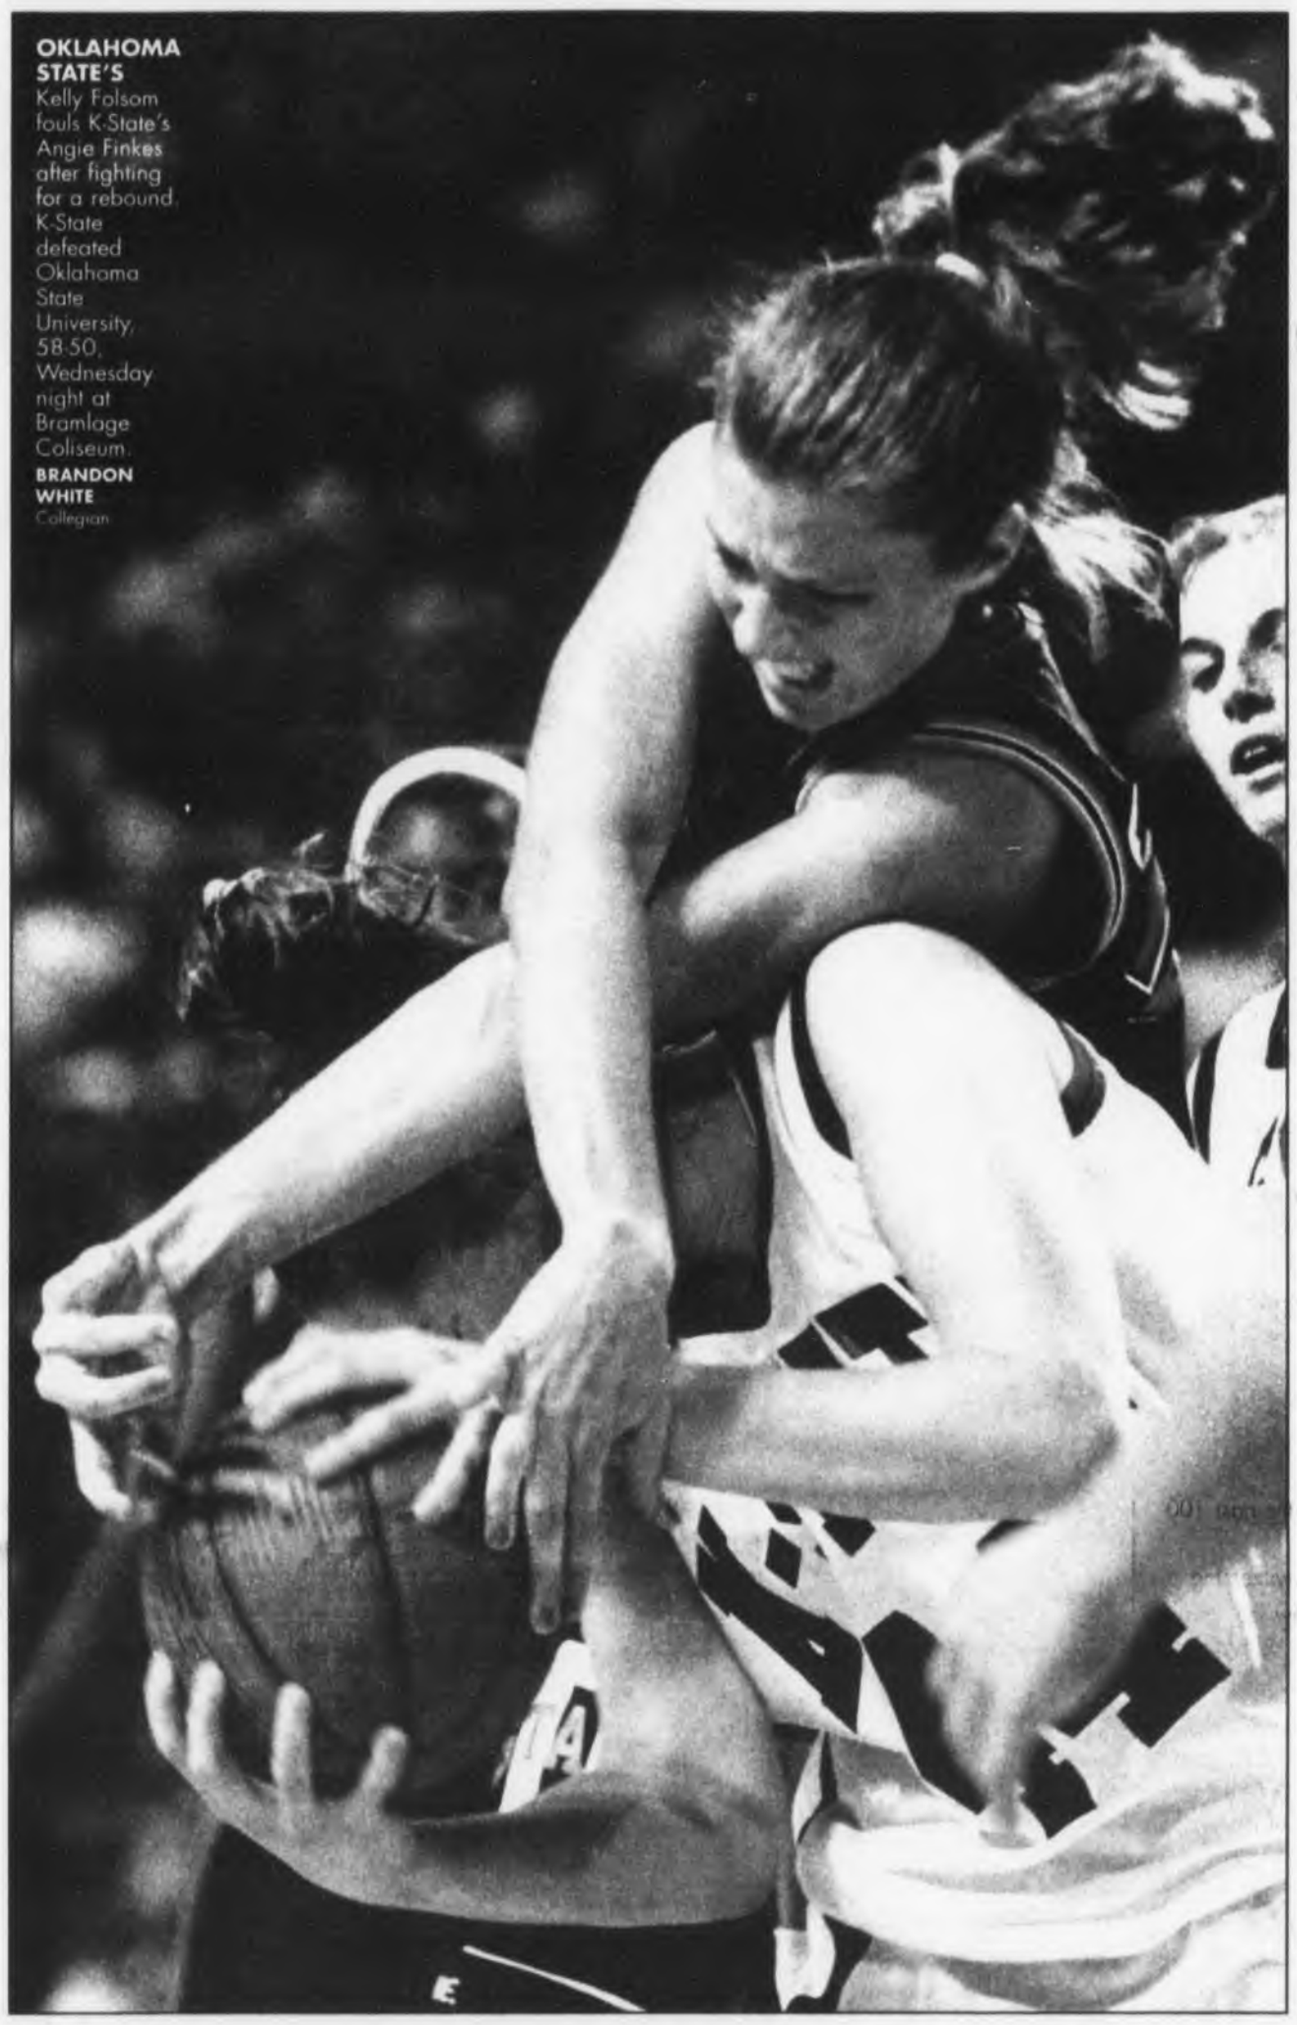
The Expocentre remodeling is still up in the air, but other factors could contribute to the growth in K-State hockey interest. The Kansas City Junior Blades, a collection of some of the areas finest hockey players, has been around since the pro-team came to town, so the pool of young, home-grown hockey talent is already out there.

Another promising sign is the recent decision by area athletic directors to make ice hockey an official high-school sport. Certain Kansas City-area high schools will field teams in the coming years, and students who attend a non-fielding school can play for the closest hockey team in the area.

This sudden opening in hockey availability has presented students who previously could not afford the costs of a club team the chance to learn more about the coolest game on Earth.

The two largest roadblocks that stand in the way of K-State hockey are funding and NCAA affiliation. The club team receives a small amount of funding from the University for being a club sport, but this is not enough.

Due to the cash flow required for ice rental time and traveling, the team basically funds itself. It is a costly sacrifice for the love of the sport.



Outside of this, gaining Division I status is another situation. Within the last 10 years, the only club team to jump to the elite level was women's rowing. Due to Title IX requirements and the lack of community interest, ice hockey is probably not high on the upgrade agenda.

So for the moment, the Wildcats of the ice will remain out of the limelight and content with club status. But who knows, perhaps someday all of these above-mentioned elements will join together to equal a high-profile, Manhattan-based hockey team.

Stranger things have happened.

Last year's Stanley Cup featured a team from Florida, which is not exactly known as a hockey hotbed. And this year, the Edmonton Oilers jumped the country that bleeds hockey (Canada), to relocate in the dry deserts of Phoenix, so you just never can predict what's going to happen in this mad, mad world.

For now though, I must retire to my bed chamber, gaze fondly at my Chicago Blackhawks jersey, and dream of the day when purple-clad puck masters skate before a crowded house in the city of Manhattan.

SENIOR SPARKS WILDCAT VICTORY

When a team is struggling, it tends to look toward a senior to get things turned around. That was the scenario Wednesday night, as senior forward Andria Jones led the Cats to a 58-50 victory over Oklahoma State in Bramlage Coliseum.

Shots did not come easy for Jones at the beginning, as she missed four of her first five shots. Her misses came from the perimeter, where she came up short on every shot.

By the end of the first half, Jones had connected on only four of 13 shots from the field. She also misfired on all three of her attempts behind the three-point line.

As a team, the Cats were zero of six from the three-point mark.

"We tell our team that we cannot hit every shot in the game," Coach Deb Patterson said. "Although we were not all on during the first half, I was pleased with our defensive effort."

Leading the defensive effort was Jones, who came up with a couple of steals in the first half.

Her first came at the 16:26 mark, as she cut in front of a Sarah Boyd pass and took it the length of the court for a layup. The play sparked a 6-0 run that gave the Cats its first lead of the game at the 14:04 mark of the first half.

After the Cats took a 25-22 halftime lead, the message from Patterson was loud and clear in the locker room.

"Coach told us that she wanted the first five minutes of the second half to be the most intense basketball we have played all year," Jones said. "I really took it to heart and played tough, it really set the tempo."

Jones responded by hitting her first two shots of the second half. The first came at the 18:44 mark, as Jones drained a trey from the top of the arc. The basket was the first for either team, putting the Cats up 28-22.

Three possessions later, Jones gave a repeat performance, hitting another three-pointer from virtually the same point. The score gave the Cats its biggest lead of the game at nine points.

Jones' defensive intensity remained in the second half, picking up three steals. Possibly her biggest steal of the half was her second. With only 5:45 remaining in the game, Jones stepped in front of a mid-court pass and took it down the court for a layup that put the Cats up 45-39.

More than a minute later, Jones dove on to her knees to grab her third steal of the game.

"It really shows the character and composure of Andria, making an impact in other parts of the game," Patterson said. "She was getting her hands on the ball and making the deflections necessary."

Jones finished the second half with 14 points on five of nine shooting from the field. Jones' 22 points were her second highest this season in conference play.

"It is really nice to see players bounce back from a little shooting slump," Patterson said. "The talented players want the ball and make those shots, I like that mentality in a player. It really shows the quality of player Andria is on both sides of the ball."

Cats win 9th straight home game

SUN DEE MILLS
staff reporter

It wasn't pretty, but it goes in the win column.

The Wildcat women's basketball team increased its home winning streak to nine games with a 58-50 win over Oklahoma State's Cowgirls.

"I don't think we were firing on all cylinders offensively tonight," Coach Deb Patterson said.

Junior guard Brit Jacobson came onto the court in a foot cast, due to a stress fracture in her fourth metatarsal.

"It's tough when you lose someone who's been playing quality minutes," Patterson said, "but other players proved they were very capable of stepping up and filling the void."

The Cats' leading offensive gun, senior forward Andria Jones, was firing blanks, missing four shots in the first two minutes of the game.

"I didn't stop shooting," Jones said. "I was open, but I wasn't knocking them in."

Jones put the first score on the board at the 17:50 mark, but the Cowgirls already had four.

Cowgirl center Kelly Folsom quickly answered with a basket of her own to put OSU up by four. The Cats did not gain the lead until freshman center Angie Finkes put up a backdoor layup to put them ahead by one.

This was the first of five lead changes over the next 10 minutes, with neither team pulling ahead by more than two. The Cowgirls began applying full-court pressure with six minutes left in the first half, and the Cats were struggling.

"We didn't make good decisions against the press," Patterson said. "We would come up the floor and sometimes have 12 seconds left on the offensive end of the court to execute in the half-court."

With the press, the Cats were taking shots with seconds left on the shot clock. Sophomore guard/forward Sara Munson sunk one at the 5:22 mark, to tie the game for the last time at 16. Munson was fouled by Cowgirl forward Cheri Edwards 30 seconds later, and with a free throw, gained the lead the Cats would carry into halftime.

"In the past two weeks, we've evolved to the point where we can pull some people who've been playing 38 to 40 minutes a game," Patterson said. "Sara and Jenny (Coalson) and K.J. (Kjersten Larson) have been getting 18-20 minutes a game."

At halftime, Jones was four of 13 from the field with eight points, and freshman forward Nicky Ramage was 100 percent from the field with eight points also. The Cats held the Cowgirls to 16 points from the field, a credit to the Cats' perimeter defense, Patterson said.

"Things weren't going exactly the way we had wanted them to go," Patterson said, "but we'd held them to eight field goals."

Jones said after a locker room talk, things changed in the second half.

"Coach Patterson said she wanted the first five minutes of the second half to be the most intense basketball we've played all year," Jones said.

Jones went on to hit two consecutive three-pointers. A basket by Coalson gave the Cats a nine-point lead.

The Cowgirls tried to play catch-up, and cut the Cat lead to one 10 minutes into the second half, but the Cats regrouped after a timeout. Munson hit a three, against Patterson's better judgment, she said.

"It's one of those where I'm yelling 'No' from the sidelines, but it goes in," Patterson said. "I loved it."

At the 4:28 mark, Ramage got the ball to senior guard/forward Missy Decker, who hit a crucial three-pointer, Patterson said.

"That three gave us a little breathing room," Patterson said. "It was a critical play in the second half."

The Cats played to a crowd of 2,055 fans. Patterson said the fans helped the team get wins like these.

"To see the difference from when we first started playing at home at the beginning of the season is just unbelievable," Ramage said.

Despite new line-up, OSU squeaks past K-State, 64-59

JEREMY KELLEY
sports editor

STILLWATER, Okla. — Coach Tom Asbury went out on a limb in K-State's game Wednesday night against Oklahoma State.

For the first time all season, center Dax Jones, donned with black fingernail polish, started in place of regular center Gerald Eaker. Asbury jumbled the lineup to try to produce a K-State win. It didn't work.

"When you're 0-9, aren't you out on a limb already?" joked Asbury after K-State's ninth-straight conference loss at Oklahoma State, 64-59.

Not in the eyes of guard Paco May.

"We still lose, so I guess it doesn't matter," he said. "I suppose he's just trying to find the right chemistry."

But the Cats didn't go down without a fight. The Cowboys exercised their biggest lead of 13 in the second half, and looked to end K-State's hopes of a first conference win. But the Cats battled back.

With the Cowboys' sensation, guard/forward Chianti Roberts on the bench with four fouls, K-State chipped away at the Pokes' lead.

Guard Mark Young didn't see action in the game until early in the second half, but when he returned, he made a difference.

With the Cats trailing 41-32, Young nailed a 7-foot turnaround from the baseline that brought the Cats within seven points, 41-34.

Young reeled off six-straight points, but guard Adrian Peterson was there to answer every time. Twice Peterson answered Young's jumpers with three-pointers, and the Cowboys still led by 11.

But then Peterson and the rest of the Cowboys went cold and opened the barn door for K-State to come in.

Down 51-42 with nine minutes, 37 seconds left, K-State went on a 7-3 run capped off by four points from forward Shawn Rhodes.

Both teams traded baskets down the wire and down by just three, the Cats had a chance to tie the score for the first time in the half.

With 13.5 seconds left, guard Chris Griffin took the entry-pass and dribbled the length of the court hoping to find Rhodes, but K-State couldn't get a shot off and the Pokes prevailed, 64-59.

"We got congested," May said. "They made the good switch and played great defense."

But Peterson proved to be too much for the Cats to handle. The sophomore guard smoked K-State for 26 points, including 4-6 from behind the arch.

"Too much Adrian Peterson," Asbury said. "He's not good just against us. They run a lot of things for him, and when he's on a role, they run more and more for him.

Early on K-State looked like a team possessed, or at least Rhodes was possessed.

After playing two consecutive games at the center spot, Rhodes shot out of the gates against the Cowboys, posting the Cats' first nine points. With 17 minutes, 39 seconds left in the first half, Rhodes sank a three that put the Cats up 5-2.

Rhodes continued to fuel the K-State offense hitting two more short jumpers down the stretch to put the Cats on top 9-8 with 13:45 left.

"I just started feeling it," Rhodes said. "I kept lugging away, and the shots kept coming to me, so I was taking them."

Then the Cowboys turned up the defense and forced a couple of turnovers on the Cats. In a span of barely 2-1/2 minutes, Oklahoma State outscored K-State 7-0, taking a 17-11 lead with 10 minutes left.

Unfortunately for the Cats, that would be Rhodes' last points for the half. However, Rhodes ended the game with a career-high 21 points. May also added 20 for K-State who move to 7-12 on the year and 0-9 in Big 12 play.

K-State battled back to tie the score at 22 with 3:40 left in the half, but Peterson triggered a 7-2 Cowboys run at the end of the half that put the Pokes on top at the intermission, 31-24.

As for the Cats, they are back in action Saturday against Oklahoma at Bramlage. The game marks a three game home stand for K-State.

Assistance available to prevent tax stress

STORY BY TANYA NISLY • ART BY BILL KRAAI

Filing the correct tax form and receiving W-2s might make tax time stressful for students, but it does not need to be.

For students who do not know how to file their taxes or don't know where to start, there is an organization to help them.

"Volunteer Income Tax Assistance is free tax assistance for those who can't afford to get assistance," Stephanie Shehi-Valdez, VITA coordinator, said.

About 25 students volunteer their time to those who need tax assistance. VITA is a nationwide program funded by the IRS and is sponsored on campus by Beta Alpha Psi, an honorary accounting fraternity, Shehi-Valdez said.

Even though this service is offered free to students, few take advantage of it.

"Most of our clientele are international students. Most of our clientele seem to be people from the community," Shehi-Valdez said.

Students who file their taxes on their own need to make sure they have the correct form.

"It depends on particular circumstances," Shrimplin said.

For a single student with one W-2, a 10-40Z form is needed. A 10-40Z form is also sufficient for a married couple who earned a small amount of interest. A married couple with children in day care would need to file a 10-40A or a 10-40.

There is some simple advice for filling ou the correct tax form.

"Get the form, sit down and look at it. I there is a place to put the figures then they have the right form. If all else fails, use a 10 40," Shrimplin said.

Because everyone is interested in gettin money back quickly, H & R Block has creat ed a way for this to happen.

"Rapid Refund is electronically filed returns," Shrimplin said.

Shrimplin said there are several possibili ties for having a refund electronically deposit ed. She said direct deposit into a checkin account is the best deal, if a person qualifies

"It needs to be a bank or credit union tha takes electronic transfers," Shrimplin said.

Some banks won't allow a refund to b electronically deposited into a joint accoun This is if a couple files separately, they bot have access to the money if it is deposite electronically into a joint account.

"People need to make sure the routin number and account number are correct o the forms," Shrimplin said.

The new 10-40s have a place to put thi information. These forms can be sent by mai Shrimplin said.

Students can pick up tax forms in the K State Student Union, both the east and wes Dillons, the U.S. Postal Service and th Manhattan Public Library.

▶ Need more info? VITA volunteers are available from 4 to 6:30 p.m. Monday through Thursday at the Manhattan Public Library. They will also be at the International Student Center from 2:30 to 5:30 p.m. Saturdays through April 15.

roads. The cost of these improvements will rest partly on those residents not included in the area. This is where the Brier Heights neighborhood is involved.

Mark Taylor, fifth-year senior in veterinary medicine, lives in Brier Heights.

"This should be a world of fairness and we are simply choosing what's fair for us," he said.

As well as having to share part of the bill, the Brier Heights neighborhood is concerned with the increased amount of traffic this paving will cause and the safety factors that come with more traffic.

After hearing every side on each of the petitions, the commission denied all six. Upon doing this, each commissioner and Mayor Sydney Carlin all gave a list of things they'd like to see in a revised petition.

Jerry Petty, director of public works, believes there will be additional petitions brought before the commission next week.

make the channel changes, the local TCI office took the opportunity to make changes they felt were good for the customers.

"We took this opportunity to get additional channels for our viewers," Cofer said.

The channels that were added were Animal Planet, Cartoon Network, Turner Classic Movies and Encore Plex.

While TCI makes channel changes periodically, Cofer said that this latest change created a substantial number of calls into the local office, both for and against the change.

"They ranged from comments loving Turner Classics to missing sporting events on WGN," Cofer said.

Cofer said not to worry about missing "Party of Five" or other programs on Fox.

"All the Fox programs are still carried. The times are just switched to accommodate other programs," Cofer said.

While Wells said he is adjusting to the channel changes, it still is difficult.

"It kind of makes me mad, because I have become familiar to the channels," Wells said. "Now they go and change the lineup."

This will not be the last time TCI subscribers will have to adjust to new channel changes.

"There is no particular time that we change our line up," Cofer said. "But usually every year or six months."

Clinton proposes 2nd-term spending

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Clinton, opening a new act in the long-running budget drama, is sending Congress a $1.69 trillion spending plan that fulfills his campaign tax-cut promises, boosts spending on education and still achieves balance in 2002.

Clinton sought to portray the document he was unveiling today as a good-faith offer to Republicans to achieve the top priority of his second term, balancing the budget after nearly three decades of red ink.

But under the president's spending blueprint, the deficit will rise this year and nearly two-thirds of the $388 billion in deficit savings Clinton envisions will not occur until 2001 and 2002, after he has left office.

Just two years ago, Clinton's budget at that point still envisioned $200 billion annual deficits indefinitely. Last year he embraced the GOP goal of balancing the budget by 2002.

Republicans have let it be known that they will insist on bigger tax cuts than Clinton is offering today, steeper and quicker reductions in spending and more power shifted from Washington to the states.

"The issue isn't whether he gives us a balanced budget. It'll be how rickety it is," said Rep. John Kasich, R-Ohio, chairman of the House Budget Committee. "I fear it will be a very rickety budget that won't deal with the major issues of our time, like the long-term costs of Medicare and other huge and growing federal benefits."

But neither side is eager to repeat last year's acrimonious standoff that led to two partial government shutdowns, and Republicans say they will use Clinton's new budget as the starting point for this year's negotiations.

Clinton, Vice President Al Gore and top members of the administration's economic team were scheduled to begin the sales job for the spending plan at a news conference today following the budget's formal release. Budget documents were obtained by the Associated Press on Wednesday.

For the 1998 fiscal year, which begins Oct. 1, Clinton proposes spending $1.69 trillion, up 3.5 percent from projected spending of $1.63 trillion this year.

The new budget projects that the deficit, which posted a fourth-straight decline to $107.3 billion in 1996, will rise to $125.6 billion this year before starting to decline again. It would achieve a $17-billion surplus in 2002.

Clinton's savings would come primarily from Medicare, defense and other domestic programs.

On taxes, Clinton's budget would honor his campaign promise to offer a $500 tax credit for children 12 or younger, a $1,500 tax credit to pay for the first two years of college and tax deductions

Service remembers Finck for teaching band

SHAWN T. DENTON
staff reporter

A former K-State instructor gave his students love and appreciation for music. Now, K-State students have a chance to give back.

Stanley Finck, 56, died Jan. 22 after a long illness. A memorial service is planned for 8 tonight at All Faiths Chapel.

Finck

Finck was the marching band director and percussion instructor for K-State from 1983 to 1992. He was forced to retire in 1992 due to ailing health. But his tenure at K-State has left a mark on the music program.

"He took over when the band was in a state of disarray and brought it back to respect," Jack Flouer, head of the music department, said.

▶ The recital.
There will be a memorial recital at 8 p.m. Feb. 25.

Alex Shultz, graduate student in electrical engineering, said he remembers some of the battles the marching band went through to gain respect.

"The old band uniforms were about 20 years old," Shultz said. "But my second year here we had new uniforms. Mr. Finck organized a marching band telefund for the uniforms."

Shultz's first semester under Finck's instruction was in 1988. He has witnessed the growth of the marching band program.

"He was kind of another father for me," Shultz said. "That's what it felt like."

Steve Barnum, senior in social science, and Shultz said the memorial service will be an opportunity for students to cope with Finck's death.

"We wanted a way to provide closure for the people who knew him," Barnum said. "We wanted an informal thing where we could get together and share memories."

The memorial service will include an opening prayer, floor discussion, a trumpet recital and a final closing prayer.

"We know that Mr. Finck wouldn't want anything like a funeral service," Shultz said. "He wouldn't want

Learning made fun

Wonder Workshop provides education for all ages

HEATHER PERKINS
staff reporter

Glitter, beads, yarn and buttons turned into self portraits of area children Thursday afternoon.

The children meet every Thursday at the Wonder Workshop to make craft projects. Elementary education majors enrolled in a class called Art for Elementary Teachers organize the projects.

Cara Croy, senior in elementary education, thinks it is important for children to have fun while learning.

"Kids learn by having a good time," Croy said. "They learned about the artist, but they still had fun."

This week's project was based on the art of Simon Sparrow, a black artist famous for making artwork of animals and faces that reflect light. Sparrow was chosen for this week's artist because February is Black History Month.

"I think they liked it because they could just throw things together," Jessica Lytle, junior in elementary education, said. "There weren't any restrictions. They just had to be creative."

The objective of the art club is to help all children find their creativity.

"I hope it inspires them to be creative and to use their creative energy with different mediums," Richard Pitts, co-director of Wonder Workshop, said.

"Clay, carving, whatever it might be. Everyone is creative," he said. "They just have to tap into their creativity. If no one likes it, it is OK as long as you enjoy the process and what you have done."

Debbie Weishaar, senior in elementary education, said she liked that the class gave them an opportunity to work hands-on with the children.

Senate retreat bill dies; student-body election voting days extended

BENJAMIN YODER
staff reporter

A bill for a Student Senate retreat died Thursday night after the authors of the proposal withdrew their names.

Senators could not agree on the amount of money to spend on a retreat for next year's Senate.

"Our job is not to sit here and fight about how much money we're going to give to ourselves," Bret Glendening, senate allocations chair, said.

The original bill proposed to set aside $94 for the retreat. An amendment to increase the fund to $1,500 failed.

Faculty Representative Bill Muir said he was for the amendment because the added money would give senators more options to learn procedures and increase legislative efficiency.

"Ninety-four dollars. It fits guidelines. It's a round peg into a round hole," Muir said.

Arts and Sciences Senator Craig Korth said if the senators really wanted to increase efficiency, they could pay for retreats out of their own pockets. He also said seminars could be on campus rather than an alternative retreat site.

"It sounds kind of fishy to me. It can be done here for free," he said.

Student Body President Chris Hansen said spend is the wrong word to use in this case.

"This money is an investment in SGA," Hansen said.

In other business, Senate passed measures concerning the number of votes needed to change fees. It now will take a two-thirds vote of the entire Senate, rather than two-thirds vote of senators in attendance.

They also passed a bill that extends dates for student body elections to Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday two weeks before spring break. A bill revising election regulations that permits chalking within 10 feet from buildings and on steps and

• 4 IN CUSTODY FOR QUESTIONING IN TULSA CLINIC BOMBINGS.

TULSA, Okla. — Four people were in custody today for questioning as federal agents searched a home for clues to the bombings and gunfire at a Tulsa abortion clinic.

Police and agents from the FBI and Federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms went to the home in the Tulsa suburb of Bixby Thursday morning. A search warrant had been issued following a tip authorities got late Wednesday.

The four being questioned included two juveniles, authorities said.

• 4 MORE PEOPLE TAKEN HOSTAGE; RED CROSS SUSPENDS ACTIVITIES.

DUSHANBE, Tajikistan — The Red Cross suspended activities in Tajikistan, and the United Nations told many of its workers to stay indoors Thursday after rebels seized four more hostages, bringing the total to 16.

The four U.N. refugee workers were abducted in broad daylight in Dushanbe, the capital of this former Soviet republic in Central Asia, according to a statement from U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees Sadako Ogata.

The UNHCR employees included a Nigerian, a Tajik security guard and two Tajik drivers. They join 12 others being held — five Russian and Tajik journalists, two Red Cross workers and four U.N. military observers and their interpreter.

• MIXED-RACE PROTESTS SHUT DOWN AFRICAN TOWNSHIPS.

WESTBURY, South Africa — Crowds of mixed-race protesters blocked roads with burning barricades and clashed with police in townships around Johannesburg today to protest alleged discrimination by the black-led government.

Police fired stun grenades, buckshot and tear gas to disperse protesters in some areas, but generally tried to contain the unrest to the townships and prevent only the most overt violence.

Crowds attacked taxi vans, forced shops to close and threw bricks and stones at police, sometimes drawing gunfire in response. At least two protesters were injured, with reports of as many as seven wounded.

The protests were called by a group fighting for equal rights for people of mixed-race descent, known as coloreds in South Africa.

• SIMPSON'S LAWYER SAYS HIS CLIENT IS MILLIONS IN DEBT.

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — O.J. Simpson is more than $9.3 million in debt, his attorney says. Plaintiff lawyers claim he's worth $15.7 million and urged jurors today to impose a hefty award to punish the former football star and ensure the future of his children.

Simpson's wrongful death trial resumed today with arguments and testimony about how much the six-man, six-woman jury should assess in damages to punish Simpson for the June 12, 1994, deaths of Nicole Brown Simpson and Ronald Goldman.

Defense attorney Robert Baker said Simpson's net worth in December 1996 was minus $836,000. Add to that the $8.5 million in compensatory damages awarded by jurors Tuesday and Simpson is $9.3 million in the hole, he said.

• STATE LOOKING INTO SICKNESS OF MIDDLE-SCHOOL STUDENTS.

GARDEN CITY — No apparent link has been found between food served at a McDonald's restaurant and the illness that sent 24 middle school students to the hospital Tuesday night, a state health official said today.

The investigation is still in the early stages, and it could be weeks before any conclusions can be made, Greg Crawford, spokesman for the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, said.

Crawford said it seems unlikely the illness was food-borne because the busload of Liberal Middle School students got sick about 30 minutes after stopping at the restaurant following a wrestling match.

New city hall design proposal gains prominence at meeting

CAMI SOWERS
staff reporter

Expansion all around town and city hall is the latest building proposal to get attention.

The Manhattan City Commission Steering Committee met Thursday to discuss the expansion project designs that have been in the works since March 1996.

Brent Bowman and Associates is the architectural company that is working on designing the new city hall.

A legal self-evaluation of the building revealed to the city commission that the building was in need of infrastructure work, including asbestos removal, increased office space, leaks in the roof and larger elevators, Jerry Petty, director of public works, said.

Composite plans were presented to those in attendance showing the additions and how the space will be used for.

"A lot of the space that was needed for the first floor will be expansion space on the second floor," Brent Bowman, architech, said.

The main additions to the city hall will be a new city commission meeting room, a Poyntz Avenue entrance, spaces that can be sectioned off for different purposes, an auditorium lobby that is separate from the entrances, and a main entrance that directs visitors to the main lobby.

The main question raised at the meeting was how construction would take place and where offices would relocate during the construction. The consensus was to find a place not in the existing city hall building but to locate to a different address and inform citizens of the move.

The expansion will raise taxes, but the building is 42 years old and needs renovation, Petty said.

The project is estimated to take 12-18 months to complete, but no financial estimate has been reached.

Ultimate Fake Book rocks at Union

SPENCER JACOBSON
staff writer

Due to the weather, only a small group of dedicated fans braved the elements to see Ultimate Fake Book play Thursday night in Union Station.

Starting at 8 p.m., the band began two very entertaining hours of rock.

Ultimate Fake Book consists of Bill McShane, lead guitar and vocals; Nick Colby, bass guitar and backup vocals; and Eric Melin on the drums.

Compared to the amazing musical trios in the past, this group definitely proves that musical complexity can be accomplished with only three members.

The band played many of their own tunes and even incorporated one of their latest masterpieces spontaneously and probably temporarily titled "Waiting to Exhale."

They had an irresistible beat and groove and not one foot or hand sat still in the crowd. McShane countered the strong rhythms of the band with clear lyrics and a strong voice.

Not only did the band offer a free event for anyone who enjoys live music, but they were very entertaining in the sessions between songs and sets.

The band played a small jazz segment, which was a beautiful interjection of sound amidst the normal scheduling of rock. The band members showed incredible diversity not only as musicians, but entertainers as well.

It was fun to watch the members of a live band when they really seemed to be having fun themselves. The music, entertainment and the personal interaction with the audience made the performance worthwhile.

Ultimate Fake Book is a piece of the hometown talent that represents Manhattan in all the best ways possible.

SENATE

under building shelters was also passed.

In first readings, Senate heard a proposal to allow students to attend Landon Lectures without losing points for attendance or quizzes.

According to the proposal, students would have to inform their professors about their intended absences five class days in advance. Also, students would be allowed to make up planned quizzes or tests if they were attending the lecture.

Senate heard the first reading for the budget for the Office of Student Activities and Services. The proposal sets the budget at $169,593 a year for two years.

The majority of the increase would come from state mandated salary increases and improvements in benefits.

Also on the agenda for second readings next week will be a bill to increase the budget for maintenance and upgrades of equipment for Student Publications Inc.

If approved next week, Student Pub Equipment Budget Bill will increase by nearly $64,000.

Jake Breeding, privilege fee chair, said Student Governing Association acts as the middle man for state funding. Student Publications cannot receive direct funding from the state because it is a separate corporation.

"They lend the money to us," Breeding said. "We make the contract with Student Pub, and they get the stuff."

The proposed change in the Student Publications equipment budget includes upgrading computers and software for the Collegian, Royal Purple and Campus Phone Book.

Ron Johnson, director of Student Publications said computer equipment and software are more than 5 years old.

"We require very specialized software," Johnson said. "Equipment is used up to 18 hours per day."

A GUIDE TO SECTIONS OF THE COLLEGIAN OPINION PAGE

▶ COLUMNS are opinions expressed by the columnists. The opinions are not necessarily the opinions of the Collegian.

▶ OUR VIEW

University experience can be enhanced by not declaring a major

Failing to declare a major the first day of college isn't cause for panic, it's just taking the road less traveled.

Students struggling to decide between several areas of interest or looking at the world through a wide lens can benefit from a slight delay. By taking courses to fulfill general requirements in the first semester or two of college, students have the opportunity and time to find their direction.

General survey and introductory classes are offered in practically each college and course of study. An overview class might help you choose the correct path or steer you away from a tragic mistake.

If you have the itch to pursue a direction or questions, someone can help. Academic advisers are available to help students decide which major they want to pursue.

Waiting might be helpful in the end. Undecided students who investigate different options before declaring will save money by not changing majors later in college.

No stigma should be attached to students who choose to delay declaration of a major. K-State has a wealth of professors and researchers. If a particular educational track or career goal interests you, chances are someone here has that background.

Education does not begin and end in the classroom. Take classes for fun. An English major should not be afraid to take classes in Middle East History and there is no reason an architecture student should shy away from creative writing. Explore your interests.

Education is about all the experiences that ultimately form who we become. Learn about yourself by taking advantage of the opportunities to learn from this campus and community.

Unconditional LOVE

Love for a car can overcome the stresses of ownership

ADRIAN FLEMING/Collegian

VIEWPOINT
KEN WELLS

KEN WELLS is a graduate student in theatre. You can e-mail comments to Ken at (sigma7@ksu.edu).

I hate my car; I love my car.

I call her the MooMobile, a tan-colored moving scrap heap that has the full-option package: intermittent steering, occasional spontaneous smoke-screen defense and the always-illuminated "check engine" light which just happens to be brighter than both headlights combined.

She takes acceleration not as a direction, but as a suggestion, and tends to grumble through intersections (when she doesn't stop altogether). On the interstate, she moves about as fast as a barricade.

There's never a fear of her doing 70 mph — she couldn't do 70 if she were dropped from a plane. She gets about three blocks to the gallon — I gas her up before changing lanes. She's less like a vehicle and more like a scarlet-colored couch surrounded in a plastic and steel frame.

Still, I love her.

What is it about the American mind set with respect to our automobiles? Nowhere else that I've been have I seen such adamant dedication to a piece of machinery.

Europe has come up with stylish, affordable, even comfortable forms of mass transit.

Here, though, the default form of mobility is always the car. The human ability and motivation to walk is drained by a fueled car nearby.

This might seem a little harsh, but I suffer from this disease as much as anyone else. Despite the fact that starting the MooMobile takes an act of God and three days of planning — NASA has quicker ignition sequences — I love to drive. It doesn't have to be anywhere in particular or with any agenda in mind.

It's an escape from reality, shutting yourself off in this capsule from outside influence, where you can play your own music, scream bloody murder at passers-by with impunity, and just go. Don't need a point B or even a point A, just getting there is the rationale for the journey itself. The car becomes the tool for the ultimate expression of individuality — the ability to go when and where the driver wishes.

Of course, this isn't a free trip. Depending to whom you listen, the internal combustion engine is responsible for everything from the greenhouse effect to ozone holes to the splotch on Gorbachev's forehead. (Note that the possibility that my vehicle could cause the end of all life as we know it would probably urge me to drive to Maine for spring break.)

Maintenance of your average automobile isn't a trivial expense, either. From gasoline to oil to the occasional "tires fly off" incident you're looking at enough money to float a spare Yugo (or two).

The worst side effect of owning a vehicle, though, is finding a place to put the critter. You could plonk down some cash for a parking permit and park, and end up walking about as far as you would've had to walk in the first place.

For those of you who actually live beyond walking distance — and I've been one of those for all but one of my seven years here — three words: park off campus.

Aggieville has some usable parking areas for three-hour blocks. And, in the off-chance that you do get handcuffed to your instructor accidentally and can't get to your car in time, the fines off campus tend to be much less painful than the Parking Meter of Damocles that hovers over those who dare to park their car on University asphalt.

Make friends with the neighbors of the campus. Bring them baskets of fruit. Mow their lawn. Ask if you can park in their driveway. Marry their children. Anything for parking space.

In the off-chance that you do decide to try to park on campus, do us all a favor and keep moving, will you? Don't park in the lane and wait for someone to move. It's the human cholesterol in the parking lots that make life harder for everyone else. Play the parking game or get outta the lot.

And don't forget to tell your car how you feel about him or her. They need to be told.

Righting international wrongs requires activism

VIEWPOINT
JEFF CHAN

JEFF CHAN is a graduate student in English. You can e-mail comments to Jeff at (defcon1@ksu.edu).

Oh, the protests I have known ...

I remember engaging in a little street theater in the free speech zone during a peace rally the time of the Persian Gulf War. I remember standing opposite Fred Phelps and his pack with 10 times as many people, and we were the ones smiling.

I remember marching with thousands in the Gay Pride Parade under the shadow of the capitol of Texas, and I remember sitting with Molly Ivins in support of rights for the homeless. I remember sitting alongside Tibetan friends for 24 hours in front of the Chinese consulate building in Houston, while long, black cars with diplomatic plates slowly rolled by.

When I look back on those moments of public activism, those brief times of community agitation when your most deeply held beliefs take up open forum in an outward show of support and unity, I feel pretty proud.

Not that I consider myself a veteran, by any means. I'm one of the least activist-minded people I know. Still, despite the fact that my own brief history of protest seems to favor the lost cause, I feel like I played a part, however small. And maybe even made a difference.

I think what I'm most proud of when I consider my activism, protests or not, is the fact that I exercise it in a country that, repressed and repressive in its own right, still allows me and, I think, even encourages me, to do so.

In other places, it just ain't so.

Not that the United States is a paragon of freedom of speech (I'm thinking the FBI wiretap on Martin Luther King, Jr. I'm thinking the Federal Communications Commission).

But here, you stand a pretty good chance of not going to prison without trial for shooting a documentary film.

But this is indeed what happened to Ngawang Choephel, a Fulbright Scholar who studied at Middlebury College in the United States, while he was filming a documentary about his traditional native Tibetan music. Tibet, formerly an autonomous state, was invaded and occupied by the People's Republic of China in the 1950s, and has been undergoing a precise program of social and cultural genocide ever since.

Choephel was arrested in the fall 1995. For over a year, he has been imprisoned for the crime of exercising his freedom of expression.

Of course, he was doing it in a place where merely carrying Tibetan money, or a Tibetan flag, can land you in prison. Or worse.

Choephel is not alone. Unfortunately, prisoners of conscience — those imprisoned for expressing themselves non-violently — form an all too large fraternity.

Ngawang Choekyi, Ngawang Sangdrol and Gyaltsen Kelsang are only three out of hundreds of Tibetan Buddhist nuns imprisoned and tortured by Chinese national security forces.

Their crimes? Participating in peaceful pro-Tibet independence rallies and singing nationalist songs. All three were given extended sentences. Sangdrol, arrested last year at the age of 19, was given an extra nine years for, among other such things, not standing when an official entered the room.

All three have undergone torture and beatings, ranging from forced starvation to application of electronic batons.

Choekyi and Sangdrol are still imprisoned. Kelsang, who was arrested in 1993, was released in 1994 with severe kidney problems, loss of movement in her legs and impaired speech, all the result of torture in prison.

Feb. 20, 1995, at the age of 24, she died.

Despite such sobering cases, all is not lost. Choephel was moved late last year from his Shigatse prison to Lhasa, the capital of Tibet, where human rights officials believe he may be preparing for release.

Tong Yi, who was serving two and a half years re-education through labor (meaning 15-hour long days of forced work) without charge or trial, was released last October.

Yi, who acted as an assistant and translator for Wei Jingsheng, China's most famous dissident and himself currently imprisoned for activities associated with the 1989 Tiananmen Square demonstrations, was brutally beaten by inmates and guards during her re-education.

Both Yi's release and Choephel's hopefully imminent release are being credited to the activism of human rights supporters around the world.

All of the prisoners of conscience listed above, as well as several more, are currently active cases being worked on by members of Amnesty International Group 254, Manhattan — only one of hundreds of such groups working for the recognition of human rights.

It's easy for me to sit back and say it's easy to protest, easy to be an activist.

It's not. Otherwise I'd be doing it all the time.

But it's harder than we can imagine in many places, if only because it's so very necessary.

Hell yeah, I'm an activist. Damn proud of it, too.

• NEWSPAPER ASTONISHED BY READER FEEDBACK

Editor,

As colleagues, we were astonished by the backlash of comments directed toward Todd Stewart for his column condemning Manny Dies.

What was most appalling was the letter from former Collegian sports editors who did not support Stewart or his column. What, did these people sell out and start working in public relations?

Stewart had every right to criticize Dies as a character and player. This insanity about the Collegian being an athletic booster instead of a totally separate entity capable of having thoughts and opinions is bunk.

Since when do college newspapers not have the right to express displeasure with administrative decisions? If any member of the college's personnel were not performing up to standards, they would be out looking for a new job.

Dies, who is on scholarship, should be no exception. If he's not doing his job, get rid of him. All criticism directed toward Stewart is totally unfounded, and furthermore, anyone who publicly responded to his comments being offensive should take a long, hard look at what they said.

The two yahoos who called Stewart a moron during the broadcast of the K-State/Mizzou game should have any type of journalistic credentials revoked immediately.

However, if Stewart is the type of journalist we believe he his, he's still laughing about the comment. It would have made our day, too. When five years roll around and Dies is playing the same way Stewart believes he plays, it will only be in some musty YMCA gym. But if Stewart keeps writing the way he wrote in that column, he'll be big.

It was impressive a sports writer had the audacity, for lack of a better term, to write in that fashion.

It was not a journalistic faux pas to vent in that manner, as everyone would like to believe. It was human — a characteristic more newspapers need.

• VAMPIRE RAPIST STORY MAKES READER ILL

Editor,

Usually when I get sick at supper, it's because of the food I have to eat. Today, Feb. 3, it was because of what I read in an article in the Collegian.

I was horrified and disgusted to read that the "Vampire Rapist" was sentenced to life for smoking marijuana, but only to 11 years for raping a woman.

Let me get this straight.

A man can smoke a drug that is less harmful than either alcohol or tobacco and will subsequently be imprisoned for the rest of his life.

But, if a man rapes a woman, if he destroys a part of her soul, if he tears away her freedom and leaves her tormented, he does not have to serve the same life sentence that she does — he only has to serve 11 years.

Gee, it's always nice to know where my personal freedom and security ranks.

God bless America — it seems we need all the help we can get.

Orchestra performs to raise travel funds

CORI HERBERS
staff reporter

Gold Orchestra will sponsor a musical tea Saturday at the Manhattan Center for the Arts to raise money for a summer trip to England.

The orchestra, an area-wide string ensemble of young people ages nine to 16, has been invited to perform at the Rotary International Music Festival in Colchester, England.

Musical conductor David Littrell said while in England, the orchestra will perform in Avon, the 14th Century Abbey in Bath and London.

Gold Orchestra was formed in 1989 and has performed for local schools, towns across Kansas and traveled as far away as Chicago for concerts.

"It will be an experience for the kids to travel overseas," Littrell said. "It's an honor to be invited to the Rotary International Festival and I hope the community of Manhattan will support the kids and give them a chance to go."

The English-style high tea is a fundraising event to help the members with the cost of the trip.

"It's an expensive trip costing each kid more than $2,000 for travel expenses," said Martha Funderburgh, coordinator of the musical tea. "There are around 50 kids going to England and, through various fundraising events, the group hopes to come up with enough money to reduce the cost of the trip."

The musical tea will give the community a chance to listen to members of the Gold Orchestra.

"A few of the kids from the orchestra will perform solos, string quartets, and Littrell will also perform," Funderburgh said.

Four different styles of English tea will be served with sandwiches. Time slots have been established from 3:30 to 6 p.m. to serve 20-25 people at a time. A minimum donation of $15 is suggested.

A farewell concert is scheduled June 12 at All Faiths Chapel. For more information on the musical tea or for donations, call 539-1455.

Program helps undeclared majors

JOHN HENDERSON
staff reporter

According to William Feyerharm, assistant dean of arts and sciences, the undeclared major program is absolutely essential to the working university.

"In any university you always have one out of four students coming in who are legitimately undecided," Feyerharm said. "There has to be a group of professionals to help these students."

Nancy Kiefer is one of K-State's professional academic advisors for students designated Arts and Sciences undeclared, or ASUN. Gina Sylvester and Sue Haughton-Schmidt are also advisors.

"We refer to it as undeclared," she said. "There's a nuance of difference."

ASUN can be used in place of a specific major by any student who has less than 45 credit hours. Students may remain undeclared until they have 60 hours.

"Every so often we get a request to stay longer," she said. "But if they stay too long, they risk graduating in an untimely fashion."

Kiefer said she sometimes hears misconceptions about undeclared students.

"I've heard them referred to as clueless, and that's just not the case," she said.

Students in ASUN usually fall into one of two categories.

"Some have so many ideas in mind that they're not ready to commit to one major," Kiefer said. "Some don't have anything in mind. We really see the whole range."

Brooke Evans, freshman undeclared, said she falls into the former group.

"I've just got too many ideas right now," Evans said. "I don't want to go through the hassle of changing majors."

Kiefer said some students might know what they want in a major, but might not have the grade point average or credits to declare it.

"They need to know about other options, or at least a place to go until they can get where they want to go," she said.

Kiefer said ASUN gives students a chance to keep their options open while they are deciding.

"The deciding is an active process, and some students feel that by choosing one major, they eliminate the others," Kiefer said. "We make them aware of the possibilities."

Feyerharm said the concept of a university undeclared major program started in the 1960s in response to the previous decade.

"Students were just being thrown at faculty," he said.

Feyerharm said there were not many advisors who were interested in helping students develop an academic strategy at that point.

To help the students find a strategy that works for them, ASUN advisors meet with students, find out what their interests are and get them in touch with whatever resources are available on campus.

"The university has some wonderful introductory programs," Kiefer said. "Every college has some kind of overview or orientation course."

These courses often fill generic requirements for most declared majors, while helping students understand what is available, she said.

Kiefer said sometimes students worry about having to take courses they don't need or courses that don't count for graduation.

"I maintain that every college course is important, but I understand what they mean," she said. "Sometimes it takes many years to look back and say, 'I really used that.'"

To make sure they graduate in the meantime, ASUN advisors try to find overlapping courses that work between majors.

Kiefer said the advisors know about policies and procedures. They can give advice about the various resources on campus, including professors, but they can not offer counseling.

"We're not counselors, and we don't pretend to be," she said. "Sometimes we can get students in touch with some who are."

Feyerharm said college life can be difficult, but it makes sense to provide a service to help students before they graduate and enter the working world.

"Performance is not always addressed at the university level," he said. "In the real world, it always is."

RODMAN'S KICKING VICTIM ARRESTED FOR ASSAULT

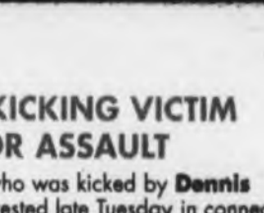
Columnist questions bad behavior from athletes, punishments



Why ask why?

Because I have nothing better to do that's why.

● Why is it athletes seem to get away with anything?

Most recent case in point: 19-year-old Olympic skating champion Oksana Baiul was arrested for running her Mercedes off the road in a 100 mph drunken joyride. She effectively got off with nothing more than a slap on the wrist.

VIEWPOINT

TARA WRAY

TARA WRAY is a freshman in print journalism. You can e-mail comments to Tara at (twray @ksu.edu).

A Connecticut judge sentenced Baiul to 25 hours of community service, a $90 fine and ordered her to enroll in an alcohol education plan (all charges will be erased from her record as soon as she completes the community service).

Note: if you must drink and drive, do it in Connecticut.

If your brain is straining for more examples of athletes in and out of trouble, give me half a second — I'll make a list.

Roberto Alomar and his spit, Pete Rose and his gambling, the entire Nebraska Cornhusker football team, Albert Belle and his temper, Darryl Strawberry and Dwight Gooden and their drugs, the Dallas Cowboys ... .

While we're on the subject of Alomar's juvenile spat which resulted in spit on umpire John Hirschbeck, a so-called "Spitting Summit" is being held to come to terms with the incident. Why?

Need I go on?

● In news closer to home — why is it we're charged hard earned money to see the men's basketball team frolic in despair, yet we can get into a women's game for free.

Most people at K-State know the men's team is struggling — to put it mildly — while the women's team is on a roll.

The women are undefeated in their last nine games at Bramlage Coliseum and are on the verge of making it to the NCAA tournament.

The men on the other hand ...

● From the "What Were They Thinking File"?

The Denver Broncos recently changed its team uniforms. If you thought orange was an ugly color before, you ain't seen nothing yet.

The Broncos have decided to go with a midnight blue (at least that's what they call it, it looks almost purple if you ask me) and an orange that would put Sunkist to shame.

Their helmets have also been — ahem — redone.

Instead of the traditional Bronco with steam shooting from its nose, the new Bronco is powerful and dynamic, or so says Denver public relations.

It looks more like a cougar with extremely good bone structure and a flaming orange mane.

It's fabulous. Just fabulous.

● On the flip side of that: why is it teams change, redesign, revamp and alter their uniforms to the point where you don't even recognize them, only to end up wearing throwbacks?

● Why did KU lose to Missouri?

● From the "Be Careful What You Say, Your Brain Might Trip Over Your Tounge" file.

An O.J. Simpson quote that has come back to bite with big, bad, stinging irony.

"The day you take complete responsibility for yourself, the day you stop making any excuses, that's the day you start to the top."

Uh, OK. I guess he's back on the bottom then.

● Why was the average salary in Major League Baseball $1,119,981, in 1996? On the other hand, why is the minimum salary $109,000?

Are utility infielders and other assorted bench warmers worthy of such money? Talk about underworked and overpaid.

● Why does the student section stand for the entire game?

● Dennis Rodman. Need I say more?

● From the "Why Is Steve Bono Still In Kansas City?" file.

I recently heard somebody egged coach Marty Schottenheimer's house. The egg-wielding sniper only hit the house twice. Twenty-two eggs were found lying unbroken in the yard. Due to the lack of accuracy by the assassin, Bono has been taken in for questioning.

Of course, it probably wasn't him though. It takes a lot of scrambling ability to egg a house.

● Oh yeah, one last thing. Why doesn't someone schedule a big time match up between the men's and women's basketball teams? It would be a fine spectacle to see, and I'm sure it would put more cheeks in the seats than Bramlage has seen all year.

I'd put my money on the team that has won a game since Christmas, how about you?

27 recruits sign letters of intent

SHANE MCCORMICK
sports writer

Twenty-seven high school and community college transfer players were signed and delivered to the K-State football staff Thursday on the first day that players could sign letters of intent.

Coach Bill Snyder said that the numbers of this year's recruiting class stand out.

"For the first time in our eight-year tenure at Kansas State University, we will have the full complement of scholarship players in our program (85)," Snyder said. "When we arrived in December of 1988 we had only 47 scholarship players.

Since that time, we have gradually increased the number and yet, until this point in time, have never had more than 75 on scholarship."

The breakdown of the 27 signers includes 15 freshmen and 12 community college transfers. The 12 community college transfers were a focus of this year's coaching staff.

"We are also pleased with the potential for immediate help from the transfer students," Snyder said. "It was our intent to put emphasis on junior college recruiting. We found some extremely talented young players that could have an impact with our program."

Included in the signing class are three Parade All-Americans, defensive end Monty Beisel, wide receiver Julius McMillan and linebacker Ben Leber.

McMillan, a 5'11", 170-pound wide receiver, was rated as the No. 2 receiver in the nation, and No. 3 player in the Midlands by SuperPrep. As a junior, he scored nine touchdowns in kickoff and punt returns, while scoring six touchdowns on reverses. Playing in a wishbone offense, McMillan grabbed only 12 catches for 350 yards.

"Julius really hadn't been in a position to excel with his abilities because of the system he was in," Snyder said. "His ability to play on the field, make big plays, is what immediately attracted us to him. He's got great speed and hands, he is just a good young man."

Looking at the numbers, it is obvious that the Cats concentrated on defense this off-season.

Seventeen of the newcomers are from the defensive side of the ball. Included in that group are four defensive backs from community colleges.

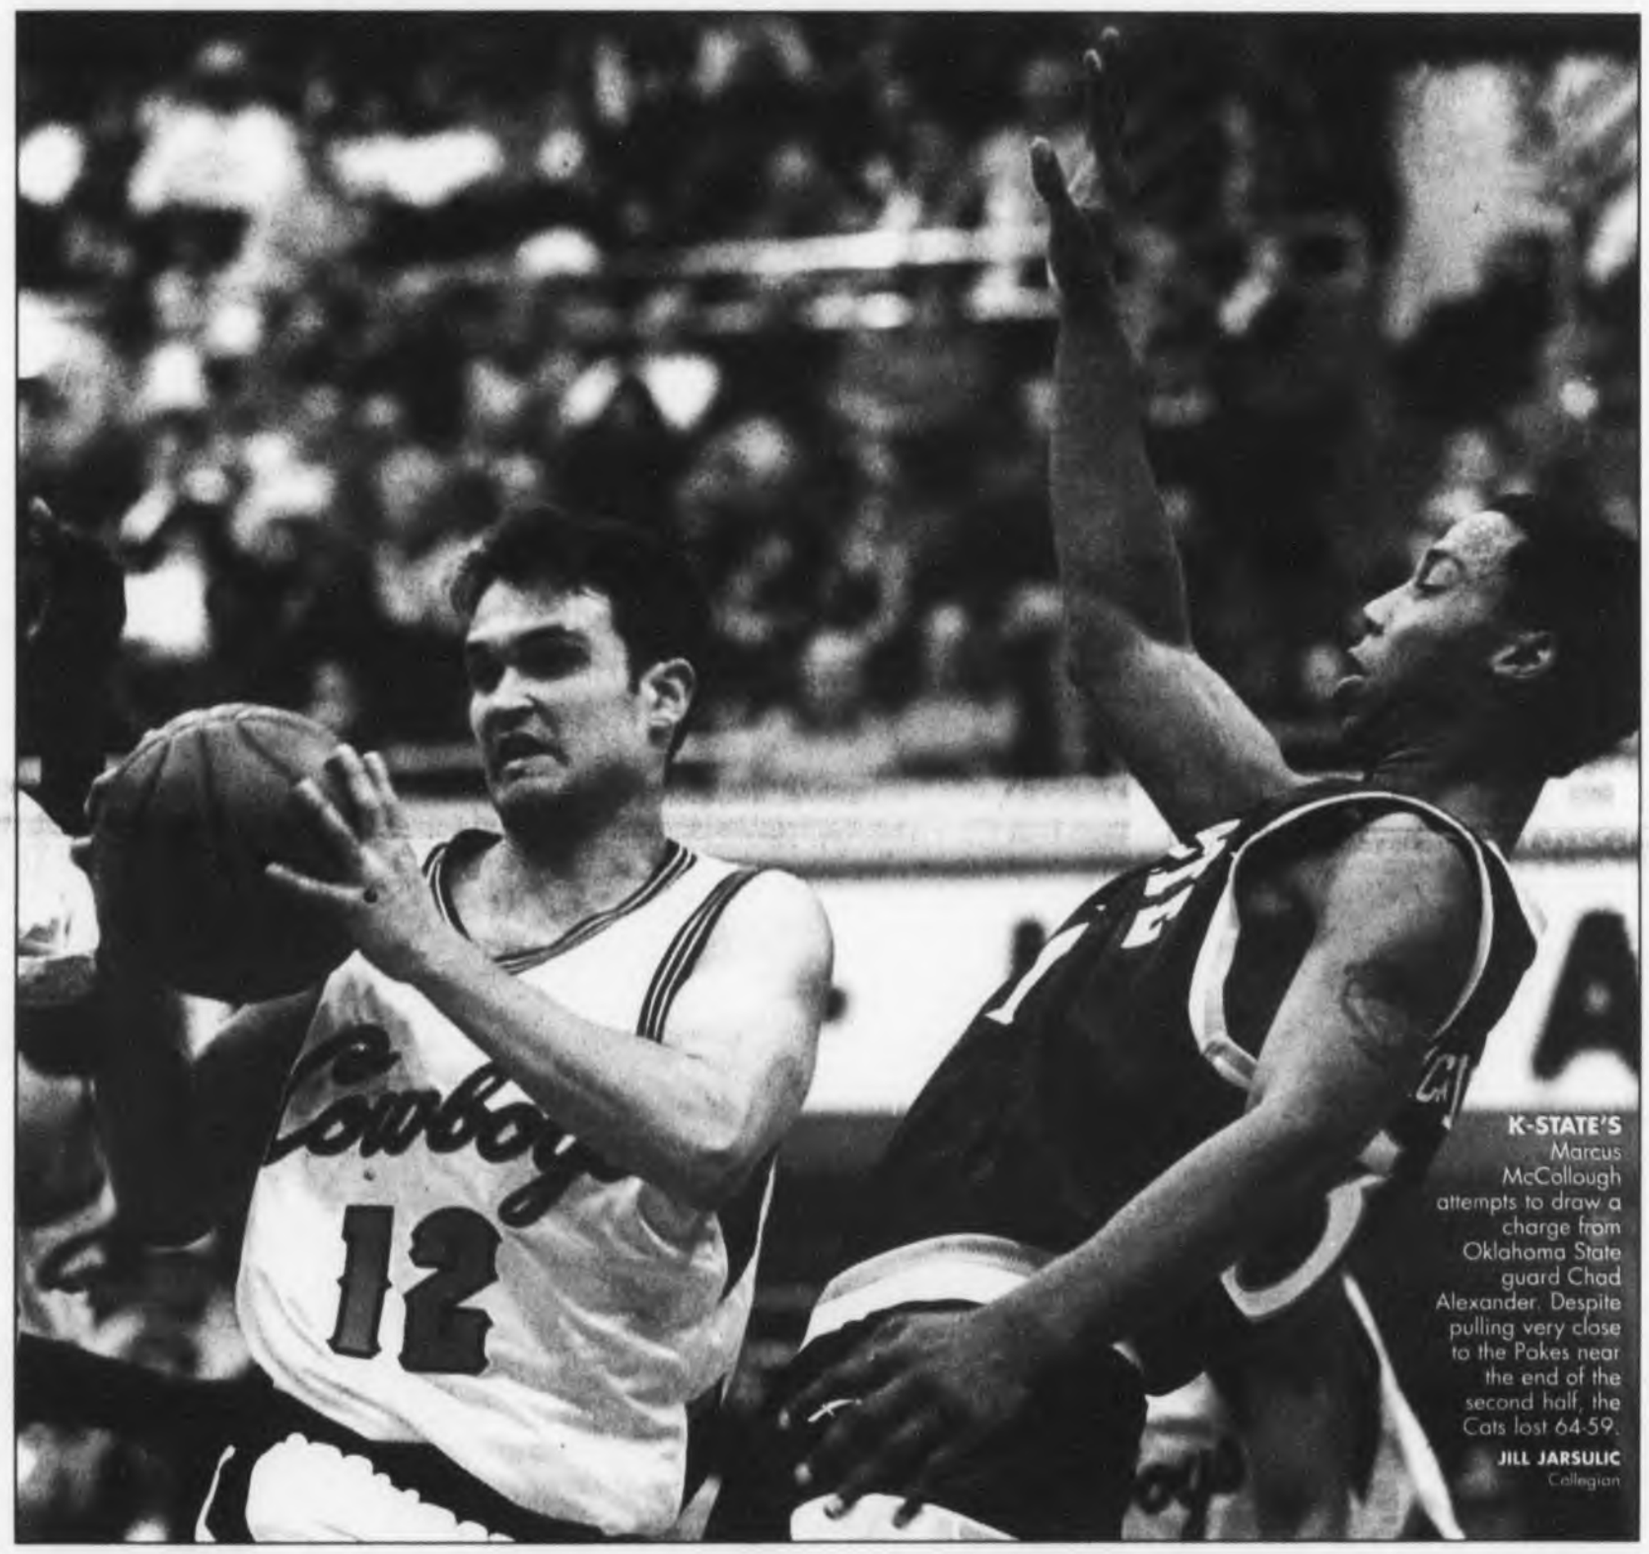
With the Cats losing four starters, the secondary became an area of need this winter.

"I would like to think that those four could provide an immediate impact on our team, that was our intention," Snyder said. "It wouldn't have been worth our effort if we didn't think they could come in and play right away."

With the loss of senior linebacker DeShawn Fogle, the Cats grabbed 6'3", 240-pound linebacker Jeff Kelly. Kelly was a community college All-American at Garden City Community College, leading the conference with 169 tackles and 12 quarterback sacks.

"Jeff is a very productive player. He is very physical and runs well," Snyder said. "He should come in at the middle linebacker position and try to contribute right away."

The Cats also grabbed two quarterbacks in this year's class, Jeremy Milne from Olathe North High School and Michael Bishop from Blinn Community College.



Bishop, 6'3", 195 pounds, was listed as one of the top three community college quarterbacks by PrepStar and as one of the nation's top 25 community college players.

Snyder said the effect Bishop will have right away will be a question mark.

"It really depends on how he reacts to the system," he said. "He is confident that he will adjust to it right away and I think he will react fine."

Snyder also said that he expects quarterback Cody Lee Smith to practice in spring drills and get some playing time.

The Cats' region of emphasis this year was the Midwest. The biggest number of recruits came from the state of Texas, where the Cats grabbed six players. Kansas provided the Cats with five players, while Oklahoma and Missouri provided four apiece.

K-STATE'S Marcus McCollough attempts to draw a charge from Oklahoma State guard Chad Alexander. Despite pulling very close to the Pokes near the end of the second half, the Cats lost 64-59.

Cats hope for break with home-court advantage

JEREMY KELLEY
sports editor

Right now, the lucky number for the K-State men's basketball team is five.

Of the next seven conference games, the Wildcats play five of them at home, an advantage Coach Tom Asbury said could turn in favor of the Cats.

Could this be a bright spot for a Cat team in a rut?

"Well, we don't have too many bright spots the way things are going right now," Asbury said. "Give credit to the kids though — they haven't allowed this thing to unravel and go south on them."

Asbury said he just hopes the team can keep a positive attitude throughout the remainder of the season.

"We've got five of our next seven at home. Now it's a matter of can we get our head up," Asbury said. "When the schedule's beating the crap out of you so far, then we'll just see. It will be interesting to see."

But other K-State players said the advantage may not be all that big.

"Playing at home doesn't even make a difference to me rather than playing on the road," guard Ayome May said. "I don't even know what home court advantage is really. It's doesn't bother me playing on the road or playing at home."

K-State (7-12, 0-9) takes on Oklahoma (13-6, 5-4) Saturday in Bramlage Coliseum. Again the Cats will have to try and defend one of the better shooters in the conference in guard Nate Erdmann.

Erdmann is averaging 20.1 points per game and nearly four three-pointers. Erdmann posted 34 points against Nebraska a week ago, the second-highest individual scoring mark in the Big 12.

"This league has a lot of go-to guys and again we get to see one of them," Asbury said. "He's one of the finer players in the league and he is really stepping up and having a good year."

Another player the Cats must contend with is guard Corey Brewer. Brewer averages 15.8 points per contest along with four assists.

But the number that stands out the most is his free-throw shooting. Brewer has been to the charity stripe 160 times this season, 33 more than any player in the league. Meanwhile, Brewer is hitting 80 percent of his free-throws.

"Brewer has been to the foul line a million times and hopefully we can keep him off of it," Asbury said. "He's another one of their solid role players."

The Cats are currently plagued with injury.

Forward Manny Dies has still not been cleared to play and center Gerald Eaker is nursing a broken finger.

But look for Asbury to tinker with the lineup again to try and capture that first K-State Big 12 victory.

"On any given night, any guy can step up," guard Chris Griffin said. "We have enough good players on our basketball team that we have the luxury of juggling our lineup."

Track team strives for repeat performance at weekend meets

TARA WRAY
assistant sports editor

Last weekend's Quadrangular-Triangular in Lincoln Neb., was a time for setting personal bests for some members of the K-State track and field team.

This weekend 26 members will go back to Lincoln in hopes of a repeat, while 21 will travel to Ames, Iowa, to compete in the Cyclone Invitational.

It may be a new meet, but the excitement from last weekend's meet, where two K-Stater's picked up automatic NCAA qualifications and two others were provisional qualifiers, hasn't.

"It was a pretty awesome meet," head coach Cliff Rovelto said. "The quality of competition was about as good as you're going to get in a meet of three or four schools."

The men's and women's teams were matched up against some of the nations best from Arkansas, Nebraska and Abilene Christian College in Texas.

"The teams that beat us were among the three best teams in the country," Rovelto said. "The fact that we were fourth doesn't hurt my feelings at all."

Though neither group picked up a first place nod in team completion, it was a record setting day for one Wildcat.

Junior Vanitta Kinard picked up first place honors in the triple jump along with a new school record.

Kinard's mark of 43'3-1/4" in the triple jump was a milestone for the junior. She broke a previous school best of 42'4-1/4", set by Felecia Curry-Carpenter at the 1987 NCAA Championships.

"At the time, it was the best jump in the country (Kinard's)," Rovelto said. "She broke the school record and her record as well."

For Kinard, she wants to use her record-breaking day as a confidence booster for this weekend when she faces some of the best triple jumpers in the country.

"The Husker Invitational usually has the top five triple jumpers in the nation," Kinard said. "I'll hopefully finish in the top five."

Rovelto said the team is in good shape going into the meet. He said the Husker Invitational usually serves as good preparation for the upcoming Big 12 Conference tournament along with the NCAA Championships in March.

"We're in pretty good shape as far as being where we need to be in preparation for the Big 12 and NCAA," Rovelto said. "Nebraska is usually the best collegiate invitational of the year."

In last weekend's Quadrangular-Triangular, sophomore Renetta Seiler picked up an automatic NCAA bid, winning the 20-pound weight throw with a toss of 63'6-3/4".

Provisional qualifiers included Travis Livingston who placed second in the 60-meter hurdles with a time of 7.91 seconds and Wanita Dykstra, who high jumped her way there with a mark of 5'10-1/2".

LETTING GO

A substitute teacher at a school in North Carolina was suspended after she used the restroom during class in November. The teacher reportedly urinated into a trash can in front of the class because of a medical condition. Likewise, a fifth-grade teacher from West Virginia was suspended after presenting his soiled trousers at a school board meeting. The teacher claimed he was forced to soil himself because the door to the faculty restroom was locked.

Band offers fast, local rock sound

Students looking for pure rock 'n' roll with a soft touch will not have to go far.

After replacing a bass player and guitarist, the Manhattan-based band Chick Scalletti and its groove-oriented style will be hitting the local band scene soon.

The band now consists of vocalist and guitarist Willie Vader, drummer Kenny Hauschild, and new members Gustav Kincaid and Brian "Roadie" Gilhousen.

"It's my first band experience, and I'm having a good time," Gilhousen, a sixth-year anthropology and English major, said.

Chick Scalletti has played songs from The Cars' album, the Sesame Street theme song and created a demo recorded by Red House Recording Studio in Lawrence. Their favorites include "Drunk Call" and "Check."

When describing the type of music this band produces, members said they prefer not to use the word alternative.

"I hate the word alternative," Willie Vader said. "We're alternative to mainstream MTV, but we still have poppiness."

Vader is a junior in wildlife biology from Kansas City, Kan. Aside from his job at Dilly's Deli, he has also been the music director at KSDB-FM 91.9 for two years.

Chick Scalletti offers different benefits for members of the band.

For Vader, who spends 10 to 15 hours a week writing and practicing, being drunk is one of the best ways to come up with lyrics to his songs.

"I like the groove and me saying stuff I shouldn't say," Vader said. "There are no inhibitions. You're not critical."

For Kincaid, a senior in biology, the band provides him with a source of meditation.

"I'm not fulfilling the audience's needs," Kincaid said. "I'm out there doing my own thing. I'm not going to jeopardize my integrity to satisfy the crowd."

Before the addition of the new members, the 2-year-old Chick Scalletti made appearances at the Waydown Lounge, Bombers and Snookie's Bar.

The band has not made any public appearances since the addition of Kincaid and Gilhousen. Because of the weather, the garage where the band usually practices has been too cold.

"We probably won't play again for three or four weeks," Gilhousen said. "We're waiting until the weather warms up a bit."

As for future plans, the band waits to play at Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon. Last Chance provides free shows on Tuesday nights when new and local bands can perform and get their faces known.

"I want to make something tight and play a lot," Vader said. "I want to hit the road some and put something out that we can sell before summer."

NEW ADDITIONS to Chick Scalletti, Gilhousen, (left) and Kincaid, (right), senior in biology, take advantage of a relatively warm night to practice up in the garage.

BRIAN GILHOUSEN along with the rest of Chick Scalletti, plan on playing at Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon in order to get their music out and their faces known.

▶ DEAR CASSIE,

I hate my roommate. She leaves her crap all over the house and doesn't help clean things up. She lets her boyfriend come here every weekend, and they take over the house, expecting me to leave if they decide they want the house to themselves. I'm sick of the dirty dishes, patronizing attitude and inconsideration.

Each and every morning she leaves her panties hanging on the shower rod. Sometimes her boyfriend's boxers are there, too. His always have stains on them.

To top it all off, she leaves the shower curtain open so the curtain gets moldy, and then she expects me to clean it up. I hate this woman so much it burns. She's not going to live here next year, but I need some advice on how to get through this last semester without strangling her.

Signed, Border-Line Homicidal

Dear Border-Line,

First of all, have you said anything to her about this wretched behavior? If she doesn't hear from you, she'll assume you're just an angry person and think she's done nothing wrong.

Have you reamed her? If you do, then she'll just get angry herself and nothing will improve. She might even get worse out of revenge — yes, it can get worse. I've seen it unfold. Have you sat down and rationally discussed the problem to no avail? If so, you really have a problem. Communication is your best course of action, and if it doesn't work, things could get nasty. Yes, communication is the key in this world.

If you don't get respect, start taking her dirty dishes into her room, take her undergarments outside, hide all the toilet paper in the house, salt her plants and eat all her food. This may be immature, but it sure feels good.

Love, Cassie

mourning. We want to celebrate his life."

Finck was a 1962 graduate of the University of Iowa. He received his master of music education in 1965 from the University of Arkansas. Finck was the director of bands at the University of Wisconsin at Whitewater prior to his hiring at K-State in 1983.

"He was the epitome of a true gentleman in every sense of the word," Flouer said. "He was an outstanding musician. He had a real concern and feeling for each student that shown through."

That concern for students was evident when Flouer had conversations with some of Finck's former students.

"I've had the opportunity to talk to prior students from other schools and many are coming to his memorial recital out of their own expense," Flouer said. "That shows a relationship between student and teacher that is rarely seen."

Finck popularized the marching band and changed the style of marching to corps. He was elected as the national president of Kappa Kappa Psi in 1991 and was on the board of trustees from 1993 to the time of his death.

Finck left the marching band program at the time it had turned around.

"I wish the band could have had the opportunity to talk to him more and be more involved with him," Barnum said. "The kids would know and understand the battles the marching band had to go through to get respect."

Barnum and Shultz said that the memorial service is open to anyone who wishes to pay their respects.

"Through many years in marching band I've seen many different responses to band directors," Barnum said. "Everyone in marching band liked him and did stuff for him and he, us. He was always there for us and we were for him, for the most part."

Chain letter assures quick cash, utilizes illegal pyramid scheme

staff writer

A new chain letter circulating in Manhattan is illegal. The letter promises from $18 to $25,000 after an initial investment of only $10.

Postal Inspector Tom Rebottaro at the Postal Inspection Service in Kansas City, Mo., said there are three ways to tell if a chain letter is illegal.

First the letter requires payment of some kind. In the chain letter circulating in the Manhattan area, the required payment is $10.

Second, there is a prize. In the local chain letter the promised prize for participation is $25,000.

And third, Rebottaro said, there is some kind of chance involved. "It involves no skill; there's nothing you can do to improve your chances," he said.

Rebottaro said anyone making money off of a chain letter is rare. "The fact of the matter is that the chance of making any money is very remote."

Another Postal Inspection Service employee said other factors to look for in a chain letter that may indicate it is illegal are multi-level marketing plans or pyramid schemes, and if the letter refers to any laws.

The local chain letter refers to Title 18, Section 1302 of the Postal and Lottery Code, saying that the chain letter is not illegal.

Rebottaro said the contrary. Title 18, Section 1302 is the part of the code that makes chain letters like the current one illegal.

He said the punishment for being involved with a chain letter can vary.

"One can pay up to $1,000 in fines and two years in prison, or if previously convicted, up to five years," Rebottaro said.

Rebottaro added that most of the time, people listed on a chain letter are sent letters by the Inspection Service to notify them that the chain letter they are involved in is illegal. He added that the punishment is more severe if the situation is more aggravated.

Manhattan Postmaster Marvin Roth said that besides being illegal, chain letters aren't moral — especially those chain letters that say people will have bad luck if they do not participate.

"Some people take these to heart," he said.

Roth said if anyone receives a chain letter, he or she should take it to the post office so that it will be sent to the Postal Inspection Service.

Roth added that if someone does take a chain letter to the post office, they need to write the date received on the outside, along with their signature, so that the Inspection Service knows the addressee received and opened the letter, not a postal employee.

The women listed on the chain letter, which bears the title "$$$ Need a Loan ???," could not be reached for comment.

covering up to $10,000 in education expenses for many families.

These middle-class tax cuts, which would be phased in, would total $98 billion. To partially offset the lost revenue, Clinton proposed $76 billion in tax increases, primarily through limiting certain tax breaks received by corporations and reinstating the 10 percent tax on airline tickets, which expired Dec. 31.

Clinton's tax-cut proposals contain only a $1.5 billion reduction in capital gains taxes, which Clinton limits to profits made on home sales. Republicans want to halve the capital gains tax on the sale of all assets. Their tax cut program totals $193 billion.

Clinton's package to defray college expenses was part of the education initiatives he highlighted in his State of the Union address Tuesday night.

In the area of deficit savings, Clinton proposed trimming Medicare by $100 billion during five years, with $10 billion of the savings coming from higher premiums paid by the elderly and the rest achieved by cuts in payments to hospitals, health maintenance organizations and doctors.

Medicare was one of the biggest areas of dispute last year, with Clinton branding the GOP's $158 billion package of savings during six years as excessive. Clinton, who sought $116 billion in Medicare savings last year, would achieve $138 billion during six years in the new plan.

themselves. One of the kids made a dolphin because he said he likes to feel free," Weishaar said.

Many of the children were making the self-portraits as presents.

"I like to make things to give to my friends. I am going to give this to my teacher for Valentine's Day," Alicia Pitts, a third grader at Theodore Roosevelt Elementary School, said.

For Jennifer Elliott, junior in elementary education, being with the children is the best reward.

"The warmth of the children and seeing how their minds work is great," she said. "They turn the simplest things into art. Their creativity is the best thing."

This is the third year the Wonder Workshop has sponsored the art club, and the second semester K-State students have taught the lessons. The children's artwork will be displayed in Willard Hall for a week, then given back to the children.

DESIGNS KEEP A-ROLLIN'

Hands-on architecture class to help renovate Topeka depot

Topeka's railroad history is part of the classroom for one fifth-year interior architecture design studio.

Students in Design Six, taught by Jim Dubois, associate professor of interior architecture, worked Saturday in teams on a design charette for the capital's Union Pacific Depot.

During the course of the semester, the students will develop group or individual designs for proposed renovation and adaptive-use elements of the depot and surrounding property.

What makes the class's project different is that this is an actual project with real clients and plans.

"I look for a project that can satisfy our education requirements, and if we can satisfy something else, great," Dubois said. "A sidebar to the class is that they can work with a real client."

Dubois said Design Six focuses on adaptive use, building renovation and historic preservation.

"Those three things lead us into projects like this," he said.

The development rights to the depot are owned by Topeka Railroad Days Inc. Members of the group and a downtown Topeka development committee ventured to Manhattan on Saturday to work with the students on the charette.

Among those visiting from Topeka were architects, engineers, landscape architects and interior architects.

A charette is an all-day design experience during which students work in teams with each team paired with a committee member.

The day began around 9 a.m. with overviews of the project and resulted in a proposed development-solution presentation.

Each team was charged with the mission to design a project in 10 hours that considered a limited budget and would address such needs as site access, surrounding community response and development.

Dubois said TRD would be looking to hire a professional design company within the year.

"Since it's a nonprofit organization, which doesn't have a large budget, this provides them the opportunity to explore a wide range of ideas before continuing onto the next level with a professional firm," Dubois said.

"Eventually, something will happen with this project, and the students have an opportunity to influence that outcome. It provides an educational opportunity and a community-service project."

Before lunch, students engaged in several discussions with TRD members and other Topekans about the project.

Erika Moody, fifth-year interior architecture student, said this is the first charette she's ever experienced.

"Our clients have ideas for what they want the space to do, and we'll have to come up with creative solutions," Moody said.

Working with a real client can change the way students approach the project.

"We get a lot more answers to our questions," Moody said. "It makes you think more. Other projects, you have a sky-high budget and few limits. This project is real."

John Hunter, Topeka resident and member of the Union Pacific Station Board design committee, said he sees the station as being a multipurpose facility.

"A historical building doesn't always fall into the classification of a museum," Hunter said.

Julie Cawby, fifth-year interior architecture student, said she is glad to be working on a renovation project.

"I have the philosophy that a majority of buildings should be renovated, instead of tearing it down and building one that looks old," Cawby said.

"It's a disgrace to the American heritage to get rid of the historic buildings," Cawby said.

Saturday's charette concluded at 7 p.m. with presentations and pizza.

To prepare for the project, students visited the Omaha Union Station, which has been successfully renovated.

"Since the semester began, we've really been just doing research," Dubois said. "This charette is the point between research and the design process."

Dogs help police fight KC crime

STEVE WARE
staff reporter

As the moonlight plays the night shadows against the ground, a dark figure moves stealthily along the side of an unlit building. With no one in sight, the burglar makes his way to a nearby window and with one fluid motion, opens it and disappears inside.

Moments later a second figure follows. But this one is not like the first. It's Cujo, the man-eating canine. This flesh-devouring-hound-from-hell jumps through the window and in the ensuing moments emerges with a whimpering crook clamped between his jaws.

Although this might sound like a B-rated horror flick, this scenario describes what a suspect might visualize when being pursued by a member of the Kansas Highway Patrol Police Service Dog Unit.

Commonly known as K-9 units, these specialized departments employ the aid of highly trained dogs to assist officers with law-enforcement duties.

One of the Kansas units is Troop A, which services the Kansas City-metro area. Trooper Tom Catania, a member of this troop, is a handler, responsible for training and working with his dog, Rintie.

"Rintie has been with our unit for three years," Catania said, "but I've only been working with him for about four months."

Rintie, a 4-year-old Belgian Malinois, is a dual-purpose dog, working as a patrol dog and as a drug sniffer. He rides with Catania during their shift, but is only called into action when specifically needed.

"We are troopers first, just like the normal patrols," Catania said. "When canine assistance is needed, we roll in."

As a dual-purpose dog, Rintie can be used to track and detain suspects, find missing evidence and locate hidden drugs or explosives.

"The dogs have much better noses than we do. They are trained to locate illegal drugs even through metal, like car parts," Catania said. "They alert us to search further in the area that they are indicating. I've seen many times where the dog has located narcotics in an area already searched by a trooper."

He said some of the dogs have received passive training, but most are trained to respond actively to the presence of narcotics.

"A passive dog is trained to sit and point when he locates drugs, but active training is more effective," Catania said. "The actives will bark and scratch at the area where they smell something."

The dogs are also trained to locate and detain suspects with as little aggression as possible, ensuring the least harm to the dog and the suspect.

"They've been trained to track a suspect and then lay down and bark until someone gets there. If the suspect tries to run or if he tries to fight the dog or one of us, he will bite," Catania said. "We train to build up their bite pressure so they can hold the suspect without having to bite twice. They also bite in the back so they don't puncture organs or blood vessels."

Rintie is one of 12 dogs used by the Highway Patrol. Most of the dogs are dual-purpose like Rintie, but some are single-purpose, narcotics sniffers.

"We started out with the single-purpose dogs, but now we're training them to work narcotics and patrol," Catania said.

The troopers and their dogs go through intensive continuous training to ensure the dogs are responsive

Cook-off promotes beef industry, campus group

▶ COOK UP THE WINNERS.

Overall Winner: Marinated Flank Steak

Ingredients:
3 flank steaks
1 10-ounce bottle liquid teriyaki
1 10-ounce bottle corn oil
1 bottle peppercorns
Directions: Pour teriyaki, oil and peppercorns into a container. Stir. Place steaks in marinade for 24 hours in refrigerator. Cook steaks four minutes on each side. Serve with favorite side dishes.

Recipe Winner: Marinated Beef Tenderloin

Ingredients:
1 (5- to 6-pound) beef tenderloin
1 cup burgundy wine
1/2 cup sherry
1 onion, quartered
2 bay leaves
12 slices bacon
Directions: Trim fat from tenderloin. Place beef, wines, onion and bay leaves in a large plastic bag and refrigerate at least four hours or overnight. Remove from bag and place in a broiler pan on a rack. Bake at 350 degrees for one hour or to 140 degrees on a meat thermometer. During the last 10 minutes, place partially cooked bacon on top of tenderloin to finish cooking. Serves eight to 12. (Note: Can be baked to 160 degrees if desired. Meat dries out above this temperature.)

The aroma of fresh beef filled Weber Hall Saturday morning during the first cook-off sponsored by the K-State Cattlewomen's Association.

"This started out as a fundraiser for the club, and then it became not only a promotion for the club, but a beef promotion," Shawna Hollinger, senior in animal sciences and industry, said.

"We wanted to make all of the campus aware that we are here and to get them more involved in the beef industry and educate them," Abby Janssen, senior in animal sciences and industry, said.

Each recipe had to use some kind of beef, and contestants had to cook it to the proper temperature. The contestants also needed to display the product for sampling.

Contestants were allowed 30 minutes to prepare the product. If the product needed to be cooked longer than that it was OK, as long as it was prepared within the time limit at the contest, Earline Dikeman, adviser, said.

The contestants were allowed to use the kitchen in Weber 107 to finish preparation of their product if necessary. There were hot plates set up to keep entries warm and get them ready for presentation, Janssen said.

• NATURAL GAS PIPELINE EXPLODES IN NORTHWEST WASHINGTON.

EVERSON, Wash. — A natural-gas line explosion sent a flame hundreds of feet into the air late Saturday night.

The blast lighted up the skies as far as 40 miles away.

There were no reports of injuries.

A state road and a border crossing into Canada were closed near this small town as a precaution.

The 26-inch natural-gas main owned by Northwest Natural Gas exploded in a clearcut area that was sparsely populated.

• MAN MISTAKES PREGNANT WIFE FOR INTRUDER, SHOOTS HER.

MIAMI SPRINGS, Fla. — A man mistook his pregnant wife for a burglar and fatally shot her early Saturday.

Miguel Faraldo, 32, told police he was awakened by noises in his suburban Miami home.

After he was awakened, he grabbed his semi-automatic handgun and went to investigate.

Thinking his wife was still in bed, Faraldo shot at what he thought was an intruder.

He fired one shot, hitting his 24-year-old wife, Mabel, in the head.

They had been married two years, and she was six months pregnant.

• ECUADOREAN MILITARY URGES PEACEFUL END TO CRISIS.

QUITO, Ecuador — With an ousted president, a vice president and a congressional appointee all vying to lead the country, Ecuadoreans looked to the powerful military Saturday to resolve the three-day-old crisis that has pitched the country toward anarchy.

Ecuador's armed forces have urged a swift and peaceful resolution to the political crisis.

Thousands of demonstrators thronged the streets of the capital Friday to demand President Abdala Bucaram accept Congress' decision to kick him out of office.

"The country cannot have a power vacuum," armed forces chief Gen. Paco Moncayo said.

Moncayo at the same time stressed that the armed forces would remain neutral in the conflict.

Since Thursday, Ecuador has found itself with three people claiming the presidency — Bucaram, the man Congress named to replace him and the country's vice president, who says the constitution gives her a right to the job.

The armed forces in Latin America have a long tradition of playing important political roles and often have seized power when their countries appeared to be sliding into chaos.

The Ecuadorean military governed this small Andean country from 1972 to 1979 before the return of democracy.

• GRIEVING FAMILIES VIEW TWA FLIGHT 800 WRECKAGE.

SMITHTOWN, N.Y. — Families of victims of TWA Flight 800 on Saturday toured the cavernous hangar where tons of broken metal, scorched seats and broken luggage pulled from the ocean floor have been reassembled.

Before entering, more than 130 relatives were shown pictures to prepare them and signed releases promising not to sue for mental distress from what they saw.

• RELATIVES OF AILING PERUVIAN HOSTAGE DEMAND HIS RELEASE.

LIMA, Peru — Relatives of an ailing hostage marched outside the Japanese ambassador's residence, begging the armed rebels holding him and 71 others to let him go so he can get medical help.

A separate rebel group apparently bombed a private office building Sunday morning, in a reminder of the guerrilla violence that has plagued this Andean country in recent years.

The blast at 5:30 a.m. caused significant damage but no deaths or injuries.

Police said they found pamphlets at the scene indicating that Maoist Shining Path rebels planted about a pound of dynamite.

DAN DEAN, part of Phillips, Craig and Dean, performs Friday in McCain Auditorium.

Singing the Word

Christian rockers entertain McCain crowd

REVIEW BY KIM BRUNA • PHOTOS BY CLIF PALMBERG

It might have been a cold Friday night, but the music in McCain Auditorium was enough to keep the near sell-out crowd warm.

Kathy Troccoli, the group Phillips, Craig and Dean, and newcomer Sarah Hart presented a three-hour concert full of Christian music.

Troccoli was the veteran of the concert lineup. Her first appearance on stage brought the crowd to its feet.

"I wanna sing all the songs of heaven tonight," Troccoli said as she entered the stage. And that she did.

Beginning with upbeat songs, Troccoli was energetic and expressive. She communicated with the crowd every chance she got. Her husky, controlled — yet sometimes too low — voice worked on an array of songs.

Although Troccoli took every opportunity to speak of Jesus Christ, she mixed it in with her music to give her listeners a complete package. Troccoli also sang a mix of some of her hits, including "Everything Changes," which was a hit on the pop charts.

Audience member Sydney Nettles, 8, gave Troccoli a valentine. In return, Troccoli brought Nettles onstage to sing with her. The little girl took the microphone, singing every word.

Even sharing the spotlight, Troccoli showed her class and talent, making her fans happy.

Phillips, Craig and Dean, which consisted of Randy Phillips, Shawn Craig and Dan Dean, took center stage with a high-energy performance. Although they should have left their choreography backstage, the blend of their voices made up for their overdone moves.

Though Phillips, Craig and Dean were good together, they each took the microphone and instruments by themselves, spotlighting their individual talents. This created a more intimate setting and allowed the audience to sit back and listen to their message.

What actually worked best for these three is that they seemed to truly enjoy each other as artists, as well as the music they performed. This was evident as none of them outshined the other.

Phillips, Craig and Dean, who wrote nearly 80 percent of their own music, were successful in getting the audience to participate during their part of the concert. While encouraging the audience to sing along with them at most times, Phillips, Craig and Dean also had points in their concert when they took too much away from their music and seemed like they were preaching.

The surprise of the evening came from Hart, who took the stage first. Although she was not on the concert bill, she was nonetheless a quality addition. Though she sang only a few songs, Hart showed the power of her voice by using unbelievable vocal control and emotion.

Even though she was obviously nervous during only her second concert, Hart did not let this stop her as she sang self-penned songs and played her guitar.

Hart, 29, later joined Troccoli as her backup vocalist and keyboard player. Reminiscent of Jewel or Shawn Colvin, Hart might be new to the Christian music scene, but she will not be unknown for long.

The concert was sponsored by KHCA-Angel 95, Ramada Inn and MKC Ministries, a six-month-old organization out of Great Bend.

- This semester, we will be covering the announcements of candidacies for presidential tickets based on the newsworthiness of the event.
- All candidates will be referred to by their real names when mentioned anywhere in the Collegian.
- The editorial board will accept one column from each presidential ticket, to run the week before the elections begin. To run, the columns must be submitted before 1 p.m. Feb. 24. The columns will be printed in alphabetical order.
- A guide covering all elected positions will be published before the elections.
- Letters to the editor will be accepted, and they will be printed as space allows. However, no letters from non-students or candidates for any races will be accepted.
- Candidate information for the voters' guide will be compiled using questionnaires given to candidates at mandatory meetings. All questionnaires must be returned to the Collegian newsroom by 1 p.m. Feb. 21, if candidates wish to be included in the voter's guide.
- The Collegian editorial board will endorse candidates for president and vice president on March 6. The endorsement will run on the Opinion page.

If you have any ideas for coverage of the elections or the issues, feel free to stop by the newsroom or e-mail us at (collegn@ksu.edu). We want to make this the best election coverage K-State has seen, and we want your help.

Our View, an editorial selected and debated by a majority of the editorial board, is written by the editorial board after a concensus opinion is reached. The editorial board consists of Collegian editors and other students. For details on how you can become involved with the editorial board, contact Kevin Klassen, opinion editor.

valentines and dr. love's taking a closer look at manhattan's seamy underbelly

VIEWPOINT

BRANDI HERTIG

BRANDI HERTIG is a sophomore in print journalism and English/creative writing. You can e-mail your comments to Brandi at (blh0377@ksu.edu).

With Valentine's Day in our midst, I'd like to pay homage to the man who got Cupid himself to run around naked — Dr. Love.

If you're not familiar with this seamy underbelly of the Little Apple, Dr. Love's is, according to the signs outside, 1.) a blues and jazz club and; 2.) a fresh seafood eatery. A third sign paints a more accurate picture, simply reading, "Dr. Love's and all that." Yeah — all that minus clothing.

The sign on the entrance to the bar reads "YOU MUST BE 21 TO ENTER THIS BAR." Ah, how painfully incorrect (and also pretty ironic, considering the average dancer there appears to be about 18).

They didn't card me or my female friend (she's 20 and I'm 18), and we received free admission. However, they carded the man with us, and charged him $3 for an evening's worth of gyrating and whatnot.

The bar is a small room, congested with swanky leather benches. The air is thick with cigarette smoke, throbbing music and raucous conversation.

At the front is a hastily thrown-together stage, perhaps crafted by Dr. Love himself in his garage. This is the place where several young women will perform sexual aerobatics (completely naked, mind you) with a kitchen chair, much to the delight of the throngs of horny men lining the benches.

Now, there's nothing wrong with nudity, I'll admit. What does make me wince a bit is that I've been told that there are laws in Kansas stating that such dancers must keep their ... ahem ... panties on at all times.

The fact that I learned all about how to shave body parts I didn't even know existed is a pretty good indicator that maybe a few laws are being disregarded here and there.

Another little oversight at Dr. Love's is a matter concerning the patrons' hands and where they can and cannot be. One of the dancers there told me that in Kansas men cannot, by law, touch the women.

Whether this is true, I'm not sure, but it makes sense from an ethical standpoint. However, the same woman also said that at Dr. Love's, the whole touching thing is determined by how much the girl is willing to put up with.

Let's recap a bit. It's a bar where I got in despite that silly over-21 bit (I will give them credit for not serving us alcoholic beverages.) The women are naked, and the men can touch them. A pervert's paradise indeed.

If some of the things going on there are illegal, what's the deal? Is it that Officer Krupkie is there himself, watching someone who could be his daughter undulate about clad only in thigh-high leather boots?

The fact that I'm tip-toeing around what the laws exactly say is because I'm not 100-percent sure about the exact wording. That's not so unusual, what with me being merely an 18-year-old college student.

However, when I called the Riley County Police Department to find out exactly what the laws state, the officer on duty said he didn't even know, but he could look it up and get back with me. Hmmm ...

All legal tidbits aside, I can't help but wonder about the women working there. I know a few of them personally, and one would never guess what they do at night. I'm sure they all collect a much mightier sum at Dr. Love's than I do sitting here, plunking at a keyboard. But is that extra dough worth being gawked, groped and pawed at by some depraved middle-aged man?

MATT HAWKINS/Collegian

Society has placed such a high standard on money and things of monetary value that it has overridden any sort of standard of respect people have for themselves. And maybe it's this need to meet society's standards that are driving these women to allow themselves to be treated as sex objects at the leisure of a bunch of strangers.

My guess is several of these girls are students here at K-State and are putting themselves through college by working at Dr. Love's. It's a little bit funny that the price society has out on a college education goes farther than simply shelling out $2,000 per semester.

Because this is such a catch-22 situation, it's hard to say what would be the right thing to do. Just shutting the place down is obviously not the answer.

Perhaps if more attention was given to that big pink warehouse on K-18 (and I'm not talking about advertising here), then Dr. Love might feel some sort of moral obligation to provide a safer environment for his employees.

As it stands right now, Dr. Love's has nothing to do with love.

Verbal whittlings with Webster a dictionary provides adventure from a to z

I confess, I'm not just some thesaurus-thumping hudlum, I have a legitimate word fetish.

Nothing kicks my pheromones into overtime like a new vocabulary word, and I've been known to swoon for a good metaphor.

I admit it. If my columns seem combustibly infested with run-on sentences, it's no accident.

It is all part of my elaborate plan to smuggle poetry into the Collegian opinion page first and ultimately to corrupt the entire English language as we know it, putting all copy editors out of a job.

There's so few inches, so little to write about, yet so many ways to write about it, how can we waste our time trying to being coherent?

Sparing adjectives is a traumatic sacrifice that reminds me of the guilt I would feel about leaving one last pea alone on a plate.

As the one with the spoon, I felt responsible for eating all of them, so as not to separate any of the peas from their family, or at least to waste them only in pairs so they wouldn't be lonely.

Now my spoon is my delete button, and rather than compromise my excessive use of words, I would like to propose a bit of a linguistic revolution.

I recommend a holiday dedicated to absorbing the humbling immortality of words. I'm still recovering from mine. I know it's sick.

Back in the days when I could pass for being a child, I always wanted to be one of those people who had actually read an entire dictionary.

In fact, my life of crime began when I stole a thesaurus from school.

Finally, somewhere between worshiping Barbie, attempting to look like Barbie and Barbie bonfires, I was introduced to my estranged grandfather, the encyclopedia salesman. (Not a metaphor, really.)

Suddenly, I had inherited a library of the family-discount collection of encyclopedias. It really wasn't just a set of encyclopedias, it was a library. Immediately I looked up "penis" and "Madonna" and lost interest.

But when the stars would align in that Einstein-meets-Sam Kennison sort of traveling constellation, I would take it on, sometimes two volumes at a time.

And that was as far as I got, two volumes.

Needless to say, I had a lot more luck with the dictionary, which leads me to my proposition to stop trying to adapt a linguistic code based on the presumption of a lowest common denominator.

I'm not endorsing the infiltration of academic brain wedgies into the masses, but who says some of the words circulating academia wouldn't be practical?

Allow me to demonstrate:

In addressing your roommate in a brief note, you could say, "Please do the dishes. It's been your turn for weeks and I'm too exhausted to deal with it."

Or you could say, "WARNING: DOMESTIC REFORM OR DEATH BY SLEEP DEPRIVED ROOMMATE."

Another example is one could say simply, "Leave me alone or I'll tell on you," or even, "Go to the inferno, yuppie-reject."

But why not try, "Disperse in haste, you branchycephalic spermophile, or meet my commission-dependent, recreational anthropophagous patriarch."

Translation: "Get the hell out of Dodge, you deformed-headed rat, or I'll sic my flesh eating encyclopedia-vending grandfather on you."

See if you can translate this one:

"The whirligig wiz-bang gasconade about their charitable endeavors, but all the burbling loggerheads do is gormandize our resources." (Is anyone else getting excited?)

Enough suspense, it says, "The hypermobile first-class talk with excessive pride about their donations, but all the rambling flesh-eating turtles do is devour our resources."

If all else fails, as these examples show, many obscure words make convenient insults regardless of their meaning, i.e., "keep your hanging participle to yourself."

This is also a good alternative when you realize you can't use these words in context with a straight face.

The conclusions of my one-night stand with Webster's led me to make a small list of observations.

The most unnecessary word I found was "curculio," meaning "one that injures fruit." The only use for such a word would be again as an insult, "YOU MAGGOT SPEWING CURCULIO!" One other possibility would be to adapt it as a name for a generic rap artist, i.e. "CarCoolio."

I would give "W" with the weirdest words award for weepy, whopping, wabble, wobble, whirligig, wigwagging, whiz-bang or one of my favorites, "wedlock," a word a little more indicative of its meaning than might have been intended.

But two words, tatterdemalion and ragamuffin, which are actually synonymous, meaning a sloppy dresser, get my vote for seeming most appropriate for their meaning, with the exceptions of words like "POW," "ZAP," and "ZOWIE."

My favorite definitions I call the "duhs." An example is the word "looper." It is defined as one who loops.

Thus why I call it a "duh."

Still, I believe there is a place for every word and none is without worth.

If we can't make the world a better place, we might as well perfect our skills in linguistic gentrification.

My favorite definitions I call the "duhs." An example is the word "looper." It is defined as one who loops. Thus why I call it a "duh."

• READER DISPLEASED WITH BIASED SIMPSON VERDICT ANALYSIS

Editor,

This comment is not in response to an article that was written, but rather the Simpson verdict.

I'm frustrated by all the legal analysts running wild giving their biased opinions. Specifically, I think analysts are being too closed-minded in calling the juries' decisions in the criminal and civil trials race-based. The proverbial "race card" was made an issue by a prosecution witness in the criminal trial.

He was found to be a bigoted liar. I don't think it's unrealistic to say this had a very big effect on the trial outcome; the evidence collected by the police didn't carry as much weight after that. In this case, Simpson himself was found to be the liar. Why can't we draw conclusions based on facts instead of speculation? In both cases, the liar lost. Period. It's irresponsible to assume the verdicts had everything to do with the racial make-up of juries or the price of the lawyers employed. The liar lost. That's all.

I feel all the racial strife caused by these trials had very little to do with the crime or the offender. It had everything to do with legal analysts, many of whom heard no testimony firsthand, running around speaking their mind. They cannot speculate why the jury decided what it did. The jury looked at evidence, and a jury cannot trust the testimony of a liar. So rightfully, the liar was the loser in each case.

• LOOKING FOR SOMETHING TO DO? TRY GOING TO A BASKETBALL GAME

Editor,

I am writing in response to the column, "Manhappenin'?," by Jess Louk (Feb. 4).

In his column, he writes about improvements our fair city could use. One thing he absentmindedly reported, "We need a men's basketball team," four separate times.

Well, I've got news for you, Louk. I am proud to say that K-State does have one. When your article was published, you didn't just put down one player or a coach, but the whole team. Granted, they don't have a good record. Still, I should think you wouldn't be so downhearted as to turn your back on them. I remember all the talk about how K-State's football team wasn't so hot once upon a time, either. That has changed, and this will, too.

So, as fans, I ask you all to cheer on our team. Next Monday, I'll be singing "The Star Spangled Banner" with the Men's Glee for the Feb. 10 game. It's doubtful you'll be able to pick me out, though. I'll be just one of the many with my purple heart on my sleeve. Be a good sport. Go out and support. Go Cats!

Mortar Board to focus on children's issues

BECKY WINTER
staff reporter

Thirty-five K-State students will turn Mortar Board's Leadership Week into serious child's play.

Mortar Board's theme for the year is on children's issues, and the club is incorporating this theme into leadership activities beginning today, said Becki Blankenship, senior in secondary education and Mortar Board member.

"Children are definitely our future, and any time we can get involved with them, it makes everyone's future in the long run better. Sometimes I think we lose sight of that," said Jenny Graff, senior in agricultural economics and Mortar Board member.

Students will have the opportunity to listen to speakers and participate in the Administrative Forum during the week.

Brian Cobb, minister of the Church of Christ in Manhattan, will kick off the week with a speech titled, "Preparing for Marriage and Family."

"Since our theme is on children, we thought Brian could tie in family issues to children's issues," Blankenship said.

Mortar Board will also be host to an Administrative Forum, in which students can talk to administrators from noon to 1 p.m. Wednesday in the Union courtyard.

Space station update to be given

CAMI SOWERS

Space — the final frontier? For some K-State and the University of Colorado students and faculty, it could answer their questions.

Ed Gabris, director of the Space Development and Commercial Research Division in the Office of Life and Microgravity Sciences at NASA headquarters in Washington, D.C., will be speaking at 7 p.m. Tuesday in Union Forum Hall on the status of the International Space Station project.

BioServe Space Technologies, a commercial space center led by K-State and the University of Colorado, is sponsoring the presentation, open to all students and the general public.

Gabris will be speaking about the space-station progress and activities that will be done inside the space station. His office is planning the transition of most research activities from the space shuttle to the space station.

K-State research projects have been on 12 space-shuttle flights, and experiments will be done on the station. These cover a wide range of topics including biomedical research, agriculture, environmental and developmental experiments.

"We hope to leave wildcat tracks in space," Terry Johnson, distinguished professor of biology at K-State, said.

The space station will be an orbiting lab that will travel around Earth. This will be a station on which astronauts and cosmonauts will be able to live and work, Johnson said.

Construction of the space station will all be done in space. Completion of the station is set for 2002, and it will be about the size of the U.S. Capitol, Johnson said.

This station will serve research and biological purposes for making new materials that cannot be made on Earth because of gravity.

Because being in space takes calcium out of astronauts' bones, this might be a better place to test drugs for osteoporosis, Johnson said.

The space station will be a permanent orbital research facility to study, use and develop the environment of space. The United States, along with 13 other countries and more than 120 students and faculty members of K-State and the University of Colorado, are involved in the International Space Station project.

TO END A STREAK

Cats defeat Oklahoma 67-63, end losing streak

K-STATE'S AARON SWARTZENDRUBER has the ball stripped away by Oklahoma's Renzi Stone Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum. K-State got its first Big 12 win in the 67-63 victory.

It finally happened.

K-State ended a 10-game losing slump Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum and picked up its first conference victory with a win against Oklahoma, 67-63.

Oklahoma dominated the first half, but the Cats slowly chipped away at the Sooners' lead. The Cats picked up the defense in the second half, allowing the Sooners a measly 26 points in the second frame.

For the game, the Cats shot a season-high 57 percent from the field for the game and 60 percent in the second.

None of the K-State players showed any overzealous emotion after the first win but remained rather pacified.

"It's just another game to me," guard Paco May said. "We don't have time to party or whatever because we have lots more games. That's just the way we deal with it."

Even Coach Tom Asbury, who had just gone through the worst slump in his third year at K-State, was tranquil after the upset.

"Oh yeah, we're quiet," he said. "I went into the locker room after the game, and it was quiet, but we've got another game on Monday, so we have to move on."

Down 37-32 at the half, K-State broke out of the gates with a bang. Guard Aaron Swartzendruber hit his third straight three-pointer of the game with 19 minutes, 46 seconds to play, and the Cats were within two.

The Sooners exercised a petite lead until May put K-State on top for the first time with 14:12 left. May was fouled on a layup and hit the free throw to give K-State its first lead of the game.

Oklahoma guards Nate Erdmann and Corey Brewer kept the Sooners in the game. Erdmann put the Sooners on top, 57-51, as he hit a three-pointer with 6:52 left, but the Cats came right back.

Swartzendruber, who finished the game with 14, sank another three-ball with 3:18 left that gave the Cats the slim lead, 61-60. The three-pointer was Swartzendruber's fourth of the night.

"The shots were coming to me," Swartzendruber said. "After the first ones fell, I just got more and more confident. It just seemed like they were there today."

From that point on, K-State never trailed. Forward Mark Young hit some key free throws toward the end to seal the 67-63 win for K-State.

"Finally, we got that monkey off our back," Young said. "It's a big relief but we've got some other games now."

However, it was all Oklahoma in the first period as the Sooners exercised the biggest lead of the game at 13 points. Brewer chipped in 10 for the Sooners and fueled a possessed Sooner offense. But a hot Oklahoma team turned cold, hitting just four field goals in the last 8-1/2 minutes.

May shows consistency with back-to-back 20-point game performances

JEREMY KELLEY
sports editor

K-State guard Ayome May is on a roll.

In his previous two games, May has recorded more than 20 points. Last Wednesday May added 20 at Oklahoma State just before having a big game at Missouri.

After that performance, guard Mark Young had a few choice words for May.

"After he had his first 20-point game, I kinda messed with him," Young said. "I asked him if he thought he could get back-to-back 20-point games."

Well, it worked, and in the words of ESPN commentator Stuart Scott, "Playa, playa blew up!"

Again May tallied more than 20 points. This time it was a 22-point career-high outburst Saturday against Oklahoma. It was his third consecutive game with 20 points and his 15th double-figure scoring game of the season.

"Paco's obviously been taking really good shots, and he's getting confidence in his offense," Coach Tom Asbury said. "He can score a lot of different ways, and he's real confident right now."

At the half, May had 11 points, four of which came in the last minute and put K-State within five at the half, 37-32.

But in the second half, May triggered a Wildcat comeback. With 14:12 left, May hit a layup and was fouled by Oklahoma guard Nate Erdmann. May hit the bonus free throw and put the Cats up for the first time in the game, 43-42.

"May made some big plays for them," Oklahoma head coach Kelvin Sampson said. "He's certainly improved a lot in the last year. It all comes down to shot selection. He took some good shots and made some tough shots."

After May got the Cats back into the game, the Sooners went on a run and cushioned their once-slim lead to a six-point stint, 57-51 with 6:52 left.

As for May, he was in the zone and couldn't be stopped.

"I play with a lot of confidence. I don't think I can be stopped. That's my opinion," May said. "If we run the fist, eight out of 10 times I think I can score on it."

That confidence helped May provide the spark for K-State. With 6:01 left, May hit a jumper from the lane, and the Cats were within two, 57-55.

Then, with 1:48 left, May was fouled again by Erdmann as the two players were scrapping for a loose ball.

May hit both bonus freethrows and put K-State on top for good, 63-61.

"I didn't really think the game was over until I hit those free throws," May said. "But once that happened, it was a big relief."

Women's basketball team rallies defense, defeats OU

SUN DEE MILLS
staff reporter

They say defense wins ball games at K-State. The women's basketball team is no exception.

The Wildcats, who led the entire game, hung on to win, 49-47, over the Oklahoma Sooners Saturday afternoon in the Lloyd Nobel Center. Forward Andria Jones posted her fourth double-double of the season, with 18 rebounds and 28 points — 75 percent of K-State's points.

"A.J. is a player who's capable of stepping up and making the big plays when we need them," Coach Deb Patterson said.

The game began with a 15-1 Cat run with Jones scoring 12 of the 15. After a timeout, the Sooners came out strong, shutting out the Cats and scoring eight points in the next three minutes.

After a 20-second timeout, Jones came back and hit a three-pointer to put the Cats up 20-8. The Sooners then stepped up their inside defense, forcing the Cats to shoot from the perimeter. With almost five minutes left in the half, OU had cut the Cat lead to 22-20.

The Cats were also struggling on the charity stripe, missing some one-and-one attempts. For the game, the Cats shot seven of 16 from the free-throw line.

"We didn't play well today on the offensive end of the floor, and we didn't hit free throws," she said.

Despite the struggle, at halftime the Cats led 31-26. OU kicked it in early in the second half, pulling to within three. Jones' shooting and free throws soon gave the Cats a comfortable 10-point cushion, 45-35.

That lead didn't stay comfortable for long.

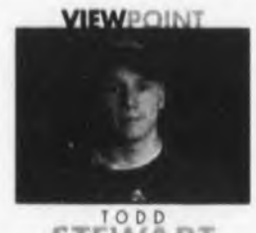
At the 13:30 mark, the Cats hit a dry spell, and were scoreless for the next 11 minutes. The Sooners used their time wisely, and Sooner guard Roxanne Long put up a three-point attempt with a lone Cat hand in her face. Another jumper in the paint by Sooner forward Phylesha Whaley brought them even closer. The Cats did nothing with their possession, and center Kayla Hester posted her fifth foul against Whaley on OU's trip up the court.

Whaley hit both attempts, making the score 45-43. Whaley was fouled again on OU's next possession, and she only hit one free throw, but this narrowed the lead to two.

With 1:06 left in the game, Jones was fouled and converted her first shot. After a timeout, she came back and converted her second, putting the Cats up by four. The Sooners had eight seconds to take the game.

OU put up a great fight but ran out of time. But not before Whaley got off a shot in the paint to put the score at 49-47.

The Cats in-bounded the ball with 1.5 seconds left and held onto the ball for the win.



With 52 total boards and only 35-percent field-goal shooting, Patterson attributed the win to the defense.

"We won the game defensively and the work portion of the game, which is rebounding," she said.

The Cats move to 13-7 overall and 6-4 in the Big 12. They take on Nebraska at 7 p.m. Wednesday at Bramlage Coliseum.

1st win raises questions about topics from Dies to NBA to 1-on-1 competition

VIEWPOINT

TODD STEWART

TODD STEWART is a junior in secondary education/English. You can e-mail comments to Todd at (toddvs@ksu.edu)

I have a few things I need to get off my chest.

First, believe it or not, I was very happy to see the Wildcats get their first Big 12 win Saturday. I was starting to doubt whether that day would ever come, and I am glad Coach Tom Asbury's team finally found its way into the win column.

Plus, it is always fun to beat Oklahoma, no matter the sport. K-State's first Big 12 win could not have come at the expense of a more deserving opponent.

Speaking of beating Oklahoma, the women's basketball team made a clean sweep of the Sooners, also winning Saturday, but something else has been bothering me.

For the second Saturday in a row, the women's game has been televised on Fox Sports News. At about 3 a.m. last Saturday, while flipping through channels, I watched a few minutes of the Cats' win over Missouri.

My question, though, is where is the logic in televising a women's game, especially when the stands are all but empty?

Whoever the television big-wig is who came up with idea of televised regular-season women's hoops could lose a job. Here is a hint: If a sport has enormous problems with attendance, it probably will not do much better with ratings in television.

The fact is, no one cares.

That is the same problem facing the NBA's All-Star Saturday.

I remember the days, as I am sure many of you do, when the three-point and slam-dunk contests were the most anticipated events of the season. It was always, "What can Michael and Dominique do next?" and "Will Larry ever miss?"

But those days are long gone.

The rookie game now starts off the Saturday festivities. Its fun is ruined by poor defense and unknown players. The rookie game is not a who's who, but a "who is that?"

From that point, it only gets worse.

The days of Michael Jordan, Dominique Wilkins and the NBA's high-flying superstars strutting their stuff in the slam-dunk contest are over.

Saturday's contest was won by 18-year-old Kobe Bryant, a backup point guard and probably the most recognizable player in the contest, not because of his game, but because he made the jump from high school to the NBA. Each of the six players in the contest had less than two years of NBA experience, including Bryant and two other rookies.

Until marquee players decide to make a return to the contest, the contest will be nothing more than a reminder of how we took for granted the days of old.

As for getting old, file basketball players painting fingernails in that category.

Kansas' Scot Pollard fashioned the practice for the No. 1 Jayhawks, but that is Lawrence, and that is OK. KU breeds a different type of person.

So what happened to Dax Jones?

The reserve center tallied his first start of Feb. 5 at Oklahoma State, and marked that historic date by painting his fingernails purple.

Enough is enough, Dax. Let's keep that flowery trash in Lawrence with Pollard and his little friends.

Be a man, Dax.

Now, from one K-State post player to another: It's Manny Dies time.

As Dies gets closer and closer to his return, I wonder when our one-on-one battle will come around. I know a few radio stations have toyed with the notion of sponsoring the event, and now I wonder when one of them will get the ball rolling.

Dies has said publicly that he would do it, as have I, so it is time to set it up. Direct all phone calls to the Collegian. They know how to get in touch with me.

Hats off this week to KSDB-FM 91.9's "A Purple Affair," the first radio station that allowed me the opportunity to stand up for myself and my article. While other Manhattan radio stations hide comfortably behind their microphones and secluded desks, DB92 tackled the issue head-on.

As for the other disc jockeys, as I told Dax, be men. You know how to get a hold of me.

As Dies and everyone else knows, I will not back down to a challenge. That is either my best quality or my worst — it just depends on who is asking, doesn't it, Manny?

Bands compete at mall for $800 grand prize

YVONNE PEARSON
staff reporter

Manhattan Town Center is sponsoring a local music contest with a grand prize of $800 for the winning band.

Local bands will play every Thursday in the mall as part of the "Live" program. The new program will feature local bands 5:30-7:30 p.m. Thursday nights in the Food Court through May 1.

"We're looking forward to it. So far it's been lots of fun. We've had a lot of people who've inquired about it. We kind of got off to a slow start, but now it's really picking up," said Monnie Applegate, marketing director at Manhattan Town Center.

There will be 12 weeks of preliminary competition that will feature a category of music each of those nights.

Applegate said there are a lot of entrants for modern rock, classic rock and young country. The categories also include traditional country, adult contemporary and classical jazz. Other categories could be added as more entries come in.

Anyone can apply, but because families visit the mall, profanity or anything distasteful will not be allowed, Applegate said.

Nightly winners will be selected by a panel of judges, which will include store sponsors and Manhattan Town Center staff. Judges will also come from local radio stations KMKF-FM 101.5, KMAN-AM 1350 and KXBZ-FM 104.7. Audience participation will count for half of the scores.

"We want it to be fun, and we want the audience to get involved," Applegate said.

At the conclusion of each performance, a winner will be selected and presented a prize provided by a sponsor store at the mall. The winner will also go to the semi-finals. Six semi-finalists will compete at the finals May 1. The second-place winner will receive $500, and the third-place winner will be awarded $200.

"We would like to invite some of these participants to come and perform at either Purple Power Play on Poyntz or sometime here at Manhattan Town Center," Applegate said. "We're looking for potential talent."

Applications are available at Manhattan Town Center's Customer Service Center. There is no entry fee, and applications will be accepted throughout the program's season.

▶ AURASCOPE BY C. ERA SAILER

AQUARIUS If you find yourself having an excess of energy, don't toss and turn — take on a cause you've been wanting to get involved in. Indulging in some previously latent superficial whims will be easy to get away with, but don't go overboard. Confidants might look the other way, but your conscience won't.

PISCES There is a lot more support available to you from within and from unexpected places. Developing a numb indifference to your problems is not the best option right now because complacency is your greatest threat. Faith, trust or both will be the only comfort for now, but this too shall pass.

ARIES While both your shoulders have been preoccupied absorbing other's tears, you've managed to draw some hard-earned attention you might not be aware of. If a potential partnership has been boiling over on the back burner, now is the time to take the lid off. Let go of the past, and watch your temper at home.

TAURUS Seek calm company, calm eating and calm colors. Allow things to unfold naturally, and don't rush new developments, no matter how tempting it is. Concentrate on minor inconveniences such as homework and laundry, and the rest will work itself out. Don't look at the big picture. It will only make you dizzy and impatient.

GEMINI You've got the Midas touch these days. You are a source of emotional irrigation to others. This is the week to unleash some uncompromising hormones, but be up front about your intentions. Be more considerate of all living beings this week, especially those who help you out with that hormone situation. Prepare for some potent spiritual information, and stash it away for later.

CANCER Don't pack for Emerald City just yet. Take it from Dorothy — what you're looking for really isn't any farther than your back yard. Craving intimacy? Avoid Aggieville and especially Geminis. Watch the munchies or the winter blahs could turn into winter blehs. Attend to your heart with the Thighmaster and a book. (one with no -ologys on the cover.)

LEO Recognize vital opportunities to open up to someone you love. Hold nothing back. If you've been feeling alone and cold, double your efforts in work and relationships. It will be a welcome buffer for loneliness. Remember you'll get out of things just as much as you put into them, sooner or later.

VIRGO Be aware of the hemlock gridlock caused by negativity tangled between home and work. Be willing to confront your unwillingness to confront yourself. Grasping for the security of denial will only perpetuate insecurity. Stop running from yourself. No matter where you hide, there you are.

LIBRA Be leery of insincerity among advisers. Use humor to disarm or lace negotiations. Sometimes exhaustion is a hint that you're tired. Give yourself a pat on the butt and try sleeping in if you can get away with it.

SCORPIO Paranoia will do you in this week if you don't loosen your grip on your rigid new attempts at discipline. Reach out to others for perspective. If your emotional resources seem dried up, humble yourself to seek support wherever it's offered. At the same time, remember that the more support you give, the easier it is for you to rely on yourself. Don't be afraid to be alone, but don't seek solitude either.

SAGITARRIUS If others seem to revolt at your very presence or duck at the sound of your voice, maybe it's an indicator you haven't been on your best behavior. If someone cuts you off inadvertently, remember they could be headed for the hospital. Have a little faith in humankind. The world is not out to get you, just Pisces.

CAPRICORN A new opportunity has arisen for you to reintroduce yourself as the leader you've forgotten. Others will be looking to you for momentum, so don't look through new opportunities for something else. You have more to give and are worth a lot more to others than you realize.

McCain play to focus on Army harassment

BECKY WINTER
staff reporter

McCain Auditorium will present the critically acclaimed play "Camp Logan" at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in McCain.

The play tells the story of a buffalo soldier regiment that revolted against Jim Crow harassment from police in Houston while stationed there in 1917. This incident resulted in the largest court-martial in military history.

▶ Tickets can be purchased at the McCain Box office, Union Bookstore or at the UPC office. Tickets are $7 for faculty and public, $3.50 for students.

"It's a real riveting experience. It takes you back to a period that people have only heard about through their grandparents," said Mike Kaliski, co-producer and booking agent for the play.

In the past five years, the cast of seven veteran actors has performed in more than 200 shows sponsored by military installations, colleges, universities and performing arts centers across the country.

Freeman Davis, coordinator of diversity and dual career development, said he first heard about the play from a former K-State faculty member. He encouraged UPC Multicultural Committee, Ebony Theater and McCain Auditorium to sponsor the event.

"I became a catalyst because I saw credence in bringing something with this type of history to the campus. I think if you took a poll across this campus, you would find that 90 percent of the students or even the faculty — maybe even in the history department — do not know that this event occurred," Davis said.

The play was written by Houston native Celeste Bedford Walker, and intertwines fact with fiction to make the experiences of the soldiers come to life.

"The play has already had an impact. It just hasn't been to Kansas State yet," Davis said.

"I think people will leave this play with some kind of impact and a piece of history," Davis said.

dents to ask the people in charge questions about the issues," Sarah Sporing, graduate student in food microbiology and leadership committee chairperson, said.

Panel members will include Director of Women's Resource Center Judy Davis, Assistant Dean of Student Life Carla Jones, Director of Student Financial Assistance Larry Moeder, women's basketball coach Debra Patterson, K-State Ambassador Stephanie Trembley and Athletic Director Max Urick.

Kim Menard, area manager of Kansas Children's Service League, will conclude the week with the speech, "Privatization of Adoption and Foster Services in Kansas," at 10:00 a.m. Thursday in the Union Little Theatre.

to the commands of the troopers.

"When I started with Rintie, we spent two weeks just getting acquainted," Catania said. "Then we spent a minimum of eight weeks in intensive dual-purpose training, learning how to sniff and how to track. We also spend a lot of time teaching obedience."

After a handler receives their certification, they are required to spend one day a week in daily maintenance training with their dog.

"The continuous training reinforces his behavior and makes him better at his job," Catania said.

He said specific breeds tend to work better, but several different ones are being used.

"Right now I have a Belgian Malinois," Catania said. "Some of the other troopers have German Shepherds. We have a Golden Retriever and a Yellow Labrador. The first dog we had was a Beagle mutt, though."

Each of the dogs has its own traits and has to be taught accordingly, Catania said.

"The dogs are like humans," Catania said "They have their own personalities and their own problems. Some days they're tired and don't want to work. Each day has its own problems."

The canines are used actively as long they obey and can continue to smell. After its tenure is completed, each dog is retired and replaced with a new one.

"The average time a dog is used might be seven to 10 years," Catania said, "but each dog is different so that's not necessarily accurate. As long as they can work we keep them around."

Catania said while his job is different than most, he enjoys working with the Police Service Dog Unit.

"It's been interesting working with Rintie," Catania said. "I'm just glad he's on my side."

COOK

The contestants were required to give a three to five minute informal presentation about their product. The only requirement was an explanation of how the dish was prepared.

The judges for the event were Barbara Durbin, Marcella Holbrook and Wilma Ackerman.

"The women were members of the Kansas Cattlewomen's Association," Janssen said.

The products were judged on the presentation, appearance, taste and appeal.

Six teams were entered in the event.

A winner was chosen in each one of these categories: Recipe, presentation and overall. The winners received gift certificates to Applebee's Grill & Bar.

The recipe winner was Beef Tenderloin from T-1 Pride members Scott Foote, Scott Bohl and Marty Reichenberger.

"This was my mom's recipe. She used to be a caterer for 10 years and wrote the cookbook," Reichenberger, senior in horticulture, said.

The presentation winner was Beef Fajitas made by Jed Spencer, Cody Dick and Ben Janssen.

"It was something that we all really liked to eat and we have had similar types of meals at restaurants," Janssen, sophomore in biological and electrical engineering, said.

The overall winner was Marinated Flank Steak from Tonya Herrmann and Traci McCauley.

"We got this recipe from a friend back home. We like it in the summer cooking out," McCauley, junior in mathematics, said.

"I guess they did a good job of covering screens and playing good defense," Erdmann said. "It affected us not having two starters, but that's something we're going to have to work through."

K-State got within four points with 13:48 left off a three-pointer from May, but in the last six minutes the Sooners outscored the Cats 14-5 and maintained their largest lead of the game, 16-29 with 7:41 left.

"We didn't get any calls," Brewer said. "I understand we're playing on the road, but you've got to get a break once in a while."

The Cats 8-12, 1-10 have a rematch with Nebraska 12-10, 4-6 tonight at Bramlage.

PE or not PE? Kinesiology looks at potential changes

SPENCER JACOBSON
staff writer

All those people who are trying to avoid Principles of Physical Fitness have almost made it.

The Department of Kinesiology is in the process of determining whether or not to keep the introductory class presently required for graduation.

David Dzewaltowski, head of the kinesiology department, said the idea of dropping the requirement is up in the air and no one knows for sure if it is going into effect.

Dzewaltowski said a new kinesiology course, Dynamics of Sports and Exercise, is being offered to students this semester. The course is far more extensive than the typical introductory course.

Dynamics of Sports and Exercise is a three-credit course and will be offered with both a lecture and a lab. This new class counts as a general education requirement, but moves are being made to make it count as a life science credit as well.

"According to student surveys, the students want the 101 class but would like it to be more extensive — three hours — and they also found, if they had a good class in high school, to be a lot of duplication in the 101 course," Dzewaltowski said.

The question doesn't seem to be about the dropping of Principles of Physical Fitness, but instead the addition of a new course that is more extensive and might one day take the place of the introductory course.

If the proposition is passed, only incoming freshmen would be affected by the change. Everyone else would still be forced to take the course to graduate.

Durland expansion could start as soon as summer 1998

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

The flash cube will get a new bulb in summer 1998.

Or, at least, by summer 1998 Durland Hall — which is considered by some to imitate a camera's flash cube — will be expanded through a 70,000 square foot, $11.4-million project.

The project will be financed with $5 million in state money appropriated through the crumbling-classrooms program, $6 million in private funds, and $250,000 from the engineering student equipment fee, which will only be used to purchase new equipment.

The $100 per semester student fee cannot be used to fund infrastructure improvements or expansions. The college also plans on a further $150,000 from the fee to round out total student contributions at $400,000.

Tom Rawson, vice president of finance and administration, said the project could begin the design phase as soon as an architect is hired by the University and the legislature gives K-State authority.

The department of facilities planning has short-listed nearly five architects for the project.

Rawson said if the design begins this spring, construction could be completed by summer 1998. A more conservative estimate puts the ground-breaking in summer 1998 and a grand opening two years later.

The Durland expansion was originally part of a science and engineering complex proposal, which would have included an Ackert Hall expansion, by the Kansas Board of Regents to the governor and the legislature.

The project was split after the money for the Durland expansion was secured. The Ackert expansion is still waiting for approval of $3 million in federal funds and the raising of $2.3 million in private funds. However, $5.7 million from the crumbling classrooms program has already been secured for Ackert.

Don Rathbone, dean of engineering, is finishing a 24-year tenure at K-State by completing a legacy of new construction he's overseen since the 1970s with the construction of Durland Hall phase I, the southernmost portion of the hall.

Phase II, the large atrium and classroom spaces normally considered Durland Hall, was built later and was recently renamed Rathbone Hall.

Head of her class

Jeni Pruitt's essay about a KKSU-580 broadcast report landed her a spot on USA Today's 1997 all-USA Academic team — a place only 120 students nationwide can claim.

JENI PRUITT, senior in electronic journalism, was selected as a member of USA Today's 1997 all-USA Academic team for her academic achievements. Pruitt placed in the top 40 of 120 collegiate students from across the nation.

STORY BY BRANDI HERTIG • PHOTO BY STEVE HEBERT

A K-State student is a member of USA Today's 1997 all-USA Academic team.

One-hundred-twenty people were selected from 1,253 applications.

Jeni Pruitt, senior in electronic journalism, was named to the second team, which placed her in the top 40 of the 120 collegiate students from across the nation.

The students were recognized for their outstanding academic or intellectual achievements.

Lori Bergen, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications, said when she learned about the program last September, Pruitt immediately came to mind.

"What impresses me about Jennifer is her earnest approach to everything she does," Bergen said. "She's just a very well-rounded student."

Pruitt maintains a 4.0 cumulative grade point average, is president of Speech Unlimited and serves as the public relations manager for Mortar Board.

Applicants had to write an essay describing an original, academic or intellectual project in which they had participated. Pruitt chose to write about a summer 1996 radio broadcast she had prepared for KKSU-580 AM.

The program was about the effectiveness of the Drug Abuse Resistance Education program.

Pruitt reported the program has only a 3-percent effectiveness rate. Despite this, DARE is used in 53 percent of America's schools and is the only prevention program to be specifically named in the Safe and Drug-Free Schools and Communities act and the crime bill. This allows the program to receive federal funding.

"It was a real controversial, touchy issue," she said.

The half-hour report was aired on the radio program "Perspectives," which was broadcast on 20 stations throughout Kansas and on one station in Georgia.

In the months following Pruitt's report, CNN and ABC did similar reports about the DARE program.

The honorees were chosen by a panel of educators in cooperation with four educational groups. Students nominated to the first team each received a $2,500 scholarship and were honored Feb. 7 at a banquet in Arlington, Va.

Though the students named to the second team did not receive anything other than being mentioned in the Feb. 6 edition of USA Today, Pruitt said she was glad to receive the honor.

"I was thrilled that I even made the second team," she said. "I didn't really expect much."

Pruitt said she doesn't take full responsibility for being named to the team.

"This award wouldn't have been possible if it weren't for other people at K-State."

Pruitt is a candidate for graduation in May.

TDM provides opportunity for K-State, Manhattan via outside connections

IVAN KOZAR/Collegian

WENDELL BROOKS, employee at Transportation Design Manufacturing, installs a regulator on a car. Wendell installs about 18 regulators each day.

D. SCOTT FRITCHEN
staff reporter

When Transportation Design Manufacturing opened its doors in Manhattan nine months ago, it extended a partnership and opportunity for K-State, Manhattan and Kansas to be linked to the future of automotive technology.

About 1,000 alternate-fuel vehicles later, TDM is an automotive reality. What began as a few shovels of dirt from the initial groundbreaking ceremony is now termed an "economic exercise extraordinaire" by TDM General Manager Jim Hague.

And why not? With Ford Contours arriving and exiting the parking lots daily, the United State's first dedicated alternate-fuel vehicle plant is expecting its first growth spurt with the planned expansion of additional lots in industrial park and increased employment within the next six months.

"The Ford Contour program is worth $20 million. There's a tremendous opportunity to do a large volume of business," Hague said. "TDM is prepared to enter into another hiring phase due to growth in production."

Evaluating the fast-paced growth of TDM, K-State President Jon Wefald said he is reminded of his own thoughts after discovering TDM's interest in bringing a $10 million plant to Manhattan.

"In the middle of the Great Plains? Why would anyone want to build a plant in Manhattan producing cutting-edge vehicles in the 21st century?" Wefald said.

It seemed like a stretch at the time, he said. An improbability.

Looking back, Wefald said, "To say TDM was impressed is an understatement."

Wefald attended the Manhattan City Commission meetings in summer 1995, when he said the challenge was convincing the city commission and the Economic Development Opportunity Advisory Board that TDM would create an excellent opportunity for the future.

"We told Manhattan there were no guarantees," Wefald said. "We just hoped that they would take the calculated risks and get TDM-producing cars and all would probably be forgotten."

The city commission and Economic Development Opportunity Advisory Board were both unanimous in granting TDM its wish of building in Manhattan — a plan that included a $550,000 10-year tax abatement, a 10-year $418,000 no interest loan, a $975,000 grant and a $270,000 loan for a natural-gas conversions facility. K-State donated $100,000.

In addition, Manhattan allotted TDM a portion of an expected $8 million earned from a citywide half-cent sales tax that was created during the city's previously failed efforts to land a Cessna small airplane assembly plant.

"You may call Manhattan the Little Apple, but it's big on enthusiasm and commitment," Doug Mann, TDM vice president, said. "It's astounding."

One cost-benefit analysis calculated it would take Manhattan eight years to financially recover from TDM's arrival, but Hague countered that prediction in three words: "Watch us grow."

• SIMPSON ORDERED TO PAY $25 MILLION IN PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — A jury Monday heaped $25 million in punitive damages on O.J. Simpson for the slayings of his ex-wife and her friend, saddling him with more than twice the debt even his pursuers say he can pay.

The judgment is on top of $8.5 million in compensatory damages awarded last week when the jury repudiated Simpson's murder acquittal and found him liable in the 1994 slashing deaths of Nicole Brown Simpson and Ronald Goldman.

"Finding O.J. Simpson liable of the murders and acting with oppression and malice was one of the easiest decisions I have ever had to make," said juror No. 11, a white woman in her 30s who wasn't identified by name in a news conference.As for Simpson's claim he was framed, juror No. 186, a white man in his 20s, said: "There's just no way anyone could have planted all that evidence."

• NATURAL GAS PIPELINE EXPLODES IN SOUTHWEST WASHINGTON.

KALAMA, Wash. — Officials are investigating the possibility that ground made unstable by this winter's soaking weather might have led to two natural gas pipeline explosions during the weekend in Washington state.

One pipeline blew up Sunday night in a rural area near Kalama, 35 miles north of Portland. No one was hurt.

It was the second break in two days involving a Northwest company pipeline in Washington state.

• BEFORE WELFARE LAW'S EFFECTS FELT, CLINTON WANTS CHANGES.

WASHINGTON — Since the day he signed the welfare reform law, President Clinton has been vowing to change it.

Cuts to food stamps and legal immigrants had nothing to do with welfare reform, he said last August, and hoped aloud voters would give him a Democratic Congress inclined to roll them back.

Facing Republicans instead once again, Clinton is asking nonetheless. He proposes $17.9 billion over five years to restore cuts to immigrants in disability, Medicaid and food-stamp benefits.

But congressional Republicans have little interest in fighting last year's welfare battle all over again — or in losing about one-third of the $55 billion in savings the law provided over six years.

• EXPLOSION HEARD AT JAPANESE AMBASSADOR'S RESIDENCE.

LIMA, Peru — An explosion went off Monday inside the Japanese diplomatic compound where rebels are holding 72 hostages. There was no explanation for the blast, although some police officers suspected it was caused by a rebel mine.

Tupac Amaru rebels who seized the Japanese ambassador's residence in December have said they mined and booby-trapped the home and the garden around the building.

It was the second time an explosion has been heard from inside the walled compound. The first blast occurred in the early weeks of the standoff when a dog apparently triggered a mine.

Santiago Ventura, who lives across the street from the residence, said he witnessed the explosion, saying it went off behind some cars parked inside the compound. The blast threw dirt into the air, Ventura said.

Police officers at the scene said they thought the explosion was caused a mine planted by the rebels. The officers would not identify themselves, and there was no official comment.

• MILITARY, CONGRESS APPOINT NEW PRESIDENT IN ECUADOR.

QUITO, Ecuador — This small Andean nation has a new president, the first woman in Ecuador's history to hold its highest office.

Ending fears of a military coup, Congress and the country's armed forces agreed Sunday to appoint Rosalia Arteaga, the vice president, as the country's leader.

Singers perform labor of love

STORY BY BECKY WINTER

Smooth harmonies and slick choreography combine in the choral performances of the K-State Singers.

The group is made up of fourteen vocalists, a pianist, a bass guitarist, a drummer and a sound technician. Members are required to be non-music majors, upperclassmen and full-time students.

"The group is made up of people who have had music as an important part of their life but have other academic interests," Benjy Kruse, graduate student in marketing and manager of the group, said.

K-State Singers perform a wide variety of music including soft rock, Broadway and jazz.

"It is important to be able to switch from one type of music to the other," Kruse said. "That is what we like to accomplish during practice and performance."

Members of the K-State Singers put in about eight to 10 hours of practice each week.

"We try to get the confusion of the previous show ironed out during practice and come up with ideas to make other shows better," Kruse said.

Throughout the year, the Singers keep building their program, adding new songs and dances, so the show is an hour and a half long by April. Many ideas for performances come from song and dance trends from other show choirs around the nation.

The Singers perform 35 to 40 shows a year with more than one show per week during the spring and fall semesters.

"Being a part of the K-State Singers is like a labor of love," Kruse said. "I do it because I enjoy singing, dancing and representing K-State."

Various alumni events, banquets, K-State recruitment dinners, corporate events, charity functions, community concerts and state high-school shows are some of the affairs where the K-State Singers perform.

Most of the students in the group take 15 to 18 hours per semester. With the travel, practice and performance involved with the group, the director sometimes has to administer tests for classes on the road.

"Most professors are willing to work with the K-State Singers to reschedule tests and assignments," Kruse said. "This City commission election nears; 8 candidates run

DAVID FAIRBANKS
staff reporter

City Commission primary elections are Feb. 25.

The field of candidates vying for positions now stands at eight people.

These eight candidates include Ralph Wasem, Mary Nichols, Karen McCulloh, Breta Bloomberg, Ed Klimek, Roger Reitz, Stanley Crowder and Edith Stunkel. McCulloh, Nichols and Stunkel are employed at K-State.

After the primary, the field of candidates will be narrowed down to six. These six candidates will then compete for the three available spots in the final election on April 1.

This year, as well as every two years, three of the five commission spots are up for election.

In the final election, the top two vote-getters receive four-year terms and the candidate with the third most votes receives a two-year term. The three spots up for grabs belong to Justin Kastner, Edith Stunkel and Mayor Sydney Carlin.

Kastner, elected in 1995, is completing his second year while Stunkel and Carlin, who were elected in 1993, are finishing their fourth years.

Stunkel will run for re-election, however Kastner and Carlin will step down upon the completion of their terms.

"The decision not to run again was an agonizing one, but I think it's time I move on," Kastner said.

Kastner, a senior in food science and industry, plans on graduating in May, although he could be here next year if he receives the Truman scholarship. After leaving Manhattan, he will attend graduate school in public health at the University of Texas at Houston, Kastner said.

The two remaining commissioners, Bruce Snead and Steve Hall, will serve the rest of their four-year terms they won in 1995.

Before the primary election there will be a public forum so citizens can become acquainted with the candidates. The forum is slated for 7 p.m. Wednesday in Pottorf Hall in CiCo Park. The first hour of the forum will be candidates expressing their views and in the second hour the audience can ask the candidates questions.

"Having the forum is just another indicator that there has been a movement from a representative democracy to a participatory democracy here in Manhattan. The citizens and the media of Manhattan have played an important part in shaping the issues," Stunkel said.

Issues this year could deal with youth involvement, level of taxation and the funding of economic development, Kastner said.

Russian city official visits state, University

TANYA NISLY
staff reporter

Ivan Shabanov, the first democratically elected governor of Voronezh, visited K-State Monday on his first official state visit since his election.

Voronezh is south of Moscow and has a population of about 1 million people. Since 1994, K-State has been cooperating with Voronezh in educational, economic, cultural and scientific collaborations.

Shabanov's visit was sponsored by ARIOS-Kansas. ARIOS is an acronym for the Russian-American International Association for the Development and Integration of Education Systems.

"His primary purpose in being here is to continue the corroboration between our towns and to learn about airport manufacturing," Emmett Wright, director of ARIOS-Kansas, said.

Shabanov met with Provost James Coffman, and he had lunch with Michael Holen, dean of the College of Education. He also spoke in the Politics of Eastern Europe class in the afternoon.

Later, he met with business people to find out how businesses operate in Manhattan.

Today, Shabanov will be in Wichita to meet the mayor of Wichita, and he will be presented a key to the city, Wright said.

Shabanov will be back on campus Thursday to meet with Robert Krause, vice president of institutional advancement.

Later Thursday, he will be in Topeka to sign an agreement with Gov. Bill Graves to continue the collaboration between Voronezh and Manhattan. The agreement is to promote educational exchanges and cultural events, Wright said.

You say you want a revolution? Run for office

One voice. One vote.

It's true, you can make a difference at K-State. If you're interested in becoming more involved on campus, the filing deadline for applications for Student Governing Association, Board of Student Publications, Union Governing Board, Fine Arts Council and College Council is Monday.

Most offices require a 2.5 grade point average, and a minimum of 12 hours for undergraduate students and a minimum of 6 hours for graduate students.

The decision to run for a campus office isn't one to take lightly. These offices govern areas such as fee distribution, in addition to setting policies that affect the entire student body.

If you do decide to run for an office on campus, follow through with the commitment and take it seriously.

Also, meet deadlines and follow election guidelines, because failure to meet deadlines and guidelines could have serious ramifications.

But there's more to being involved in students elections than just running for an office.

If being an officer on campus isn't for you, encourage a friend who you believe would make a good candidate to run.

Also, get out and campaign for a candidate you support.

And finally, vote March 10-12.

Sense of responsibility conquers free wheeling Mardi Gras jaunt

THE BIG EASY?

It's Fat Tuesday, and as your eyes scan these words there is a transvestite standing outside the world's largest gay bar.

There is a cop in full uniform holding a beer.

There are people exposing themselves for cheap beads, and there are thousands of people celebrating the Earth's grandest bash. Mardi Gras, the bomb of all festivals.

ADRIAN FLEMING/Collegian

Unfortunately, you and I are here with a few thousand pounds of snow that were dumped all over our city Thursday and Friday. I know it didn't put me in the best of moods.

The white powder didn't make me envision sleds. It didn't make me think of children frolicking about making snow angels, and it didn't make me picture snowball fights.

Nope, the only thing it made me think about was a group of my friends who are likely lying face down in the gutter on Bourbon Street. I can see them draped in the colored beads they bartered for by showing their most private parts to strangers.

I should be there sharing their intoxicated glory. I received a call last Monday from a friend who goes to that other school in Lawrence. He told me he had an extra seat for the road trip down to the Big Easy.

When he offered me this 20-odd-hour journey, all the old feelings started creeping through me. The hair on the back of my neck began to stand in an aroused-nomadic daze, my teeth began to chatter, and my mind began mapping out the ground work for the trip.

"Get out of classes. Bamboozle your way out of work. Skip your tests. Assassinate any professors that stand in your way. Avoid writing your paper. Skip the weekly column, and charge everything," my mind screamed at me.

Yes, I have a problem. I'm addicted to nomadic wandering.

Obviously, because I'm sitting here writing this column, I've worked with a 12-step program. Let me tell you, it's burning me up like a marshmallow roasting over a camp fire.

According to the Weather Channel, the temperature in New Orleans has been hovering somewhere around 75 degrees, and it is expected to stay that way throughout the Mardi Gras festivities. My friends are in shorts, and I'm in my snow boots.

Yes, I'm bitter, upset and hurt.

Most of all I'm disgusted with the person I have become.

A year ago, I would have dropped my life and hopped on the caravan bound for Mardi Gras with a frosty beverage sweating in my hand. I wouldn't have even flinched at dropping everything.

That attitude basically sums up what a cab driver told me the last time I was in New Orleans. I asked him what made the city so crazy and he looked back at me and said in his thick southern drawl, "No one in N'Orleans gives a f—."

Unlike that cab driver, I live in Kansas, and I do give an expletive.

I do care, but I've been rationalizing not joining the endeavor for a variety of reasons.

I keep thinking, "I've been to New Orleans before. My grades couldn't stand my departure for a week." And on and on.

In the end it really doesn't matter. I've committed the fatal mistake of allowing responsibility to seep into my life like a bad disease.

Yep, it's the big R. Responsibility.

The burden of adulthood. How have I sunk so low so fast?

I think it all started when I was born. My parents expected me to cry if I needed my diaper changed. From that point on, the chains of responsibility have been coiling tighter and tighter around me.

With each passing year, I keep finding myself doing things I swore I would never do.

I swore I'd never wear a watch. I now wear a watch.

I swore I'd never hold a job longer than six weeks. Been there. Done that.

I swore I'd always eat whatever I wanted. I can't allow myself to do that any longer, either.

I swore I'd never set my alarm on a weekend. Let's just say I get up almost every weekend to nauseating beeping.

It all just makes me shake my head and wonder why I don't even have time to relax and read a book on a Sunday afternoon.

Unfortunately, life is about responsibilities. I'm responsible for all kinds of things on this planet, and I wouldn't have it any other way.

Even with all this responsibility, there is no place I would rather be at this stage of my life. My years at K-State have proven to be some of the best years I have tasted on this buffet of earthly existence.

Now that I've come to terms with accepting all this responsibility, I think I would much rather be sipping a Hurricane, watching strangers expose themselves as the sun rises over the Mississippi River.

Everything new in the auto industry is new again-- and the consumer pays for it Haven't you gotten tired of hearing about how technologically advanced modern automobiles are?

You should be — they aren't. Airbags? Designed in 1950 and first introduced in Oldsmobiles and Cadillacs on an experimental basis in the 1974 model year.

Fuel injectors were first introduced to the public in 1957 on some Chevrolet Impalas equipped with Ram-Air induction. Anti-lock brakes? They have been used on airplane landing wheels since the mid-1930s and were experimented with briefly on Cadillac Sevilles in the mid-1970s.

Aluminum-block engines were first tried (successfully) in the AMC Rambler in the early 1960s but were abandoned after 1974 by American auto executives who were blind to the impending oil crisis.

Adaptative-damping suspension? Experimented with in the mid-1950s on some limited-production Cadillacs before being brought back to life on some Japanese cars in the mid-1980s.

Power seats and cruise control? Introduced in the 1950s. Automatic transmission and air conditioning? A fact of life on the road since Oldsmobile first built them into its cars in 1938.

If these features are so old, why do they have an aura of novelty? First, automakers design a car which has all of them, so as to get consumers hooked on the conveniences they offer.

Then, four to six years later (depending on the particular model's design cycle) they take them all away and offer refinement instead — bigger engine, better-built body, more comfortable seats, etc., but fewer gadgets.

This encourages the consumers who bought the car in the previous design cycle to buy a different and more expensive model in order to get the same toys they already have in the old car.

When pinned down and asked why they have taken out so much useful stuff, automakers plead inflation and claim that reduction in mechanical complexity is necessary to assure that the car is still accessible to buyers in its designated price bracket.

Then, another design cycle later, they reposition the model — it becomes more upscale. It has more gadgets than in the previous cycle (but perhaps less than in the cycle before that), which have meanwhile evolved into something called luxury. Its price tag is invariably $10,000 or more higher than it was 10 years ago — the infamous Rule of 10,000.

For instance, in 1987 one could purchase a fully equipped Nissan Maxima with aluminum wheels, four-wheel disc brakes, fully independent suspension with driver-adjustable variable damping and digital dash with computer readouts for fuel consumption, all for no more than $16,000.

Then in 1988 (first year of a design cycle which ended in 1994), the aluminum wheels and four-wheel disc brakes became optional and the variable damping and computer readouts simply vanished.

In the design cycle beginning with the 1995 model year the fully independent suspension went away and the digital dash still hasn't returned, but four-wheel disc brakes are now standard (for improved safety). True to the Rule of 10,000, a 1997 Maxima now costs about $27,000 fully equipped.

Adding insult to injury, the sleazier automakers frequently misrepresent the reasons they decontent car models. In 1987, GM decided not to include four-wheel disc brakes on its C-series cars (Bonneville, Eighty-Eight, and LeSabre), claiming a weight savings.

They really meant that they hadn't finished paying off the machining equipment in the Delco Moraine plant that turns out drum brakes.

Compared to discs, drums overheat and fade more easily, require self-adjusting mechanisms which can stick in humid or freezing weather, and lead to longer and more ragged stops.

Automakers would have long ago switched to aluminum (a much lighter and corrosion-proof metal) for car bodies, except that they have too much money invested in steel-stamping equipment and elpo vats.

Most importantly of all, aluminum is classified as a commodity and so is sold on the London metals exchange at market value rather than at sweetheart prices like those the automakers have worked out with their steel suppliers.

The technology exists right now to build a luxury car with every toy you could wish, a curb weight of half a ton or less, more airbags than I have fingers, triple-digit mpg consumption figures and exhaust as fresh as a baby's breath. All it takes is electronics and carbon fiber.

Are Detroit, Tokyo, Nagoya, or Stuttgart interested in building this? What do you think? Better yet, let them know what you think — get their fingers out of your pocket and keep the car you have for another 20 years.

• ELECTION COVERAGE PLANS MEET APPROVAL.

Editor,

Congratulations on your stated methods for covering the Student Governing Association elections — it is a great improvement over last year.

I would think that increased coverage would result in increased interest, which would result in increased candidates, which might result in increased voting, which will result in increased representation of all sectors of the student body.

Again, congratulations and thanks.

• JUSTIN WILD'S COLUMN FAILS TO EXPLAIN GERMAN CRACK DOWN.

Editor,

Though I appreciate the value of the topic, Justin Wild failed to inform the reader as to why the German Government is cracking down on the cult of Scientology. This could be for two reasons: first, he is ignorant on the subject; second, he is a scientologist himself. I hope it is the first.

The "Church of Scientology" is a program founded by the publications of L. Ron Hubbard, and later gathered an organized following by aspiring businessmen. In short, the publications and further additions stress techniques of how to succeed at the expense of others. It focuses on "strengthening" the mind of the member and to subject the "weaker minded" to the member's aggressive will to achieve any given desired result.

In time, I learned how such a system is unhealthy for a productive society and in itself it is so similar to Fascist doctrine, that I was shocked when Wild compared the current German Government to Nazi Germany. It is the cult of Scientology that should be compared with Hitler's Administration.

Also, reference was made to German Scientologists backed by U.S. figures. This is complete fiction. There does not exist any significant number of German Scientologists.

In fact, this would not have exploded into an issue if it were not for American cinema stars, such as John Travolta or Tom Cruise, who were upset that their movies were banned and that they would lose some precious funds in their not-so-desperate attempt to keep food on their table.

Having lived in Germany, I can testify that it is the actual majority of German citizens who are tired of such double standards. Most Europeans, in general, detest radicals such as Hitler, Hubbard and Milosevic because they offer no real solutions — just more discrimination and conflict.

After saying this, I reiterate my proposal that Wild either wrote his article in ignorance or in deceptive calculation, for scientologists are criminals with a fancy name. They are not a justified religious belief.

• PROFESSOR SAYS MUSEUM IS STUDENT-FRIENDLY.

Editor,

The Collegian Editorial Board ran an editorial Feb. 4 titled "Beach Museum not geared toward students." The Collegian claimed in the editorial that the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art has not made an effort to invite students to the museum and that activities at the museum are too expensive. The editorial also suggests student exhibits should be scheduled in the museum and that the location of the museum on campus makes it difficult for students to become involved.

I'm afraid I am at a bit of loss about what prompted this whining editorial by the editors of the Collegian. It is unfortunate they took this position, because it certainly doesn't contribute to a solution to what the editors see as a problem.

Instead, it merely exacerbates the perceived problem by suggesting to students that they are being ignored by the museum without offering any suggested solutions.

Art museums on campuses have an educational function not unlike that of the various colleges and departments on campus. The museum is not a recreational center with a mission to entertain students any more than the College of Architecture or the College of Business is.

Students are terribly important to a successful museum, and it is hoped that students will increasingly make use of the art museum both for their personal education and personal entertainment. But surely a $15 brunch isn't cause for complaining that "... the Beach art museum (is) too expensive for students."

Maybe that activity was too expensive for some students. But so what? How many of the high-dollar fundraisers for the various athletic groups on campus have students attended? Should these events not be held because they are too expensive for students?

The Collegian editors have complained that the museum is located " ... on a remote edge of campus (which) makes it even more difficult for students to become involved in the museum." May I suggest to you that Aggieville is on that same remote edge of campus. Instead of making the arduous and difficult trek to Aggieville all at one time, stop for a breather and break on your way to Aggieville. The Beach museum is a great place for you to catch your breath and rest for a minute before you continue the exhausting journey to Aggieville. Peace.

• TODD STEWART'S COLUMN CONTINUES TO DRAW READER'S COMMENTS.

Editor,

I was curious about all the uproar directed to columnist Todd Stewart a few weeks ago, so I decided to read his column in Monday's issue. I have to say that I agree with all of the people that wrote in and said what a jerk this guy is.

Not televise women's sports just because not a lot of people attend the games? Come on, Stewart. Those sort of misogynist thoughts spewing from your mouth do not earn any respect at all — just pity that you are too small to realize how writing such nonsense as this could affect your future plans. If I were in your shoes, I wouldn't plan on using the crap you call a column as a good example of your writing skill when it comes to job interviews.

Please be mature and stop writing such stupid things in your column, or don't write at all.

CATS SHUCK HUSKERS

Cats beat Nebraska with late win, 61-53

JEREMY KELLEY

Let's be real.

The K-State men's basketball team is on a winning streak.

Monday night at Bramlage Coliseum the Cats lengthened their streak with a 61-53 win over the Nebraska Cornhuskers.

"Everybody has more confidence now," guard Ayome May said. "For a while we were just hoping, and we believe."

It was that attitude that got the Cats their second win in the Big 12, but it wasn't a cake walk.

Down 30-26 at halftime, the Huskers came out with a vengeance, reeling off four-straight points to tie the score at 30 with 16 minutes, 41 seconds left.

K-State didn't have a field goal until the 14:11 mark of the second period when center Gerald Eaker hit a jump shot in the lane and again tied the score at 34.

It was a seesaw battle from there as Nebraska enjoyed a slim lead and led by three with 10:17 left. The Cats couldn't muster up any offense but rather made several free throws to stay close to the Huskers.

Forward Shawn Rhodes gave K-State its first lead of the second half after he made an 18-foot jump shot from the right side with 6:54 left to put the Cats on top 45-44.

"We seem more relaxed now, especially when the game was close and came down to the wire," Rhodes said. "We knew what we had to do to pull it out in the end."

K-State did just that, instead of buckling like the they did in Lincoln.

May hit a three-pointer that put the Cats up 48-46 with 6:03 left. From that point on, the Cats would never trail.

The Cats pushed their lead to six with 39 seconds left, then guard Troy Piatkowski hit a three and Nebraska was seemingly back in it. But K-State hit its free throws down the

After one half of the basketball game, Mark Young had a big, fat zero in the points column. In the second half, Young's 14 points carried K-State to a 61-53 win over Nebraska, putting a W in the Cat's win column for the second-straight game.

It was a tale of two halves for the junior forward.

In the first half, Young was zero for three from the field and hadn't recorded a single offensive board.

"The first half I wasn't playing well at all," Young said. "I just didn't seem to have any confidence. I wasn't getting into the flow offensively. I just felt tight."

After a no-look pass that resulted in a turn-over, Cat coach Tom Asbury sat Young on the bench. Young said it was that moment that started to turn things around for him.

"Coach just destroyed me on that no-look pass," Young said. "During halftime, coach just told me that I didn't need to be on the bench, I needed to be out there on the floor. I turned it up after that."

In the second half, Young scored his first five points from the free-throw line and off a tip-in basket.

Possibly his biggest basket of the game came with just 6:03 left in the game. After a Mikki Moore basket at the 6:19 mark, the Cornhuskers had jumped ahead 46-45. On the following possession, guard Aaron Swartzendruber hit Young, who had spotted up behind the three-point line. Young drained the shot, putting the Cats up 48-46.

With the game knotted up at 50-all,

Rugby team preps for season

SHAWN T. DENTON
staff reporter

The K-State rugby team began practice last Monday in preparation for a possible berth in postseason play.

Scott Cohorst, president of the team, said he was pleased with last semester's results, as the team compiled an 8-2 record.

"The highlights of last semester were when we beat KU and Truman State," Cohorst said.

Cohorst said the Truman State victory was the most impressive.

"Truman State was the western collegiate champions last year," he said. "So that was a big victory for us."

Western is part of the overall national rugby collegiate tournament. Brandon Dirks, vice president of the team, said that the western bracket would be a great step for the team.

"There are quite a bit of rugby teams out there," Dirks said. "It would be quite an achievement."

Since the team went 8-2 last semester, they only have to beat either KU or Truman State once to be able to enter postseason play. The team has from 18 to 20 people returning from last semester's team.

"Basically, most of the people who come out have background experience in football," Dirks said. "But that is not a necessity."

Cohorst said students are welcome to join the team if they are willing to make a commitment.

"We are trying to recruit anyone who wants to play rugby and learn about rugby," Cohorst said.

Dirks said many members of the team had never played rugby.

"We had three or four guys in the KU game who had never played before," Dirks said. "But they played with a lot of heart."

The team's first big game is March 8 against KU. The game will be the first shot at postseason play for the team. Cohorst said they not only want people to play the game but also would like many fans to attend the games.

"It's a fun sport to watch," Dirks said. "Also, it is against KU, and our matches get pretty heated."

Rowing team seeks new team members

The women' s rowing team is looking for athletes who are interested in competing with the squad and gaining experience at the collegiate level.

"We want to get new members on the squad this semester so they can get experience for the years to come," Debra Morgan, coach of the women's crew, said. "We won't have the newcomers racing the first couple of meets, but they will be racing by the end of the semester."

The women's crew has a meeting at 4:30 p.m. today in Ahearn 204. Morgan said the meeting was more of an informational nature during which they will get NCAA paperwork filled out and talk about expectations of crew members.

Morgan said the team will have tryouts in the near future as it nears the gut of their season. Women's crew takes place in the early spring and continues through the end of the semester.

Morgan said she needed any athlete 5 foot 8 inches or taller who has had experience on the high-school or junior-college level but that previous experience was not absolutely necessary.

Football season tape available this Friday

CORY MORGAN

"K-State fans, are you ready? Let's get ready to rumble."

This is what public address announcer Ivan Whitman screams before every home K-State football game.

Now K-State fans can relive K-State football for years to come. K-State is offering a season highlight videotape of the Wildcats' 1996-97 football season.

"This video is something that all Kansas State fans are going to enjoy. We have spent a lot of time producing it," Ben Boyle, director of radio-TV communications, said. "The video will last a lifetime, and 20 years from now, you can pop it into the VCR and relive another great K-State football season."

The season highlight videotape consists of game-by-game highlights throughout the 9-3 season. It spotlights the big plays of every game that helped the Wildcats make it to the Cotton Bowl for the first time. The videotape is set to music and is narrated by Greg Sharpe, the voice of the Wildcats.

The videotape also includes interviews with the biggest

Parcells, Iverson, Shaq, others continue to add to sporting-world quandaries

VIEWPOINT

SHANE McCORMICK

SHANE McCORMICK is a senior in print journalism. You can e-mail comments to Shane at (shanem@ksu.edu).

You know, I have to wonder what the sporting world has come to when:

• Bill Parcells can be hired as the New York Jets team consultant. Parcells was told he could not coach in the NFL in 1997. Yet, he can be their team consultant? So, if the Jets get to a fourth-and-one decision, they can call up Parcells and ask him to consult them? Isn't that the same as coaching?

Maybe the league should have Parcells wear some sort of medical bracelet that alerts them every time he gets near the stadium. That way, Parcells couldn't get near the stadium to consult. Give the Jets credit for not having to give up a No. 1 pick for Parcells.

• Allen Iverson can win the most-valuable player award at the NBA all-star rookie game. There is no way he should have won the award over Kobe Bryant. Bryant set a rookie-game record with 31 points on Saturday. He also recorded a team-high record eight rebounds and was 13-16 from the free-throw line. Iverson, on the other hand, scored just 19 points and dished out nine assists.

• Shaquille O'Neal can be named as one of the top 50 players to ever play in the NBA. O'Neal hasn't even been in the league that long. Yes, he has had some success early, but let's see what he's doing in eight years to determine if he truly is one of the top NBA players ever. My guess is there will be someone bigger and just as physical as O'Neal who can toss up a free throw without the backboard being in danger of breaking.

• Shawn Bradley, George Muresan and Greg Ostertag can make millions in the NBA. It is a sad sight when someone who is 6' 6" can dunk over someone who is 7' 6" or so (Bradley). These three prove the theory that any 7-footer can play in the NBA. Put some stilts on me, and I could be taking these guys' starting jobs.

• Boxer Oliver McCall doesn't throw a single punch in two rounds of action against Lennox Lewis. Between the third and fourth rounds, McCall circled around the ring and did not raise his hands in defense. The fight was called in the fifth round after McCall clutched the ropes from a Lewis punch. With trainers by his side, McCall had a breakdown, leaving the ring crying. McCall had been battling personal troubles, including arrests on drug charges. Officials are now going to hold his $3 million purse.

It was obvious that McCall was in no mental condition to fight Lewis. But that did not matter to promoter Don King. During those tough rounds, King was heard yelling, "Get in there and fight." There is a need to be worried about McCall's mental state. The sad thing is, King is more worried about the money than McCall's condition.

• Sugar Ray Leonard makes a comeback to the boxing world. Hey Sugar Ray, do you know that they won't allow you to take your walker with you into the ring?

• Individuals can become millionaires by making field goals, hitting three-point strikes and throwing strikes into a net. Seems like every couple of months, there is a new sporting promotion that allows someone the chance of a lifetime. And every year, the person they choose chokes bigger than life and misses.

But this year was different at the Pro Bowl. Finally we, the average individuals, watched as our fellow man won one for us, kicking a 35-yard field goal to become a instant millionaire. NFL players rushed on the field to congratulate him — they could now relate to him, being fellow millionaires. I'm not bitter; I'm just jealous.

• The United States played in the Davis Cup without its top four players: No. 1 Pete Sampras, No. 4 Michael Chang, No. 12 Andre Agassi and No. 14 Todd Martin. Over the years, it has been an increasing occurrence that the top American players find a excuse to skip out on the Davis Cup. This should be an event that the players look forward to, wanting to show pride and win for their country. But instead, the American attitude is "Show Me the Money."

• Jeff George would actually consider signing with the Oakland Raiders. Does anyone else see disaster written all over this deal? Let's see. George has had problems in the past dealing with coaches and management. Al Davis has not gained the most popular reputation with current and past players. If this deal happens, the biggest competition next year in Oakland will be that of George's and Davis' egos.

Davis + George = Eruption.

stretch to exercise its largest lead, 59-53 with 20 seconds.

Guard Mark Young capped off K-State's second straight win with a bang as he brought down the house with a thundering jam and thus another victory, 61-53.

"We just didn't throw it away like up there," Young said. "We really wanted to win, and we made the plays."

But K-State didn't make too many plays in the first half, as it was all Nebraska to start with.

The Huskers took an early 8-4 lead.

It was a rather sloppy half as the Cats committed seven turnovers to begin the game. Nebraska capitalized on the Cats' mistakes, stretching out to a 14-8 lead with 12:23 left. It was Nebraska's biggest lead of the game.

Then something clicked within the Cats.

"I really don't know what happened," guard Chris Griffin said. "Basketball is a game of spurts, and we just had a great spurt right there to put us back into the game."

Solid defense put the Cats back in the game in the first half as they kept the Huskers scoreless for nearly eight minutes.

"Our zone was very active, and we were forcing them to make adjustments," Coach Tom Asbury said.

K-State went on a 16-2 run over the next 8-1/2 minutes taking a 24-16 lead with 3:56 left in the period. Nebraska's free throws toward the end kept them close.

Guard Marcus McCollough made a layup with a minute left to account for the 30-26 halftime mark.

K-State moves to 9-12 on the year and 2-9 in the conference. Next up for the Cats is a Big 12 matchup against the Iowa State Cyclones.

YOUNG

Young followed up a missed shot and scored the tip-in at the 2:52 mark.

In the second half, Young said he went to the basket more often.

"I was trying to be more aggressive and hit the boards," he said. "I knew that I needed to make some big plays for my team tonight."

With just 27 seconds left, Cornhusker Troy Piatkowski drained a three-pointer that brought the Huskers to within three, 56-53.

On the following possession, Young was fouled by Moore and went to the line for two crucial free throws. Although he missed the first, he hit the second, giving the Cats a four-point lead with 26 seconds remaining.

Young finished the evening five of 10 from the charity stripe.

"I haven't been hitting my free throws lately," Young said. "I've been using some different techniques. I don't know what the problem is. I haven't been working on them. I need to go to the basics and work on them."

Young capped off the game with a fast break, double-clutch dunk with just one second on the game clock.

So what was the difference in the two halves for Young?

"I have no idea. I don't know," Asbury said. "He got some put backs on the offensive board, and he was struggling with confidence in the first half. But I'll tell you something, when he goes to the boards offensively, he is a terrific offensive player."

The videotape costs $20 (plus $5 shipping and handling if bought by mail) and will be available sometime near the end of next week, Boyle said. The videotapes will also be on sale at Bramlage Coliseum.

This is the fourth videotape that K-State has spotlighted since going to four straight bowl games. It is also the first that has been marketed. The videotape will be available as long as fans keep buying the tapes. Individuals are still buying the 1993 season highlight videotape, Boyle said.

Phase III, the construction proposal, will include the Alice Fiedler Library and space for the departments of biological and agricultural engineering and civil engineering.

"Our library will hopefully be state of the art," Rathbone said. "We will be well-positioned for the next 50 years, assuming enrollments stay roughly the same."

Rathbone said one man has been instrumental in the expansion.

"Jon Wefald has been an excellent president," he said. "He and I feel alike. If we're going to have additions, make them good.

"It's silly to build just a building. I want a quality building."

Rathbone has raised funds in the past few years for the expansion and said he is proud of Alice Fiedler's $5.3-million gift to the project.

Fiedler's gift was $5 million to build a library in the southeast corner of Durland. The money, plus the $300,000 in interest, will now go toward the library as part of the larger expansion.

"It is, by far, one of the largest gifts this university has received," he said.

Fiedler made the gift in the honor of her late husband, George Fiedler, a 1926 graduate and 1934 professional graduate in electrical engineering.

The library will be an electronic resource for engineering students, who are funding the equipment purchases. It will also include individual study rooms and computers.

Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries, said K-State libraries are collaborating on the engineering library project with college faculty and administration.

The design requirements for the expansion will be discussed in a committee formed in the next few weeks.

Rathbone said he doesn't really regret building Durland in phases.

"The sooner the better. It would move you faster along the path, but I feel comfortable about the timing," he said. "When we're done with this building we won't have any major weaknesses."

Rathbone said Terry King, the newly appointed dean of engineering, will be involved in the project. But Rathbone said he will stay involved after he retires.

"Mrs. Fiedler wants me to be involved in the project until completion," he said. "I hope I can be a major player in the process."

TDM

"The City of Manhattan has invested $1.79 million for 10 years," he said.

"In 10 years, at our current employment, TDM will have paid back $7 million in salaries alone."

"In June, we will really start looking at meeting our employment goals we predicted and promised," Hague said.

TDM installs between $500 and $2,000 of value-added materials into each alternate-fuel vehicle.

Some of the parts are purchased from local manufacturers, while others arrive through shipping companies.

Bill Roberts, TDM owner, said TDM's goal is to use as much local content as possible in the production of the alternate-fuel vehicles.

Hague said the synergy created by Manhattan, its receptiveness to growth and desire to increase jobs compounded by K-State's efforts to involve students in the new technology business will play an integral role in TDM's continued success.

"I believe that nowhere in the United States today is there a more synergistic group than Kansas State University, the city of Manhattan, and Transportation Design Manufacturing working together on alternate-fuel vehicles," Hague said.

WORKING ON RESPIRATION, people improve their breathing Tuesday evening in the ECM Student Center with Tai-Chi.

Students discover sense of peace through visualization and breathing and the ancient art of

Tai-Chi

Reach into the water. Raise your arms up, feeling the water run down them. Breathe.

Visualization and breathing are two important parts of performing the water carrier, a Tai-Chi form.

Taijijuan, commonly known as Tai-Chi, originated 3,500 years ago in China. Tai-Chi is made up of slow, fluid movements, meditation and breath control.

Talbert said he teaches his students the forms because they teach the proper breathing techniques.

"The single simplest thing you can control in your life is your breath," he said.

The basis for Tai-Chi is breath control. Students use their breath with movements to control their energy or Chi.

Talbert said people can tap that energy through Tai-Chi.

"What we're trying to do is see a connection," he said.

Talbert said the center of the body's energy comes from a point 2 inches below the belly button. Tai-Chi forms start and end at this point. As movements go away from the body, one exhales projecting energy. When movements come back toward the body, one inhales, drawing energy in.

"The idea is to stay as centered as we can with the center of our body," he said.

Talbert said the forms try to replicate the way something would move. Many of the names were drawn from nature.

For example, when doing the eagle, people extend their arms like eagles' wings as they exhale. Talbert told his students to feel the air under their wings and visualize the ground below them. As students bring their arms in, they inhale.

Students in the class were walked through the water carrier, eagle, heron and tiger. Talbert then combined all these forms into a technique, where the forms flowed together.

Dick McDonald, professor of interior architecture, said he had taken the class last semester from a different instructor, but he liked how Talbert used names for the movements.

"It's interesting to know what you're doing," he said.

While practicing forms and techniques, Talbert emphasized breath control to his students. He said the purpose of learning breath control is to make a lasting effect.

"You're learning to breath, educating yourself," he said.

Talbert said that once people get breath control down through the forms, they can eventually go free-form and make up their own exercises.

Talbert said that with proper breath control, Tai-Chi can be as good as an aerobic workout. He said Tai-Chi was the aerobics of China thousands of years ago.

He said Tai-Chi can speed up people's metabolism. At first, this happens only during the exercise, but for those who can master breath control, it can benefit them all the time. He said a good diet is also important.

Tai-Chi can have many benefits from an aerobic workout to its meditative qualities.

Many class participants were being exposed to Tai-Chi for the first time.

Ginger Denning, Manhattan resident, said the class was like she thought it would be, but she still had to master the movements.

"I thought it would be slower, more methodic," she said.

Denning said she thought the meditative and spiritual aspects would come later.

Talbert said Tai-Chi is a good way to unwind for an hour, even for a stressed-out college student.

"Tai-Chi will benefit anybody who stops to take time to do it," he said.

Lingerie is a gift from heart on Valentine's Day

VIEWPOINT

LINDSEY FORTMEYER

LINDSEY FORTMEYER is a freshman in speech. She will review the latest in fashion trends in her weekly column. She can reached by email at (lkf8410@ksu.edu).

Simple, sophisticated design.

Shape your body with a luxuriously soft microfiber that feels almost like nothing at all beneath your clothes.

That's how the Victoria's Secret catalog introduces its classic collection of lingerie.

'Tis the month for love and original Valentine's Day gift ideas are scarce. This February I decided to break away from the boring boxers and tees and treat myself to the ultimate Valentine's indulgence — an elegant silk chemise.

Lingerie makes an excellent Valentine's gift, whether it's for yourself or someone close to your heart. Lingerie for Valentine's Day is a great excuse to significantly surprise your significant other.

More importantly, lingerie is not just eye-candy for men and women, but comfortable luxuries worn for personal satisfaction: exquisite styles, coverage, shaping, and not to mention physically and emotionally supportive.

As usual, I flipped through the February issue of Victoria's Secret to check out the latest styles of lingerie. Pink, white and red colors were splattered all over the pages. It looked like a giant Cupid had spewed hearts across every spread.

There were heart-print panties, robes, bras and even accessories such as slippers and perfume. I'm a glutton for those lace top stockings and garter belts. They only cost my last month's paycheck.

Victoria's also went as far as to advertise its own satin sheets — heart prints in silky satin charmeuse. With an order of matching ruffled pillow shams, I'd be guaranteed a festive Valentine's Day. All it takes is a creative mind and a few thousand dollars to submit my order.

OK, so lingerie isn't exactly practical clothing. I can't begin to tell you how many times I've lounged around my residence-hall room in a full length, black lace unitard.

With the exception of prices, lingerie will always remain an elixir of sensuality, beauty, comfort and romance. Not all lingerie is exceptionally expensive. I made a quick trip to Aggieville to Patricia's Undercover.

Patricia's had everything from heart-print panties, garters and bras to more classical collections of teddies and heart print men's boxers. But chemises, short cotton or silk gowns, seemed to be the popular purchase for both men and women.

Prices for the diverse array of lingerie range anywhere from $20 up to the $30 for silk undergarments. For convenience, Patricia's also offers free gift wrapping.

Patricia's also has a sale rack with some great bargains and several unusual styles.

You could really show your school spirit and purchase one of Patricia's purple lace wildcat lingerie teddies. I hope next year we could see the height of purple pride. Powercat pasties?

There is still time to make a trip to Patricia's or order from Victoria's Secret. Victoria's guarantees a three-day air delivery on all orders. So don't worry, your Wonderbra can be here in time for the big day or night.

If you're like me, you're running a little short on money this month.

Shopping thrift stores is not such a good idea in this case. Do you really want to wear someone else's thong underwear?

If you still can't handle the prices for this luxury, consider Kathy Bates' idea of surprising your significant other with homemade lingerie.

Her cheap version of lingerie, from the movie "Fried Green Tomatoes," had her partially-mummified in clear plastic wrap.

I'm sure a couple boxes of Saran Wrap entangled around the body would ensure a memorable Valentine's Day. Just remember to stay away from lit candles.

Proposed bike paths, parking

Some bike racks targeted for removal; bicycle master plan revamps campus

BRIAN SMOLLER
staff reporter

Bikers who ride through campus will soon find parking their bike a little tougher. During the next few weeks, bike racks in or near the center of campus will be removed.

"This is to discourage people from riding into those areas to park," said Mark Taussig, an architect for K-State facility planning.

A bike master plan prepared for K-State and the city of Manhattan calls for the removal of certain bike racks not near proposed bike paths.

"We're going to take some out of the quadrangles, and move them near the trails so you can get off your bike and park it without walking," Taussig said.

The quadrangles refer to the four quadrants the campus is divided into by the bike paths.

Phil Anderson, member of the parking council and professor of speech, said he supports the removal of the bike racks targeted by the bike master plan.

"I think it will make a big impact and discourage people from riding in there," he said.

The plan also calls for the completion of existing bike trails and building of proposed trails surrounding the campus. The bike trail north of Farrell Library will be the final leg of a trail that cuts through the middle of campus.

"That path will allow bikers to get to any of the four quadrants on campus," Anderson said.

Taussig said the path north of Farrell will be completed in about three months, when the library construction is finished.

"We're still drawing plans on it," he said. "The path would also serve as an emergency route for fire trucks."

The plan to change the bike trails came by way of observation of trouble areas.

"It's just like the planning for the location of sidewalks," Taussig said. "You just look for the cow paths where everybody walks."

The bike master plan Taussig helped design proposes trails that would interconnect Manhattan and significant areas of designation by the public, for example CiCo Park, the University and Manhattan High School.

The city and the community approved the plan after numerous public hearings.

The plan also suggests altering some of the main streets in the city to accommodate bikers.

Anderson said he particularly likes the proposed changes to Manhattan Avenue.

"I like the idea of adding a bike lane to Manhattan Avenue," he said.

In order to allow room for a bike lane, Manhattan Avenue's lanes would have to be narrowed from 14 feet to 12 feet.

is due to the solid reputation the group has throughout campus."

The group usually travels in vans to its performances. Travel involved averages about 12 hours per show.

"One of the things I enjoy most about being a K-State Singer is traveling with everyone," Jon Daugharthy, senior in political science, said.

Each year the K-State Singers take part in a large tour. Two years ago, the group traveled to Disney World to perform in a mini competition made up of the top 16 show choirs in the nation.

The group has also traveled to Tulsa, Oklahoma City and Dallas. This year, the K-State Singers will travel to Denver. The trip is one of the many functions the KSU Alumni Association sponsors to keep in touch with alumni all over the country.

"The alumni events are always a lot of fun. The alumni are excited to see K-Staters, and they are very supportive and friendly,"said Sydney Baugh, junior in family life and community studies.

The K-State Singers also provide the members with many opportunities. Daugharthy, for instance, got a job singing at a theme park due to his experience being in front of an audience with the group.

"The K-State Singers is a great experience. It offers the members many opportunities to meet lots of well-connected people in the music world," Kruse said.

Tobacco industry challenges FDA restrictions

ASSOCIATED PRESS

GREENSBORO, N.C. — Accusing the Food and Drug Administration of overstepping its authority, the tobacco industry on Monday asked a judge to block marketing and sales regulations aimed at curbing teen-age smoking.

Beginning Feb. 28, young people must present a photo ID for proof of age before buying cigarettes, under FDA rules. Many states bar such sales to people younger than 18.

Future steps also would restrict advertising in magazines, near schools and at sporting events in an effort to cut teen smoking.

Richard Cooper, an attorney for R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. and a former FDA counsel, said the FDA is taking a first step toward banning tobacco.

"Before us today is an extraordinary exertion of power by a federal agency. The FDA wants to exert its jurisdiction over the entire tobacco industry," Cooper said.

U.S. District Judge William Osteen heard arguments on a motion by four cigarette makers and an advertising firm which want him to decide without a trial that the FDA lacks authority for its regulatory campaign.

Osteen, who was a tobacco industry lobbyist two decades ago, said a ruling is at least five weeks away.

"This case is too serious for both sides to give it any less consideration," he told lawyers.

"What's at stake is the future health of some of our children," FDA Commissioner David Kessler said after the hearing. "The president stands firmly behind the regulations to try in a common-sense way to reduce the number of children who will become addicted."

President Clinton has said the restrictions are needed to cut in half the 1 million teen-agers who start smoking each year.

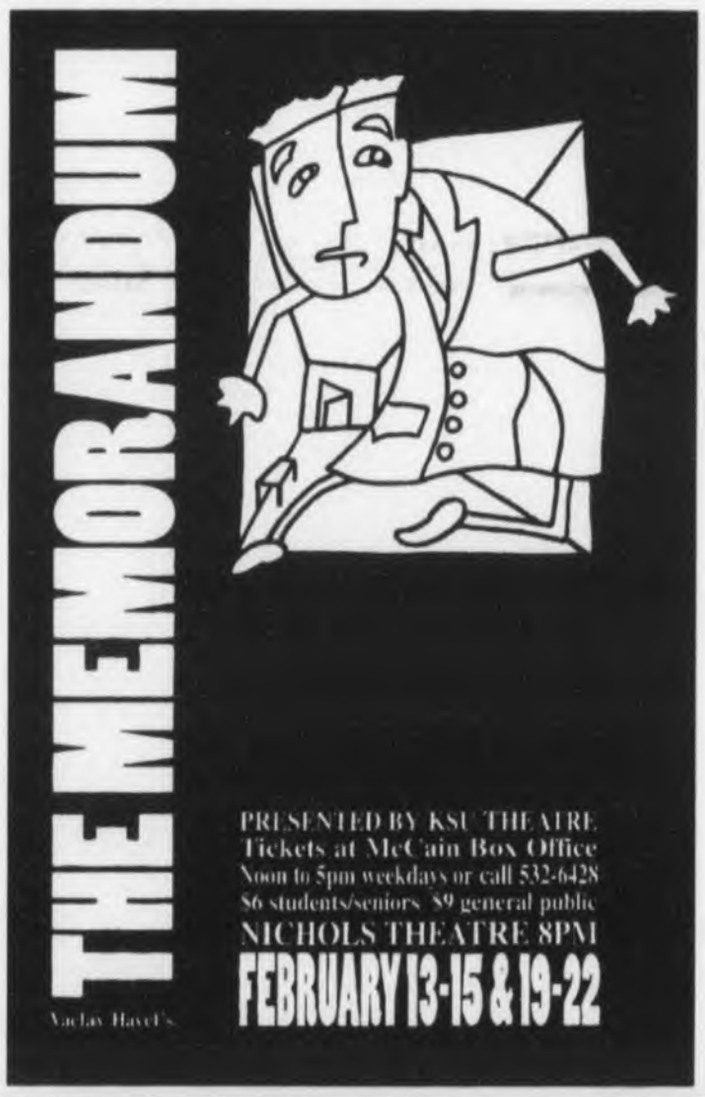
Cooper noted the FDA did not act on the Surgeon General's first warnings about the health effects of cigarettes in 1965.

"Why? Because FDA had no jurisdiction," Cooper said.

A Justice Department lawyer disagreed.

"If Congress wants to preempt the FDA from exerting jurisdiction, it can do so," George Phillips told Osteen. "It has not done this."

During the hearing, the judge questioned Congress' failure to act.



"Why doesn't Congress just ban smoking by minors instead of dancing around the perimeter?" Osteen said.

Justice Department attorney Gerald Kell said the FDA classifies teen-age smoking as a pediatric disease and believes that, unlike adults, teen-agers are too young to make a rational decision about whether to smoke.

Outside the courthouse, John Fithian of the Freedom to Advertise Coalition said the case goes beyond tobacco advertising.

Convicted mail bomber sentenced to death

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — A man convicted of murdering a federal judge during a string of mail bombings that terrorized the South was sentenced Monday to die in Alabama's electric chair.

Walter Leroy Moody, 51, said he would appeal.

Moody, of Rex, Ga., was convicted of murder in November in the slaying of U.S. Circuit Judge Robert Vance, who died when he opened a package in the kitchen of his suburban Mountain Brook home. Vance's wife was wounded.

Moody already is serving seven life sentences without parole on federal convictions of murdering Vance and a civil rights lawyer, threatening to kill 17 judges and sending two other bombs that were intercepted.

Prosecutors contended Moody, who is white, sent mail bombs to Vance, who also was white, and to black civil rights lawyer Robert Robinson of Savannah, Ga., out of frustration and hatred about being unable to overturn a 1972 conviction on a charge of possessing a pipe bomb.

Moody had once attended law school in Atlanta, but the felony record prevented him from ever becoming a lawyer.

"He was obsessed with getting that 1972 conviction overturned," prosecutor Bob Morrow said.

One of the bombs that was intercepted was sent to the 11th Circuit's headquarters in Atlanta. The other was meant for the NAACP office in Jacksonville, Fla.

Morrow said the bomb sent to Robinson was intended to make it appear a group such as the Ku Klux Klan was behind the judge's murder.

The NAACP believed it was a prime target of the bombing campaign, and Benjamin Hooks, the group's executive director, sought assurances from President Bush that, from the presidency down, there is a sense of urgency. Bush promised to bring the bigots to justice.

Both slayings took place in December 1989 and made many people nervous about opening packages during the Christmas season.

Moody, a self-styled literary consultant, became a suspect after investigators found similarities between the devices used to kill Robinson and Vance and the pipe bomb that exploded at Moody's home in 1972.

Committee hears testimony on concealed handgun issue

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Testimony is scheduled to continue today on bills that would allow citizens to carry concealed handguns.

Allowing concealed weapons to be carried deters violent crimes, a law professor told the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee on Monday.

The committee is having hearings on a bill sponsored by Sen. Janice Hardenburger, R-Haddam, that would allow Kansans to carry concealed handguns. A similar bill failed in the Senate.

John R. Lott Jr., of the University of Chicago Law School, told the committee that his study of nationwide FBI crime data for the years from 1977 to 1992 also showed no significant increase in accidental handgun deaths.

"Concealed handgun laws also appear to be the great equalizer between the sexes," Lott said. "Criminals have a strong tendency to attack the weakest targets, such as women and the elderly."

Kansas law generally allows individuals to carry concealed weapons only on their own property or at their own businesses.

Thirty-one states allow the general public to carry concealed weapons if they meet certain requirements.

Adopting such laws produces at least an 8-percent drop in murders and a 5-percent drop in rapes, Lott said.

Lott was one of a series of witnesses on both sides of the issue who testified Monday before the Senate committee and its House counterpart. Testimony is scheduled to continue today.

Wyandotte County District Attorney Nick Tomasic questioned the need for concealed-carry legislation, noting that current law allows weapons to be carried openly.

"If a concealed weapon helps in self-defense, why conceal it?" Tomasic said. "Why not just strap it on?"

Cities would have the right to exempt themselves from such a law under the home rule law, Tomasic said.

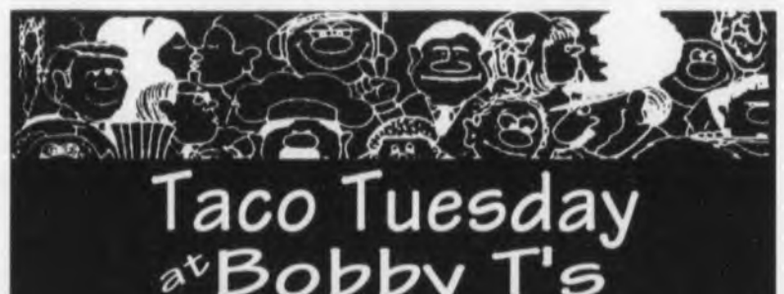
The Kansas Bureau of Investigation would need 42 additional positions to meet the law's requirements, KBI Director Larry Welch said.

Welch said the KBI, as it is constructed today, could not carry out the bill's requirements.

The bill requires background checks that are as detailed as those for gubernatorial appointees and KBI special agents, he said.

Marian Davis, representing the Johnson County MAINstream Coalition, spoke against the bill.

"I have never understood how a pistol in my purse would help me if I were ambushed," she said.



But Sylvia Foulkes, Olathe, said she was severely slashed by a knife-wielding attacker 11 years ago.

She spoke in favor of the bill, saying "My last image is of him facing my family and me in court and saying he'd be back."

Law-enforcement officers from other states also testified about their experiences with concealed-carry laws.

R.L. Skinner, the elected constable of Dallas County, Texas, said law-enforcement officials in his county have experienced no problems with the concealed carry law passed last year in Texas.

Four positions are open for the Board of Student Publications in this year's general campus election. With the election quickly approaching, students may be curious as to what this board does.

The board acts as an oversight committee for all student publications. This includes the Collegian, the Royal Purple, Collegian advertising and the campus phonebook.

The board consists of 11 members, seven students and four faculty members. Four of the student positions are elected and three are appointed representatives. Faculty positions are appointed by the president of the University, with the exception of Ron Johnson, who is the director of Student Publications Inc.

Any K-State student who is enrolled in at least 12 hours or is a graduate student enrolled in six or more graduate hours is eligible to be a candidate for the board. Students who will graduate during the fall, spring or summer of the term of office, and do not plan to enroll in graduate school at K-State are not eligible.

The board is divided into two main committees — personnel and finance. It is the independent movies trumped large studio releases for Academy Award nominations, but it brought a distressing call to Little Apple theaters.

"'Sling Blade?' I haven't even heard of it," Rich Smith, assistant manager at Seth Child Cinema, said about the movie that starred actor Billy Bob Thornton, one of this year's Academy Award nominees for best actor and for best screenplay.

Only three of the five movies nominated for best picture have been shown in Manhattan, and other nominations ranging from best actress to best adapted screenplay have also been upstaged.

"If it has a big name and a lot of publicity, it is going to do well here," Smith said.

The amount of advertising for a movie also influences where the movie is played, Smith said.

"A company like Sony Pictures that released 'Jerry Maguire,' has a lot of money to release new pictures, but movies like 'Shine,'

INTERNATIONAL SPACE STATION

▶ Space shuttle blasts off
The space shuttle Discovery raced into orbit yesterday to upgrade the Hubble Space Telescope.

Advances in aerospace technology are taking NASA into the next century, and the International Space Station is the latest advance.

This was one of the topics of the speech in Forum Hall Tuesday night sponsored by BioServe Space Technologies of K-State and the University of Colorado.

Ed Gabris, director of space development and commercial research division, NASA Headquarters, explained to the audience of more than 100 what the International Space Station will do and the effect of the research performed on people on Earth.

"The station will give us the ability to live and work in space for a long time," Gabris said.

Shuttles today have a limited amount of space to install lockers for hardware and experiments, and a limited time that the shuttles can be used. The space station will expand both aspects of this problem with the ability to house hundreds of lockers and fly 365 days out of the year, he said.

The experiments that will be done on the space station will cover crystallography, agriculture, biological sciences, bio-systems, electric and non-electric materials.

The first research is scheduled to take place in 1999 and the construction should be completed in the year 2002, Gabris said. This means construction workers and researchers will have to share the space until the station is completed.

Some of the life-science research that will take place will include finding a cure for the flu, advances in open heart surgery, osteoporosis research and production of new materials like fiber-optics, he said.

NASA is looking for scientific advances in products that affect our lives, Gabris said.

Gabris ended by quoting Robert H. Goddard, aerospace pioneer, "It is difficult to say what is impossible, for the dream of yesterday is the reality of tomorrow."

Louis Stodieck, associate director of technical affairs, BioServe Space Technologies, University of Colorado, also attended. He gave a summary of what the Colorado branch of BioServe Technologies does and showed the many payloads that have been sent on shuttle flights from the university.

The process is to develop new products and make existing products better, Stodieck said.

"We focus on life sciences and cover a huge spectrum of products and research," he said.

Alaska

STORY BY BECKY AISTRUP • PHOTO BY STEVE HEBERT

Alaska is known to some as no man's land or God's country.

But this isn't the case for Randy Basaraba, assistant professor of diagnostic medicine and pathobiology.

On March 1, Basaraba will take part in the 25th Annual Iditarod Trail Sled Dog Race when it gets underway in Anchorage, Alaska.

"It is just the opportunity to go to places in Alaska that not very many people get to go," Basaraba said.

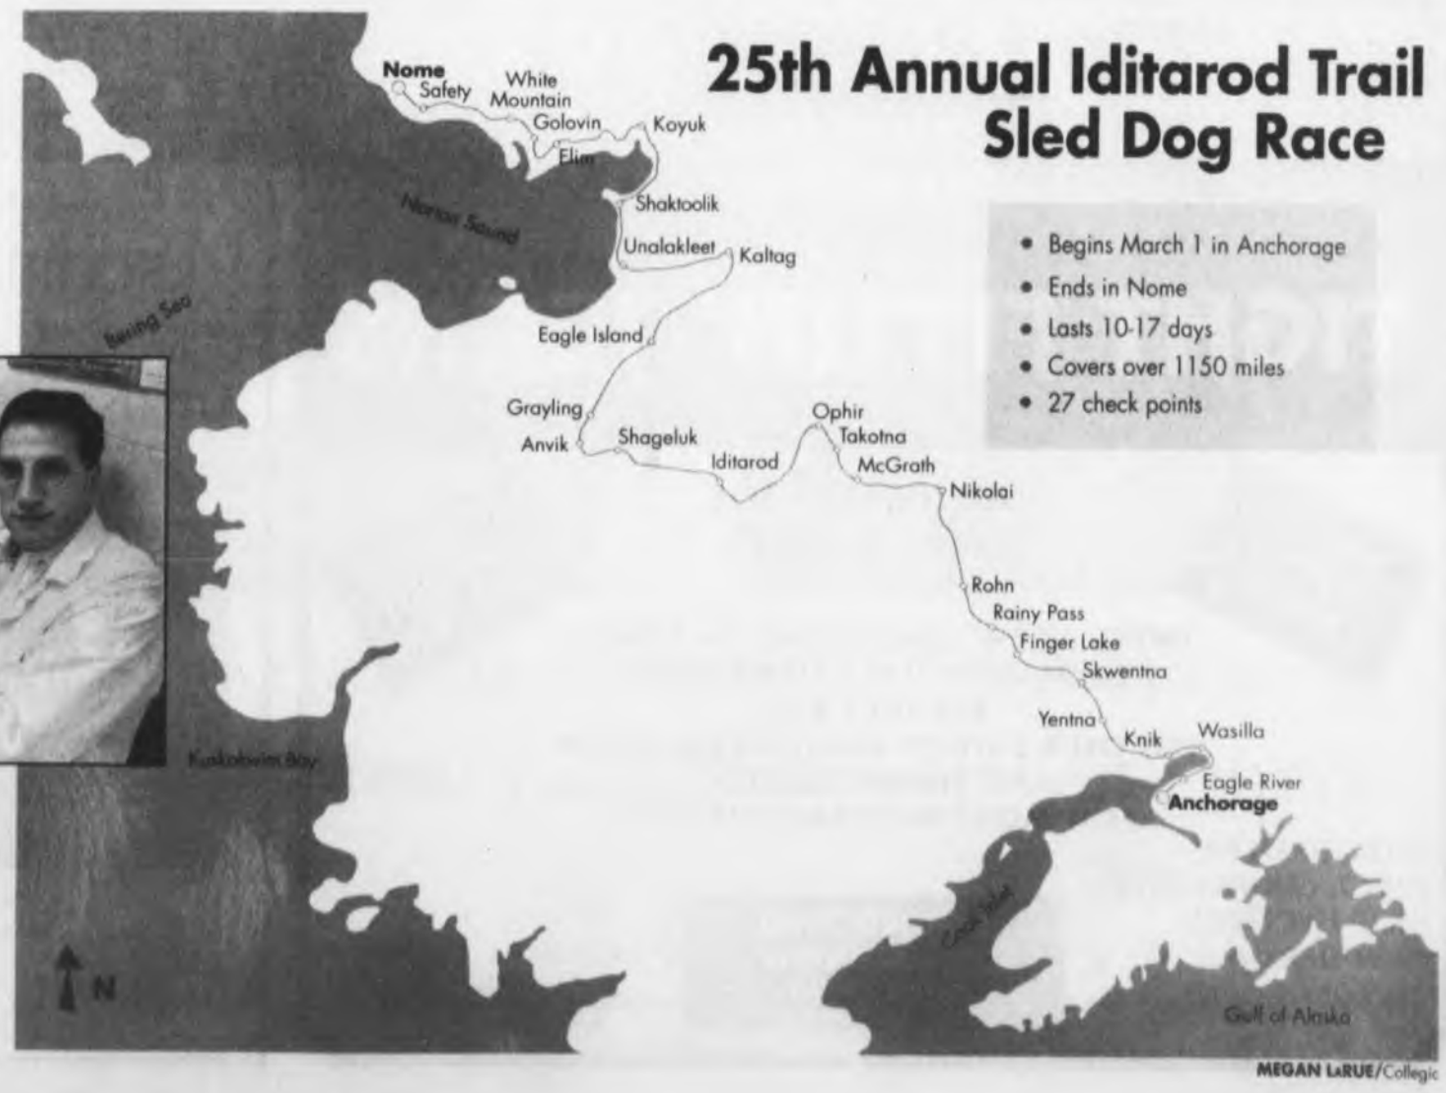
This will be his third trip to Alaska.

"My main responsibility is to make sure the dogs remain healthy throughout the race and to minimize the chance of a dog dying on the trail. In the event that a dog does die on the trail, it is one of the official race rules that the dog is examined by myself or another pathologist.

"This is basically done to make sure that the mushers don't run them excessively, and there is no abuse," Basaraba said.

If it is determined there was neglect or abuse, the musher would be out of the race.

"It is a pretty important job because it really determines whether the person finishes the race or not," Basaraba said.



There are 27 check points along the race. Generally there are two or three veterinarians stationed at each one.

• JESSE JACKSON FREED AFTER DISORDERLY CONDUCT ARREST.

CHICAGO — The Rev. Jesse Jackson spent the night in jail by his own choosing after leading a protest against a company that is a member of his civil rights coalition.

Jackson was arrested on a disorderly conduct charge Monday.

When he was arrested, he was trying to block access to a construction site that is supervised by a white-owned company that ended a contract with a black trucking company.

Two other protesters also were arrested.

Jackson was released the next morning without having to post bail.

Jackson asked for a jury trial, which was scheduled for April 1.

He was charged with a misdemeanor that is punishable by up to 30 days in jail and a $500 fine.

The courtroom was packed with cheering supporters.

As Jackson left the court, horns blared as at least a dozen trucks lined up outside.

• ARMY SUSPENDS HIGHEST RANKING ENLISTED SOLDIER PENDING INVESTIGATION.

WASHINGTON — In an unprecedented act, the Army suspended its top-ranking enlisted soldier.

He was suspended pending the outcome of an investigation of charges that he sexually harassed a female subordinate.

In explaining its decision Monday, the Army said publicity about the allegations against Sergeant Major of the Army Gene C. McKinney made it difficult for him to function.

The suspension came one day after the woman who made the accusation publicly complained of a different system of justice for the service's upper ranks.

The woman who made the accusatinos noted that drill sergeants recently accused of sexual misconduct were suspended immediately, while McKinney had been allowed to stay on.

McKinney has denied the allegations.

• ISRAEL RELEASES 1ST OF 31 PALESTINIAN PRISONERS.

TEL MOND, Israel — Israel today released a woman imprisoned for her part in the kidnapping and murder of an Israeli soldier, the first of 31 Palestinian women to be freed as part of a peace deal.

Five of the women to be freed today were involved in deadly attacks on Israelis.

Hardliners sharply criticized Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu for ordering the releases.

Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat said freeing the women signaled peacemaking was back on track.

• PROSECUTION TO CHARGE FORMER HONDURAN PRESIDENT IN EXTRADITION CASE.

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras — The federal prosecutor's office said today that it will charge a former Honduran president and other top officials with illegally extraditing a drug trafficker to the United States.

A former Honduran president has never faced similar charges.

The case grew out of the kidnap, torture and murder of a U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency agent in Mexico in 1985.

The prosecutor's office said that within 15 days it would bring charges of kidnapping, torture, abuse of authority and violation of the constitution against former President Jose Azcona Hoyo.

The office will also charge other officials, including the former armed forces chief and the current national police chief.

The charges carry prison terms of up to 12 years.

In a cutline on page one of Monday's paper, Jeff Sittner was incorrectly reported to be a fifth-year architecture student. Sittner is a member of the Topeka Railroad Days Inc.

In the article "Space station update to be given," information was omitted. The Ed Gabris speech was sponsored by BioServe Space Technologies and the Union Program Council Issues and Ideas Committee.

Linda Battle said she gets hyped up whenever she thinks about how small businesses can grow to become self-sufficient.

"When your business pays for itself," she said, "all the rest is yours."

Battle owns and operates Turning Heads Salon in Manhattan, and appeared on a panel of seven black entrepreneurs Tuesday night in the K-State Student Union. The event was part of K-State's Black History Month celebration and was sponsored by the KSU Alumni Association.

The panel members were of varied fields and backgrounds and were all from northeast Kansas.

When Danielle Dempsey-Swopes graduated from law school, she worried about the shady stigma sometimes associated with attorneys.

"Some of my classmates were less than reputable," she said. "I realized that I didn't have to work that way. I could provide a good service."

She now runs the Equal Opportunity Office at the University of Kansas.

Jeff Efford's business, Custom Furniture Gallery, has only been open for two weeks. He said that he realized that to provide for himself and his family, he needed to go out on his own, because working for someone else was not paying the bills.

"I worked 70 hours a week for a month," he said, "but when I got my paycheck, I was still broke. I had to get out of the comfort zone for a while, but it was worth it."

Ray Patterson, who runs his own custom clothing and tailoring shop out of Ogden, chose the location because of its proximity to both Fort Riley and Manhattan, and also because of the absence of black-owned businesses in that town.

"The hardest thing to overcome are the barriers put up by those who don't want you there," he said. "My biggest motivator is for someone to look me in the face and tell me, 'You can't do that.'"

Llellwyn McTavish, of McTavish Photography and Video, said he knows about discouraging words.

He said he also knew he didn't want to work for anyone else when he retired from the military. Now his business in Junction City hires photographers who work for him.

When McTavish tried to get a loan to start his business, he was greeted by a bank executive with his feet on the desk.

"He asked me what my business was," he said. "I told him photography. He told me, 'Those don't last long, so we're not going to pay you.' It was a blessing, because it taught me that I didn't need them."

"I had to take a risk," he said. "That word risk means a lot."

The panel covered many more fundamentals of running a business: taking stock of starting resources, having the patience to smile at difficult customers, keeping a steady focus on goals and not forgetting one's roots.

Jawwad Abdulhaqq, CEO of Full Circle Entertainment and former president of the Black Student Union at K-State, said his strongest motivator is very simple.

"I have to put food on the table," he said. Being one's own boss is rough at times, but with a goal and a focus, it's worth the risk, he said.

"You have to treat everybody the same," Patterson said. "You can't pick and choose your customers. Remember, the only color of money is green. It's the only color that matters."

City Commission hears 1998 expansion plans

DAVID FAIRBANKS
staff reporter

The City Commission met Tuesday night to review K-State's monetary requests for ongoing projects on campus for 1998. The money requested will be coming from the City/University Special Projects Fund.

This fund, intended to pay for projects that are mutually beneficial to Manhattan and K-State, was created in July 1994 as a result of the annexation of K-State.

Submitted for the board's approval was a list of monetary requests for six projects. The total dollar amount for these projects equals $342,932.

Assistant City Manager Ron Fehr began the proposal by playing a quick segment of "The Wabash Cannonball" through his laptop computer before reviewing background information on recent spending from the City/University Special Projects Fund.

He then handed over the floor to the vice president of administration and finance at K-State, Tom Rawson.

Rawson explained to the commission that a previous request for money to fund a new telecommunications room in the K-State Student Union had been withdrawn. This withdrawal comes as a result of the completion of the Union additions being behind schedule.

From there the requests for money began. University officials Mark Taussig and Brice Hobrock presented the commission with the list of projects and the money requested.

Among the projects addressed were the installation of additional lighting and cameras on campus, installation of more bicycle racks and construction of additional routes as well as the electronic linking of Manhattan Public Library to K-State Libraries.

"A major issue is finding that these projects are beneficial to both K-State and the surrounding community," Fehr said. "Take additional lighting on campus for example.

"With inadequate lighting, campus sidewalks can be unsafe. If the sidewalks are unsafe then that could affect enrollment and with less students at K-State, the community could also suffer."

The proposal will add $25,000 worth of lighting to the McCain Auditorium, Nichols Hall and Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art area of campus.

This area sees the most public traffic on campus.

The proposal will also add $20,000 worth of cameras to high-crime areas such as parking lots, Taussig said.

The $50,000 requested for bicycle racks and routes on campus will be added to this year's completion of a 12-foot-wide emergency path, running from 17th Street to Mid Campus Drive, Taussig said.

An additional $25,000 was requested for the further linkage of Manhattan Public Library and K-State Libraries.

"K-State's libraries are open to the public but certain trivial factors, such as limited parking, get in the way of them accessing our services. This link will give everyone easier access," Hobrock said.

Money from the City/University Special Projects Fund has enabled Manhattan Public Library users to access K-State's electronic catalogs and public information databases.

The additional $25,000 will go toward the updating of software and databases and the expansion of Manhattan Public Library's catalog.

Another component of the 1998 proposal deals with the completing of phase two for the University Gardens project, which will give access to the gardens and the visitors center. Phase one, which adds lights, a fountain and remaining sidewalks, will be completed this year, said Taussig.

Also addressed were the requests of $60,000 for a stoplight at the corner of Denison and Kimball avenues and a $127,000 request for street improvements on College Avenue north of Kimball Avenue.

With the completion of the proposed projects and fees for 1998, City/University Special Projects Fund Committee Chairman Rosalys Rieger gave her support to all of the requests and projects.

The Commission then tentatively accepted every request for the 1998 projects.

Mayor Sydney Carlin said all requests were accepted, but final totals will not be decided on until Manhattan's annual budget is passed on Aug. 1.

Funding requests for 1998 projects

Priority	Project	Amount
1	Bicycle infrastructure improvements	$50,000
2	Campus lighting and safety	$45,000
3	K-State Libraries/Manhattan Public Library Project	$25,000
4	University Gardens Support	$35,000
5	Denison Avenue/Kimball Avenue traffic signal	$60,000
6	Assessment for College Avenue improvements north of Kimball Avenue	$127,932
	Total	$342,932

Fee increase vital to publications' competitive edge

Thursday night, Student Senate will decide the future of the Collegian.

The proposed Student Publications Inc. equipment fee increase would drastically change your paper's appearance.

For one, color would be a daily feature.

Experience shows having color translates to more advertisers, and more advertisers translates to more news coverage the Collegian can offer students. The paper could even begin to offer more space for bulletins and announcements.

There are other details that would change, too, such as finer quality photos and greater multimedia capability for the E-Collegian.

But why the need for these changes?

Like other industries that heavily depend on technology, the Collegian is suffering from outdated equipment.

Peer institutions such as KU, Texas and Nebraska, as well as our local competitor the Manhattan Mercury, either do, or will, offer full color for advertisers within the next year. So, not only will the Collegian pale in comparison to other schools, it will lose important advertising dollars to Manhattan's other newspaper.

Fewer advertisers also mean the Collegian would become more heavily dependent on the student fees that support it. Right now, about 66 percent of Student Publications' budget is covered through our advertising revenue.

Student Pubulications also includes the Royal Purple Yearbook and the campus directory. Without an equipment fee increase, those two entities will also suffer.

It's important to note that the equipment fee, used to purchase technology only, is not the same as the Student Publications fee, which in essence pays for a student's subscription to the paper.

More than four years ago, students made an initial investment in Student Publications by creating the equipment fee to modernize that corporation. That investment should not be ignored, but further strengthened by a continuing student commitment.

To put things in perspective — the majority of technology the Collegian utilizes was brand new when most K-State freshmen were in junior high.

Like those students, the Collegian and Student Publications need to keep moving forward to a brighter tomorrow.

Encourage the senators who represent you to vote yes for the Student Publications equipment fee increase.

Our View, an editorial selected and debated by a majority of the editorial board, is written by the editorial board after a concensus opinion is reached. Area urban development slashes sense of community

VIEWPOINT

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
RUSSELL FORTMEYER is a senior in architectural engineering. You can e-mail comments to Russell at (rmf@ksu.edu).

"Toto, we're not in Kansas anymore."

Touché, dear Dorothy, touché. At least that's the feeling I got when I drove over to the Columbian Theatre in Wamego a few weeks ago.

As I passed subdivision after subdivision, each new garage home nestled obtrusively in the wooded hills, I thought for just one moment I might have driven further east than I had planned (perhaps, Johnson County?).

Lately, it seems Manhattan, or the Manhattan-Junction City metroplex, is branching out in every direction.

No longer can you drive or walk 10 minutes out of town for an unobstructed view of the unrestricted prairie — the Konza doesn't really count in this case.

There is a larger picture at stake. All over Kansas, the agrarian regions that define our nature and state identity are systematically gobbled up by American dreamers wanting their 1.5 acres and quaint neo-Tudor mansette.

I hope society has gotten past the foolish point of blaming the homeowner. Who can argue with a case as tight as good security, nice view, quiet atmosphere and new construction? Although, the new homeowners face their own problems like the burden of adding new sewage and road improvements (re: Woodland Hills). Such is the price of non-sustainable development.

No, the real argument lies in how it affects the rest of the community.

While I agree city expansion should not be deterred, it should also not allow this parasitical rape of a community. The recent explosion of commercial development surrounding the new Kansas Highway 177 bridge is no doubt an effect of the rapidly developing landscape in Pottawatomie County between Manhattan and Wamego.

Although there are some good arguments to be made about this mini-exurbia that is developing on our fringes, the reality of the issue is that most college students, ergo Collegian readers, don't live outside of a central core of old Manhattan for a good reason.

I'd wager the majority of K-State students live within a decent walking distant from campus and therefore shopping, restaurants, entertainment and public space.

K-State's campus is an integral piece for binding Manhattan together. It's a village common, more of an academic industrial park of sorts, that connects the commercial with the residential.

This is also the case with downtown Manhattan. Both parts of the city function properly and successfully.

The reason, it could be argued, that the Wal-Mart area is so disastrously inaccessible is because it ignores the region's earlier growth developments. How many people have you seen walking to Wal-Mart?

Similar, but not as drastic, is the village parody that is Westloop. Lucky for the businesses, there's a well-heeled west Manhattan community willing to give up public space for the comforts of a parking-lot maze.

No matter, these same community members live in oversized housing additions designed to keep the world out. What are they keeping in?

In essence, though, Manhattan is a college town of human scale. With new developments such as a city bicycle plan and linear park, our city is only getting more accessible, four-lane highways notwithstanding.

However, the developing countryside (we'll call it "Wamurbia," or Lawrence Part II, if you will) defies our village. Travelers and new students entering Manhattan would never guess we would have such a successful pedestrian zone as Aggieville amid the random Wamurbia.

It's the same experience I had when visiting Princeton University for the first time this past summer.

I was traveling with some friends from New Jersey.

Here we were, driving down a meaningless interstate, seeing large corporate campuses on one side and tract housing on the other, when we turned down a tree-lined street.

The short drive, across a small, well-used lake, finally positioned us in the village of Princeton. Its picture-perfect campus gave way to a stroll-inducing commercial district similar to Aggieville — just add around $2,000 to each price tag. This is Princeton, after all.

People walked their dogs, bumped into friends, and shopped the stores all within walking distance to home or the residence hall. It's almost an ideal life. It's a real Disneyland.

And Princeton is already what the K-State village is quickly becoming: an isolated anachronism that will always function better than all the Wamurbias that surround it.

the Crush

healthy crushes help keep love alive

I thought I was in love with Ricky Schroder when he was on the TV show "Silver Spoons." I had an elaborate fantasy about winning a contest and getting to guest star on the show. While I was on the show, he would fall madly in love with me. We would live happily ever after on our own spin-off show.

It wasn't love. I just had a serious crush on Schroder when I was a youngster. So did lots of other girls my age.

When my sister was younger, she had a crush on the boy in the KPL Gas Service commercial warning against climbing trees near overhead lines. Billy, the expert tree climber, was the heartthrob in her life. To this day she can quote all the words from that TV public service announcement.

You laugh, but you've had a crush, too. If you are lucky, you've got a crush on someone right now.

You might have a crush on the guy who works at the bank. (Have you seen the guy at the Sunflower Bank at Dillons?) Maybe it's your graduate teaching assistant or the man who delivers pizza or your dentist.

Crushes are not love. Crushes are so much better than love. With crushes there are no let-downs because there are no expectations. There are no awkward first dates because there are no dates. There is no difficult break-up because there is nothing to break up.

A crush isn't love. A crush is, well, just a crush.

There are tons of poems, songs, plays and movies about love. Great and not-so-great pieces of literature have been written about love and its effects on people.

They say love can make you crazy, blind, stupid or psychotic. Love is like a rose, a roller coaster, smells like a wet llama and is hope for all.

I have a hard time finding great prose or otherwise concerning crushes.

A crush is hard to define. A crush is a feeling you have for someone, most likely someone you can never have. You probably have very little contact with that person.

When you are near them, your palms sweat, your heart pounds faster and your stomach does strange things. You wonder what the object of your crush is doing during the day. You have strange fantasies about your crush falling desperately in love with you. You wonder if your crush is thinking about you.

Sounds similar to love, but it's not. If you are smart, you know it's not love. If you're stupid, there is nothing I can say to help. You'll have to figure it out on your own.

Thank the gods crushes aren't limited to school-girl imaginations and school-boy daydreams, there is no age when crushes have to end.

Crushes get even better as we get older. At least the fantasies get more interesting and involve leather more often.

VIEWPOINT

MARY RENEE SMITH is a sophomore in speech and theatre. You can e-mail your comments to Mary Renee at (mojo@ksu.edu)

In a crush, the object of your crush is always perfect. No dirty habits, no forgotten birthdays, no late phone calls and no wondering what they got you for Valentine's Day. It's the perfect relationship. And you can be perfect, too.

In your fantasies you can be thin, tall, tan, ready, willing and able. There are no condoms in fantasies, no icky diseases, no assignments due and no deadlines to meet.

You can have a crush while you are dating, in a committed relationship or even married. Having a crush is not cheating. Having a crush is exercising your imagination and romanticism.

The greatest crush of all is to have a crush on someone you love.

To get those same feelings and fantasies about the person you are dating or married to keeps love exciting and new. That is the secret of those couples who are married for 50 years or more.

Crushes aren't love. But the secret to long-lasting love is to keep having those crushes.

• K-STATE STUDENTS INVOLVED IN ART MUSEUM ACTIVITIES

Editor,

I would like to take this opportunity to share with you some information that I think will be beneficial to the readers and will correct the image of the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art's involvement with the students of K-State.

Since the opening of the Beach art museum on Oct. 13, 1996, we have had over 10,000 people visit the art museum. Many of them have participated in programs and/or tours of the art museum. We have specifically identified that half of these visitors have been University students.

I would also like to add that the teaching faculty in the colleges of architecture and design, arts and sciences and engineering have utilized the art museum as a classroom and laboratory for their students and we foresee this to continue in a multitude of disciplinary approaches.

We have a very enthusiastic student organization that has been established by students who call themselves the Beach Bums.

They plan and organize their own activities with the help of an adviser. This group has made a concerted effort to cultivate other students to become involved with the art museum and participate in their activities.

One of the great aspects of the art museum is the student gallery attendants and interns, and the graduate students who have helped us tremendously with behind the scenes activities in preparing for upcoming exhibitions.

Also, we are able to employ students as office assistants as well as a computer programmer who have been a wonderful asset to us. The students employed by the art museum certainly are to be credited for a great portion of the museum's success.

Finally, I would like to inform the readers of the Collegian that 90 percent of all the activities in the art museum are free and open to the public.

• MANHATTAN MUSIC SCENE HOLDS ONTO ITS ROOTS

Editor,

Recently, I have noticed many articles in the Collegian criticizing the music scene of Manhattan. I, being in one of the many bands in this city, would like to rebut these criticisms.

The most frequent statement is that the scene is nonexistent. However, not only is it existential, but unusual in its form. No matter how many twists and turns rock 'n roll may take throughout the course of time, including the most recent, grunge, and that type with a strong heavy beat and you talk in rhyme; oh-yeah crap, eventually it all returns to its pure classic form of rock. That's why they are called classics. They're great.

Cities and towns will forever change with these musical fads (i.e. Seattle and Lawrence) and look back in 10 years in dismay at these trends, just as an older generation did on disco and my own glam rock. Meanwhile, cities such as Manhattan and Kansas City will justifiably bask in their stronghold of rock and blues, the roots of modern styles.

I believe Russell Fortmeyer's analysis was correct when he concluded that Aggievillians refuse to pay the scene its due attention. I personally don't play originals for two reasons.

First of all, I like to get the same responses and attention either way, and second, I, like many others, have found no joy comparable to singing along to an oldie while sipping on a So. Co. and Coke. However, to the bands which do brave the waters and attempt originals, my hat comes off to you.

Furthermore, I challenge Manhattanites to attend these shows and not find themselves singing along to an old favorite or broadening their intellect (which, musically speaking, is something many of us need) with an original. Either way you go, always keep on rocking.

Andrew Oyler
sophomore in history

• STEWART OFF MARK AGAIN

Editor,

In the six months I've attended K-State, I've had the pleasure of reading one of the finest college newspapers in the country, the Collegian. However, there seems to be one constant black mark in your paper that always taints what is normally a great production — Todd Stewart.

Surprise, surprise. Stewart couldn't make it through one column without shooting off his mouth on a topic he knows very little, if anything, about. Monday's column wasn't quite as heinous as the inaccurate and idiotic rip job he did on Manny Dies, but it sure came close.

In his most recent attempt at an opinion piece, Stewart says, "Whoever the television big-wig is who came up with the idea of televising women's hoops could lose a job ... if a sport has enormous problems with attendance, it probably will not do much better with ratings in television. The fact is, no one cares."

To quote a respected Collegian columnist, Valeri Crenshaw — "you stupid, stupid little man."

Women's basketball is perhaps the fastest-growing sport in the country, and definitely one of its most popular. For the last two years, tickets to the NCAA Women's Final Four have sold out within hours of going on sale.

Attendance at the Final Four reached record levels last year in Charlotte, records which probably will be broken at this year's event in Cincinnati.

In addition, the University of Connecticut is one of several schools where the women's team is out-drawing the men. If Stewart had bothered to do five minutes of research, he would know this.

I also don't think Stewart will be able to convince the 3,000 people who regularly attend K-State women's basketball games that "no one cares." In fact, those fans have gotten to see an exciting new brand of basketball that has included wins over nationally ranked opponents such as Texas and Memphis.

Also, with all the high-flying junk men's basketball tries to pass off as fundamentals these days, it's refreshing to watch the game as it was meant to be played — with crisp passing, solid defense and all-out hustle.

Forgive me, but I'd rather watch Brit Jacobson go diving after a loose ball than see Aaron Swartzendruber misfire on another alley-oop attempt to Mark Young.

I wonder if Stewart has even attended a woman's basketball game. I'm sure he would be surprised at the level of enthusiasm and effort put forth by everyone involved.

If he still believes no one cares, watch what kind of interest develops for a one-on-one battle between him and Andria Jones. However, a word of advice, Stewart — put your name in your jock now, 'cause you won't be able to find it when she gets through with you.

Tobacco industry fights FDA rules

New tobacco rules? The Food and Drug Administration's new rules regarding regulation of tobacco sales and advertising are set to take effect Feb. 28. But, the tobacco industry is questioning the FDA's authority.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

GREENSBORO, N.C. — Congress has never given the Food and Drug Administration jurisdiction over tobacco, an R.J. Reynolds lawyer argued Monday as the industry tried to block regulation of cigarettes as a drug.

New FDA rules, set to begin taking effect Feb. 28, would restrict advertising to cut smoking by teen-agers.

The big tobacco companies consider the rules a threat to the First Amendment and claim the FDA lacks authority to regulate sales and advertising.

"Before us today is an extraordinary exertion of power by a federal agency," RJR lawyer Richard Cooper said at a hearing before U.S. District Judge William Osteen. "The FDA wants to exert its jurisdiction over the entire tobacco industry."

Cooper said the cigarette makers believe the FDA wants to ban this industry.

Justice Department lawyers were to argue their case Monday before Osteen, who was a tobacco-industry lobbyist two decades ago.

The judge said it would take him five to 10 weeks to rule on the lawsuit. "This case is too serious for both sides to give it any less consideration," the judge said to the lawyers.

FDA Commissioner David Kessler, who has said he will step down later this month, was among those in the crowded courtroom.

The judge was asked to decide without a trial that the FDA lacks legal authority to regulate cigarettes. The industry also could seek an injunction to block the regulations from going into effect until a trial of its lawsuit is over.

"The tobacco industry sees this as the first shot over the bow in the effort to outlaw cigarettes," said Wake Forest University law professor David Logan, who has closely monitored a legal battle over the regulations.

President Clinton said the restrictions are needed because 1 million teen-agers start smoking each year.

North Carolina Gov. Jim Hunt, whose administration has filed a brief in support of the tobacco industry, said last week a deal was under discussion that could deter the lawsuit. He hinted it could involve trading strict teen-smoking enforcement in exchange for getting the FDA out of the picture.

The regulations would cut deeply into the tobacco industry's $6 billion-a-year advertising and marketing efforts.

Plaintiff Philip Morris Inc., the nation's largest cigarette maker, spends an estimated $2 billion a year on advertising and marketing. No. 2 R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. is not far behind.

"The FDA regulations dramatically affect the way we do our business," RJR attorney Charles Blixt said before today's hearing. "They dramatically affect all of the businesses involved in tobacco sales and advertising."

The first FDA rule would require photo identification with proof of age for cigarette sales. Other regulations would ban tobacco billboards within 1,000 feet of any school or playground and limit ads to no pictures and only black-and-white text in magazines with more than 15-percent youth readership.

Tax bill may cut campus funding

BECKY WINTER
staff reporter

Kent Glasscock and Jeff Peterson, state representatives, discussed state tax cuts and their potential effect on K-State when they met with Faculty Senate Tuesday night.

"We will pass a major tax bill out of the house next week, and I have no idea what that is going to look like," Glasscock said.

He said recommendations made by the governor are important because it is very difficult to restore Kansas Board of Regents cuts on the floor.

"The governor's recommendations on the budget were excellent, and without them we would be treading water," Glasscock said.

Legislators are trying to cut the budget, and the regents could become a prime candidate.

"My fear on the tax side is that the regents' budget is vulnerable," Glasscock said.

One item that is particularly vulnerable is a tuition shortfall needed to compensate for the difference in what it costs to run the University and the amount paid this year in tuition.

The switch to linear fee payment caused K-State to fall $860,000 short of what was previously estimated by the regents, David Balk, Faculty Senate president, said. The University of Kansas also fell $1.2 million short of the estimate.

"They estimated it to be a considerable amount less than what was needed," Balk said.

Glasscock said faculty salaries and the $7.5 million needed for technology updates is also in danger of being cut.

"I think that money is seriously at risk because it's an easy target," Glasscock said. "There are only six to seven people to represent these two cities in the House."

Jim Legg, president elect for Faculty Senate, said the budget cannot afford to be cut anymore.

"Previous decisions have cut us to the bone. Further cuts would really get to the marrow," he said.

Another issue addressed at the meeting was the distribution of classroom surveys by students without faculty approval.

According to the proposal, student surveys in the classroom will not be allowed unless approved by the faculty.

"We as faculty should have the right to tell those people handing out surveys to leave the room," Legg said.

The student survey proposal passed with a unanimous vote.

Weekend successes prepare runners for national competitions

JEREMY KELLEY
sports editor

For two weeks in a row, the K-State track team has been kicking it.

Literally.

Half of the track team traveled to Lincoln last weekend to compete in the Frank Sevigne Husker Invite, while the other half traveled to Ames, Iowa for the Cyclone Invitational.

Three members of the squad earned provisional NCAA qualifying marks and another earned an automatic bid to the NCAA tournament at the Husker Invite.

"In Nebraska, you talk about the best dual-meet team in the country," Coach Cliff Rovelto said. "It was a good meet for us, and we got a lot of better marks out of that meet, especially from our women."

On the women's side, Vanitta Kinard surpassed her previous best of a week ago as she jumped 43' 9-3/4" in the triple jump.

Kinard's jump automatically qualified her for the NCAA competition. Kinard's triple jump of 43' 3-1/4" a week prior to the tournament was the best in the nation at the time.

"Vanitta is doing very well right now," Rovelto said. "Yet, she's capable of even more. I think in the next three weeks we'll see her perform even better."

Kinard received second in the Husker Invite, falling to Pittsburg sophomore Trecia Smith, who jumped 45' 3-1/2."

"I know it takes more," Kinard said. "I'm tired of being third and fourth.

"I know what it takes to be No. 1, and I know I am good enough to be No. 1."

Kinard said she has improved immensely after she transferred to K-State three semesters ago.

"The coaching has really helped me." she said. "They have helped me more and more with the technique of the triple jump rather than just hop, skip and jump."

Three other women also received high marks at the meet.

Karissa Stewart, Renetta Seiler and Belinda Hope also received provisional qualifying marks at the Husker Invite.

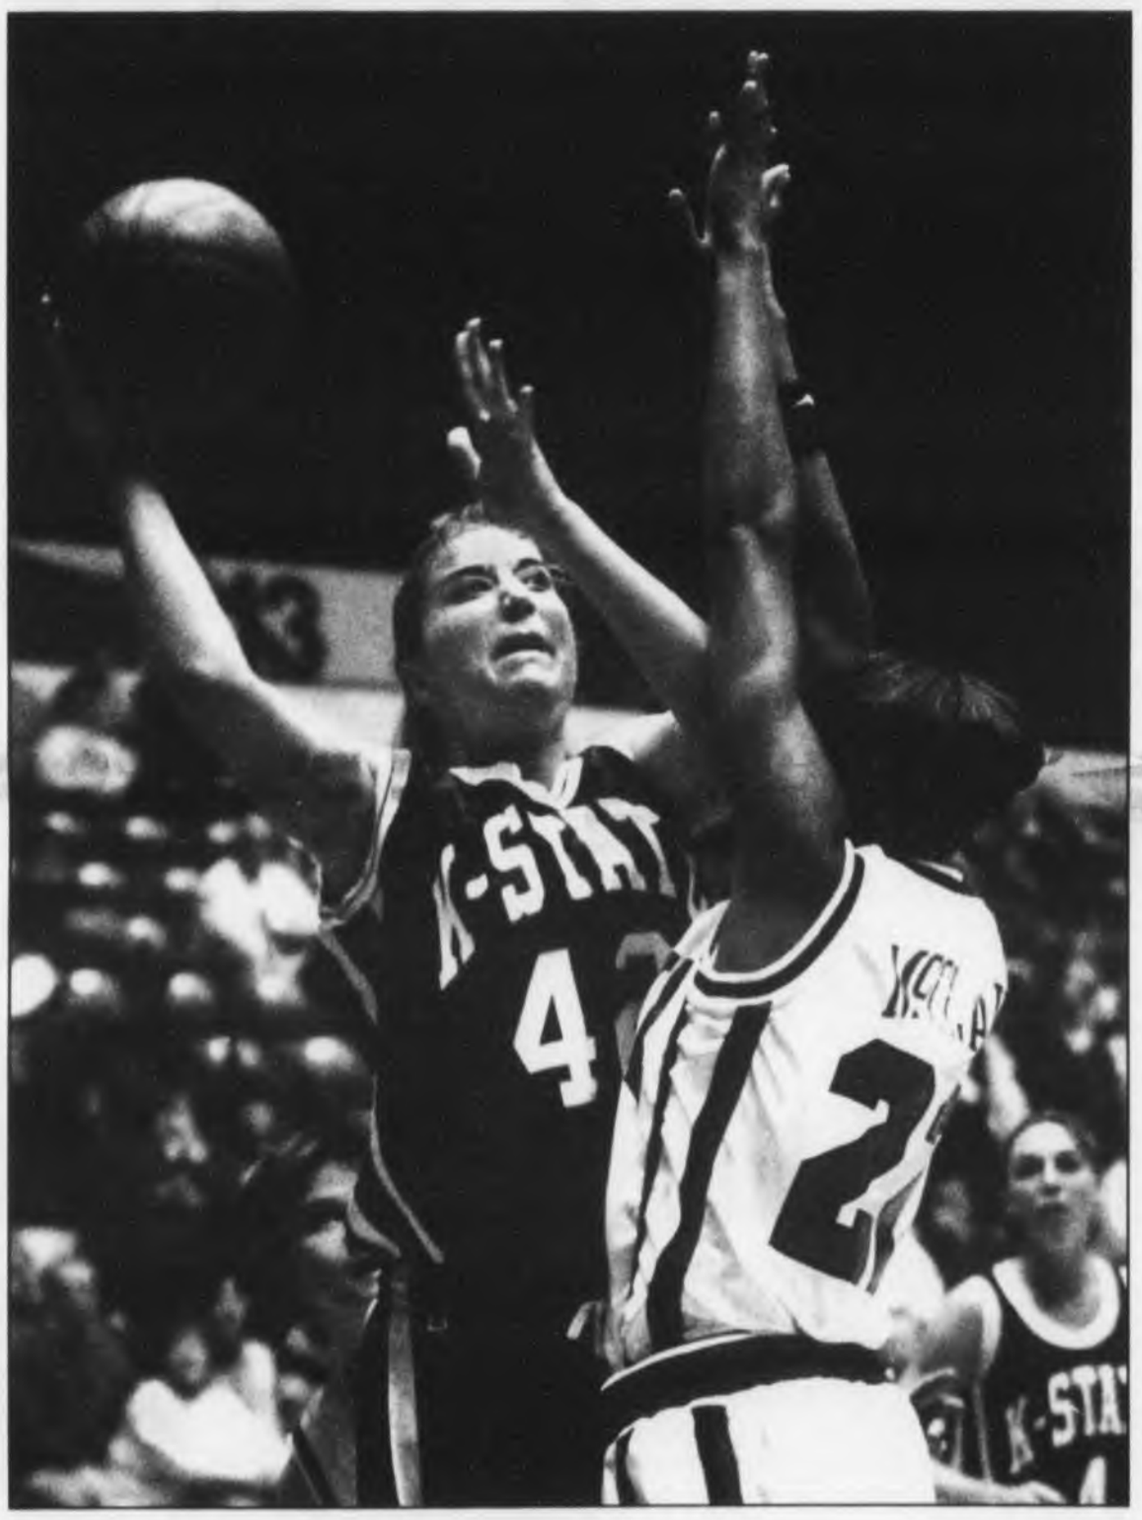
"Belinda's time on the national list would have had her ranked fifth a week ago, so she is looking very good," Rovelto said.

Rovelto said that with the success of these women, the track team could compete with some of the high-caliber teams in the nation.

"With Karissa entering the picture, we have four people who could get potential high ranking marks at the national level," he said.

Meanwhile, at the Cyclone Invitational, Itai Margalit placed first in the high jump with a jump of 7' 3." That jump was enough to qualify him for the NCAA.

However, the numbers were not accepted because Margalit competed unattached to K-State because he is a graduate student and lost NCAA eligibility with K-State.



On the men's side in Ames, sophomore Kevin Lewis and junior Matt Schmoekel performed well in the 200-meter run.

Both men placed high in the preliminary heats but were beat out in the finals.

"Kevin and Matt ran relatively well and showed that they are capable of running very fast," Rovelto said.

One step at a time, the women's basketball team is knocking off those above them. Next up for the Cats is a rematch against Nebraska.

"This game will be a great challenge for us," Coach Deb Patterson said.

Nebraska, No. 23 in the Associated Press poll, receiving 96 votes, comes to town tonight to play the Wildcats in Bramlage Coliseum. Tipoff is staged for 7.

In its last meeting Jan. 15, the Cats lost 53-47 in Lincoln. Awkwardly enough, K-State committed 33 turnovers, rather uncharacteristic of the Cats. On the home turf, Patterson said she hopes things will be different.

"The first time around, we were in the game with a great team," Patterson said. "Those are the kind of games you have to win if you have the chance."

Patterson said the primary goal for tonight's game was taking care of the ball on both sides of the court.

"We had 33 turnovers against Nebraska last time, tying a season-high for us," Patterson said. "We have to reach a point in the game where we're doing what we do best."

The Cats will attempt to contain guard Anna DeForge, who is averaging 17 points and six rebounds a game. DeForge also averages 44 percent from the free-throw line. Forward Tina McClain is averaging nine points and five rebounds a game.

"Nebraska is a very balanced team," Patterson said. "It seems like it's always a different player every time who steps up and gets it done."

Still undefeated at home, Patterson said this fact was a small advantage.

"It's great to be playing this game at home," Patterson said. "However, it really doesn't matter where you play. It's about how you play."

College students needed to coach soccer leagues

JEREMY KELLEY
sports editor

The Parks and Recreation Department in Manhattan is looking for students who would like to voluntarily coach soccer this spring for youths in grades 1-8.

Registration deadline for coaching has already started, however it continues through the end of this week.

Karen Perry, recreational supervisor, said she has found it to be an excellent way for college students to gain experience in the coaching field.

"It's basically something for nothing," Perry said. "It gives students opportunities to gain great experience, plus it's an excellent résumé builder."

Furthermore, Perry said she has had great success in the past with college students who have registered to coach.

"They do very well," Perry said. "College students have taken the ball and ran with it. I feel they do an excellent job."

Jenny Jaynes, an intern at the office since January, who has had prior experience with the Parks and Recreation Department, said she felt coaching younger kids was a positive experience.

"I found it to be a very positive thing," she said. "Parents are very supportive of the student coaches."

Jaynes, senior in parks and recreation administration, said the time commitment wasn't too demanding, and it still gave students time to devote to their studies.

"The time involved isn't so intensive that you don't have time for anything else," she said.

Coaching commitment is approximately from three to six hours a week from March 1 to May 10.

Soccer games begin on March 31. Each coach has from six to eight games on his schedule. There is also a coaching clinic sponsored by the department prior to the season.

"I just hope the coaches can teach these kids basic skills and sportsmanship," Perry said.

"We don't stress competitiveness and winning is not our foremost objective."

Perry said soccer officials are also needed for the program. She said officiating experience is encouraged, but not required.

Officials are paid $8 a game with games beginning on March 31. Officials must supply their own uniform.

"There's a lot of community support, especially for college students," Jaynes said. "The biggest thing is that it's really fun."

Perry reiterated this.

"It makes students get involved with the community," she said.

"And they get to find out what the community here at K-State is all about."

Soccer Coaches Needed

College students are wanted to coach youths in grades 1-8.

- Registration forms are available at Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department.
- The registration deadline is Feb. 14.
- The coaches will coach from six to eight games starting March 31.
- The season lasts two months.
- A time commitment is needed from four to six hours per week.
- Officials are also needed and would earn $8 a game.
- Officials must supply their own jersey.

Neck injury, back problems spawn talk of retirement for Chief tackle

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Kansas City Chiefs left tackle John Alt has been diagnosed with a neck injury that could threaten the career of the 13-year veteran.

Alt, who has started 120 of a possible 128 games since 1989, has been told he has two bulging disks in his neck.

The injury was diagnosed after Alt continued to have a tingling sensation in his left arm more than six weeks after the season ended.

Alt had lost feeling in the arm during a Monday night game Dec. 9 against the Raiders. Trainers insisted he lay motionless for several minutes while they examined him, but he later returned to the game.

"I have never had a neck problem in my entire career, other than a little broken bone during training camp," Alt said. "But when you get into the neck area, you get a little more concerned."

Alt has talked of retirement as he battled back problems the past two seasons, but those problems seemed to have solved themselves.

He has had disk problems in his back throughout his career, and had back surgery in 1985.

He had planned on another back surgery this off-season, but his back had been feeling better.

"They said the disk is receding," Alt said. "It has gone back considerably. They told me they had not seen that happen to a person who had a prior surgery."

Alt said he would wait as long as possible before deciding whether to retire.

"I don't want to close the door completely," he said. "But circumstances are dictating things a little bit."

Alt is signed through the 1998 season after renegotiating his contract in 1995.

His injury is another blow to a Chiefs line that had been one of the best in football. Line coach Art Shell has gone to join new coach Dick Vermeil in Atlanta, and right tackle Ricky Ziglar is a free agent.

Veteran Jeff Criswell and second-year player Trezelle Jenkins are the only tackles under contract besides Alt.

Alt's 179 games are the most of any offensive lineman in team history except for Jim Tyrer's 180 from 1961-73.

Disappointing play-by-play announcers fail to communicate gist of sports world

VIEWPOINT

JEREMY KELLEY

JEREMY KELLEY is a sophomore in print journalism. You can e-mail your comments to Jeremy at (weasal1@ksu.edu).

Sports people, in general, suck.

Anymore it becomes harder and harder to find a decent sports commentator or analyst or studio host who actually knows what he is talking about.

Too often it's the same old story — an old, decrepit man quickly moving around in tight pants trying to become a superstar commentator, yet he can't even say Jerod Haase's name correctly.

On the Fox Sports Network, I've heard everything from Gerad Hasay to Jerode Hause. Quite frankly, I think it's pathetic. How can you call yourself a sports analyst if you can't even say the name of the guy who completes one of the best back courts in the nation?

Take KU's Max Falkenstien. Sure, you have to love the guy because he's been around the KU group for as long as I can remember, but he's so pro-KU.

Max will hoot and holler when center Raef LaFrentz brings down the house with a dunk, yet when Nebraska forward Cookie Belcher jams one, it's no big deal.

Give me somebody who goes nuts for both teams and is not biased to one side. Give me Greg Sharpe.

Here's a guy who simply gives the play-by-play and goes nuts whenever anything thrilling happens, no matter which team does it.

I recall listening to this WIBW-AM 580 radio guru during the K-State-Iowa State football game. When running back Mike Lawrence scooted in for a long touchdown run, Sharpe blew up. But then when running back Troy Davis achieved another 2,000-yard season, Sharpe was there to commend him.

I want the game and the game only. Forget biased announcers who try to instill in the listener a love for one team or another. It's bogus.

My dad could do better than these so-called play-by-play announcers, and my dad doesn't even follow sports that closely. My dad could hang with any Fox Sports announcer, yet my dad doesn't get paid to follow these athletes around the country.

Why is it that nobody in the sports world really knows the difference between the K-State Wildcats and the Kansas Jayhawks?

When K-State was officially invited to the Cotton Bowl, a feature story was placed on the Associated Press wire about the Wildcats. However, instead of calling K-State the Wildcats the AP confused the Cats with our counterpart KU, and called us the K-State Jayhawks.

How can Dick Vitale always be so charged up like the Energizer Bunny? The guy doesn't quit. Sure, he's got a love for the game, but he's just too roused up about things.

He doesn't know when to back down. I can't remember a time when Vitale wasn't extremely overwhelmed about a "give 'em the rock, PTPer, super-sensational diaper-dandy." The guy is just too much.

Why aren't there more guys like ESPN's Stuart Scott? This guy knows sports, and he knows how to keep the viewer's attention. The kid's got a knack for this sort of thing, and he's got it for one reason. He can keep my attention, and he doesn't use trite expressions. Occasionally he'll slip in a little somethin', somethin' just to pull the viewer further into the story, and in my mind it really works.

"You know he's like butter, 'cause he's on a roll!"

It seems like he always has something new, but it is pretty simple. He just re-enacts popular things like songs, movie titles and this so-called phase going around the Unites States called Ebonics.

"Oh my goooodness!"

With Scott you always get something new. And he still gives you the gist and that's it. No leaning toward one side. Just the facts, man.

"You know they were jammin', 'cause jelly don't shake like that!"

'English Patient' leads Oscar nominations pool

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — The sweeping wartime epic "The English Patient" led with 12 Academy Award nominations Tuesday as Oscar voters recognized independent films but not one particular material girl.

Madonna failed to receive a best actress bid for her star turn as Argentina's controversial first lady in the musical "Evita." The film based on the stage play also failed to garner a best-picture nomination.

Independents triumphed over major studio releases, led by "The English Patient." They claimed four of the five best picture slots as well as many other top nominations.

TriStar's "Jerry Maguire," which earned $121 million, was the only picture in that category from a major studio. The other best picture contenders were "Fargo," "Secrets & Lies" and "Shine."

"Fargo" and "Shine" had seven nominations apiece, while "Jerry Maguire" and "Secrets & Lies" each got five.

Billy Bob Thornton's performance as a retarded man with a violent past was a breakthrough for the relatively obscure actor, who also received a screenplay nomination as the writer of "Sling Blade" and its director. He was a regular on the CBS situation comedy "Hearts Afire."

Favored but missing from the actress nominees was Debbie Reynolds for "Mother."

Awards will be given out March 24. Billy Crystal will be host.

THE RACE IS ON for the Academy Awards' Best Picture of the Year. Who will win? "The English Patient," "Fargo," "Jerry Maguire," "Secrets and Lies," or "Shine"? The verdict will be in, and you can watch on Oscar Night at 8 p.m., March 24, on ABC.

'English Patient' offers what Hollywood only dreams of making

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

Movie Review

If ever there was the perfect movie for a Valentine's Day romance, "The English Patient" isn't necessarily the one.

Not to say it isn't filled with subtle passion, intrigue, unquenching desire and sensitive characters crafted into an epic tale of love and tragedy.

These are the ingredients of a style of movie Hollywood only dreams of making, which makes it all the more easily understandable that there is so much critical buzz and Oscar talk surrounding the film. It did win best drama at the Golden Globes.

The story, which begins at the pre-stages of World War II, is told from the point of view of Ralph Fiennes ("Schindler's List.") Fiennes plays Count Laszlo de Almasy, an injured pilot rescued, but badly burned from a plane crash in the midst of the desert.

This is how the film begins. We witness nothing more than the simplicity of the plane crash and the rescue. What is the significance of this man? Who is the woman who was left dead in the passenger seat?

"The English Patient" is so well-crafted that one must simply await the conclusion of the film before learning the answers to the questions.

Almasy is eventually taken to safety in Italy by the American Red Cross. He convalesces in an abandoned monastery with the help of a caring nurse named Hana, played by Juliet Binoche ("Trois Coleurs: Bleu").

She helps him stifle his excruciating pain while he slowly begins to reflect on the course of "The check points can be anything from a tent to a gymnasium," Basaraba said. "In some of the Eskimo villages, they have community halls or gymnasiums where mushers might pass on through after having their dogs checked, or stay and get a few hours of sleep."

Veterinarians at the check points check for such problems as pneumonia, joint or muscle soreness and fatigue.

Lameness and feet problems are also common. To prevent this, the mushers protect the feet with felt or cotton booties.

Another responsibility of the veterinarians is to make sure the dogs maintain their correct body weight. The normal body weight is anywhere from 45 to 55 pounds.

"If a dog begins to lose too much weight, then that dog can be pulled from the race," Basaraba said.

Another one of the race rules is the dog breed has to be a northern one. The most common dogs in the race are the Alaskan Huskies, which are a mix of several different breeds.

"The dogs are very unique and athletic dogs. They have more endurance than any animal that I have ever worked with," Basaraba said.

Weather plays an important factor with the condition of the dogs.

"Often times the mushers will run the dogs at night when it is colder to prevent the dogs from over heating," Basaraba said.

When the sun is shining, the dogs wear vests that reflect the sunlight and heat. And when it is extremely cold and windy, they wear a nylon blanket.

Meeting native Alaskans and children has been a great opportunity for Basaraba.

"We have been asked to give talks to children at native Alaskan schools about the race and what we do," he said. "I also give a seminar at the beginning of the race on postmortem examination procedures to veterinarians who are interested in someday working at the race."

The race also allows K-State to receive national recognition.

"It helps to get K-State's name out nationally," said Ronnie Elmore, associate dean in the college of veterinary medicine. "It also helps to bring back information to students and faculty members in the department."

Basaraba got interested in the sled-dog race when he and his wife practiced veterinary medicine in Alaska.

"My wife and I are both veterinarians here, and when we graduated from vet school, we practiced a couple of years in Alaska," Basaraba said. "I got to know a lot of the people up there, and I was invited by another pathologist to help out one year, and I have gone back for three years now."

But there are some drawbacks to working the sled-dog race.

"It gets cold. I have been in temperatures 60 below with no wind chill," Basaraba said.

Eating and sleeping conditions are not very good either.

"They put you in a big room, with lots of people coming and going at all hours of the day and night," Basaraba said.

With the drawbacks, come joys and memories.

"Some of my favorite moments have been flying low in a small plane over the trail and seeing the racers below," he said.

responsibility of the personnel committee to make sure that all goals are being met by those in charge of each publication. This committee is also in charge of interviewing and selecting the editor in chief of the Collegian, editor of the Royal Purple and the advertising staff manager.

The finance committee deals mainly with the entire department's budget. The committee must review the proposed budget and set it for each annual term. This committee also addresses the financial needs of each publication in terms of equipment changes or additions.

"We don't micro-manage any of the publications. We are concerned mainly with reviewing financial and personnel issues, and to make sure every publication is meeting its specified goals. To adequately do this, it takes a total effort from the entire board," Patrick Carney, chairman of the board, said.

Because this board oversees Student Publications, it is composed mainly of students. With this year's addition of a representative from each publication, the faculty is now outnumbered. This however makes no difference since all views are weighed equally on the board, said Carol Oukrop, board member and Interim Director of the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications.

"Even though the students are the main component, the faculty positions add a great deal of expertise and knowledge," said Sarah Kallenbach, Royal Purple representative.

The amount of work done by the board varies depending on the time of year and the workload, Carney said.

"When it's fee allocation time or time to elect a new editor, that's when most of the work is put in," Oukrop said.

The board is often faced with crucial decisions that concern millions of dollars and affect many people, Kallenbach said.

Other issues addressed concern the allocation of fees to each publication and the updating of equipment.

"With such an important position to fill, each member must have a background in what's going on and be willing to learn about each issue," Kallenbach said.

'Secrets & Lies' and 'Fargo' are released by smaller film companies who don't have as much money for advertising," he said.

Many of the small-film company releases are first shown in metropolitan cities. If it does well there, it is released to a larger market, Smith said.

"I definitely don't like the fact that they are not shown here. Just because it's a small town, I don't think they should be singled out," Jay Neidi, senior in construction science, said.

Movies are chosen by a booking company based on experiences, Smith said.

"They study our grosses, and they know what films do well here," Smith said. "Our market is based more on college students and what they are looking for like action films, romantic comedies and science fiction. The others just don't have the name recognition yet."

C.W. Harper, junior in mechanical and civil engineering, said he understands the theaters' point of view.

"From a business sense it make perfect sense. That's what UPC is for, to bring the more lesser-known films to the campus," he said.

But Union Program Council seems to have its dilemmas as well.

"I think Kaleidoscope has a real problem programming for a campus that has more technical and agricultural students. We're just not liberal arts based," Stephanie Sapienza, chairwoman of the Kaleidoscope Films Committee, said.

Smith said "Shine" will begin showing next week. He said he expects "Secrets & Lies" to begin showing before March 24.

"If 'Secrets & Lies' does play here, all five Academy award nominees will have played in Manhattan," she said. "I think we've done a rather good job, because some college towns don't even play the art films."

Confronting a friend with an eating disorder

- Show concern. Let the person know you care about their health.
- Organize. Decide who will be involved, where you will confront the person, etc.
- Determine what the person will need after the confrontation.
- Face the person in an empathetic but direct manner. Don't back down to denial.
- Listen carefully.
- Offer help and suggestions.
- Negotiate another time to talk and a time span to seek professional help.
- Remember to stress that recovery takes time and the danger of not modifying behavior.

Eating disorders plague 1 in 10 people

STORY BY COLLEGIAN STAFF • ILLUSTRATION BY MATT HAWKINS

A trip to the bathroom after a meal, followed by coughing and heaving sounds.

Refusal to eat.

Ipecac, diet pills or laxatives in the bathroom cabinet.

These are all signs of someone with an eating disorder. Some K-State students suffer from eating disorders.

"Nationwide, approximately one in 10 people have an eating disorder," Dorothy Farrand, psychologist at University Counseling Services, said. "We've found that this estimate also is fairly accurate here at K-State."

While eating disorders are most common in women, men are also prone to them.

"People think that you are weird, like a sissy or something," said one 23-year-old male bulimic. "I didn't think I had a problem until a female friend pointed it out to me."

There are three main clinical definitions of eating disorders, according to "Confront," a pamphlet by Heather L. Howard.

The first is anorexia. Anorexia is a self-imposed starvation. This process is detrimental to body functions, often leading to heart problems and even death.

Bulimia is another common eating disorder often seen on college campuses. It is characterized by consuming huge quantities of food, or binging, and then ridding oneself of the food through self-induced vomiting, laxative abuse, strict fasting or excessive exercise.

Compulsive overeating is a third eating disorder.

Eating disorders have many symptoms.

Pam Lathrop, outpatient therapist at Pawnee Mental Health Center, said that eating disorders can cause gastrointestinal disorders, shrinking of organs, electrolyte imbalances, anemia, tooth decay, ruptured stomach lining, ruptured blood veins in the eyes and face, and potassium deficiencies.

There are many steps to recovery.

First, the patient's physical health is determined by medical personnel.

"Consult with a physician or someone in the medical field," she said.

If too much weight is lost, medical treatment in a hospital is required.

"Sometimes a hospital is indicated if it is severe," Lathrop said.

The next step is taking a look at other coping mechanisms, she said.

"It's just one way of coping. Some people abuse alcohol, some spend too much," Lathrop said.

Puffiness around the cheeks and calloused knuckles from sticking their fists down their throats are signs of Bulimia, Lathrop said. Going to the bathroom after eating, eating alone, changes in behavior, being more socially isolated and refusal to eat are signs of an eating disorder.

Pawnee, Lafene and University Counseling Services offer services for students with eating disorders.

Distinguished Gentleman to perform in Union

▶ Need more info? Distinguished Gentlemen will perform at 8 tonight in Union Station. The show is sponsored by Union Program Council Multicultural Committee.

HANG NGUYEN
staff reporter

K-State students can participate in a cultural and musical experience when the Union Program Council Multicultural Committee presents Distinguished Gentlemen at 8 tonight in Union Station.

Three years ago, Marc Jackson, Jeramie Kramer and Joseph Lopez met at Northwest Missouri State University to form the culturally diverse Distinguished Gentlemen. Jackson is black, Kramer is white and Lopez is Hispanic. They began performing in the college circuit two years ago.

"They are really excited about coming to a Big 12 school," Michael Johnson, Distinguished Gentlemen's manager, said. "This is their first Big 12 experience."

Discovered at the National Association of Campus Activities Conference in Colorado, they were among the 250 acts that auditioned. Distinguished Gentlemen was chosen as one of the top 10 groups of the Heart of America Region. The UPC first saw them perform at the conference last semester in Omaha, Neb.

"They're very talented," John Sandlin, UPC program adviser, said. "The delegation that went to the conference was very impressed with them. They play to the crowd very well."

Their music is a blend of pop, rock and soul with a heavy R&B influence, Johnson said.

They've sung popular tunes ranging from "No Diggity" and "My Pony" to songs from the artist formerly known as Prince. All three members also write their own lyrics.

As former college students, they know the importance of diversity on campus, Johnson said. He said campuses need to see that positively portrayed on stage instead of just talking about it.

"They stand for peace, love and unity in everything they do," Johnson said. "They have a strong message when they come to the stage. You see the cultural diversity they offer."

Distinguished Gentlemen has made regular appearances at Woody's Night Club South, one of the largest dance clubs in Kansas City, Mo.

Although the group has gotten coverage from KPRS Hot 103 Jamz in Kansas City, Mo., the members want to get more regional airtime, Johnson said.

For now, they're in the process of recording their first compact disc due for release by late summer.

Professor finds way to fight bacteria

Benefits of Steam pasteurization

- The Frigoscandia Steam Pasteurization System is a U.S.D.A.-approved antimicrobial treatment.
- System is environmentally friendly — no chemicals used in the process.
- Totally automated system — no operator errors.
- Requires less energy than hot water.
- Pressurized steam gives uniform bacterial reduction over entire carcass.

CAMI SOWERS
staff reporter

Technology is the name of the game in K-State research programs, and the latest technology out of the University deals with fighting food poisoning.

Randall Phebus, assistant professor in animal sciences and industry, is working on a new way of pasteurizing beef.

He is working with Frigoscandia of Seattle, Wash., and Cargill to develop a unit to take the sides of beef coming off of the slaughter floor and pass them through a steam tunnel.

When these two companies came to K-State about two and a half years ago, all they had was a concept, but Animal Sciences and Industy faculty, Dr. Jerry Leising, from Cargill and Craig Wilson, from Frigoscandia, came up with the idea of the steam tunnel. K-State built the first prototype and did the initial studies.

"We've barely tapped what this technology can do," Phebus said.

The steam tunnel is superior to other carcass decontamination technologies since it uses pressurized steam and is able to cover every square inch of the meat carcass and increasing the surface temperature to 185 degrees.

The meat still goes through a standard carcass wash, moves through fans to get rid of the condensation and then enters the steam tunnel.

After the meat has been steamed, it is immediately spray-chilled, dropping the temperature to prevent discoloration, and sent to the holding coolers.

Phebus

The hot water wash system, an alternate approach to steam, has two main problems, Phebus said. When the water hits the meat, the temperature has already dropped below 185 degrees, and the water doesn't cover every part uniformly. Therefore, the reduction in bacterial contamination is less.

"We do not claim to sterilize the carcass," Phebus said, "but it is the most efficient way to decontaminate carcasses."

The steam tunnel kills most pathogens, especially E. coli and Salmonella. Pathogen testing with this unit is done on a prototype in the lab only, which is termed validation studies. If the test works then the procedure can go on to the bigger commercial units.

Being very energy efficient and extremely environmentally friendly are two other advantages, but the biggest advantage involves the Hazard Analysis Critical Control Points Program.

HACCP, which is a USDA regulation, identifies the points in the process where health risks can be decreased. The only true critical point at the carcass level is a carcass decontamination system.

Each pasteurization unit has a computer monitoring system that keeps records of the surface temperature, time spent in the steam, the temperature of the steam and the cooling temperature.

There are currently six large units installed in some of the largest meat companies, including Cargill, Emmpak Foods and IBP. These units can process about 400 head of cattle per hour.

The units are located in High River, Alberta, Canada; Sterling, Colo.; Fort Morgan, Colo.; Dodge City; Milwaukee, Wis.; and Lexington, Neb. Fifty more sites have been added to the list and will be used within the next year to year and a half.

"We are working to develop a small unit that would be more of a batch type of unit," Phebus said.

A small unit was designed and installed in Ferry Brothers in Bellingham, Wash., and will be tested in March. One will also be installed at K-State soon.

Over the next several months, K-State will be working with Frigoscandia, Cargill and McDonalds to find a way to decontaminate meat closer to the grinding process.

They will also be looking at decontaminating pork in the same way.

Weather chills Fat Tuesday

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW ORLEANS— Bobby Patterson greeted Tuesday's rising sun with a cup of coffee in one hand and a beer in the other as he waited in the chilly air for the Fat Tuesday parades.

"What do I care about it being cold? I'm from Chicago. I'd be a lot colder there, and it would just be a workday," said Patterson, who was wrapped in blankets beside the St. Charles streetcar line.

Temperatures fell into the 30s Tuesday morning as Patterson and other Mardi Gras revelers camped out along parade routes.

Beginning just before sunrise, a number of traditional small marching clubs, each made up of a few dozen people and a band, marched through Uptown neighborhoods.

The most famous, Pete Fountain's Half Fast, made its traditional trek from Uptown to the French Quarter.

Tuesday's afternoon weather was expected to be sunny and in the upper 50s, an improvement from Monday's damp, gray day that chilled the crowds with temperatures in the 40s.

Harry Glidden had expected to boogie in a loincloth and Egyptian headgear on Lundi Gras, the Monday before Mardi Gras, but went for warmth instead, insulating his stocky frame with an insulated, camouflage jumpsuit.

"Cold weather has cheated a lot of women this Mardi Gras," Glidden said of his costume between dances at the Zulu Carnival club's annual festival of jazz, blues and cajun music.

"I know the women attending Mardi Gras will suffer, but my comfort accounts for something," Glidden said. "My wife may not agree, but I think it's a loss."

The French Quarter also was jammed, and the party was still building.

Police predicted more than a million people would take to the streets Tuesday, a state holiday for the glitzy parades, flashing flesh and lavish costumes.

There have been more than two dozen parades since Saturday morning, with marchers tossing beads and other trinkets to revelers.

A dozen more were under way or planned for Tuesday in New Orleans and its suburbs.

Not everyone will make it to the midnight knell, when the party ends and Ash Wednesday ushers in Lent, the 40-day Christian observance of fasting and penitence before Easter.

"I haven't been asleep in 48 hours," Aaron Rogers, who arrived Saturday from Mobile, Ala., said. Instead of staying at a hotel, Rogers partied nonstop on Bourbon Street.

On Monday, Rogers sat and shivered on a barroom stoop, his eyes bloodshot and his voice hoarse.

"It's too cold for this," he said. "I've got to go back home. I've got to sleep."

REVIEW

events that led him to his dastardly fate.

Fiennes' touching story places him in Cairo with a well-heeled group from the Royal Geographic Society mapping the Sahara Desert. He begins to become attracted to one of the member's wife, Katharine Clifton, played by Kristin Scott Thomas ("Four Weddings and a Funeral").

When Katharine's husband, Geoffrey (Colin Firth), leaves the desert in an emergency, Almasy and Katharine are thrust into their inevitable romance.

This is where the plot thickens — literally to the point where any attempt to create a synopsis of events would do no justice to the experience of the film.

Anyway, director and screenwriter Anthony Minghella, who's only other film of note is the little-seen "Truly-Madly-Deeply," has taken Michael Ondaatje's celebrated Booker Prize-winning novel and created a perfectly adapted film.

Minghella's stylistic touches — particularly the gorgeously abstracted desert scenes — give the film an image of high artiness rarely achieved without being too obvious.

Of course, Minghella could do worse with the casting. Fiennes brings his gifted talents to yet another emotionally flawed character. Surely his fans will get a good cry just to know he spends half of the movie suffering from severe facial burns.

And Binoche brings her subtle European sensibility and frustrated naivete to her tragic role of a nurse who seems to lose everything.

She has a couple tender scenes with a bomb expert, Kip (Naveen Andrews), whose sensitive job begins to define their relationship.

The real attraction is Thomas, who is on one kick after another this year, playing a less-confused version of Emma Thompson. She had a bit part in "Mission Impossible," but is fabulous in "Angels and Insects." Thomas' in-control and sexy screen presence makes her character's little screen time seem like hours.

The film rounds out with a fine supporting cast including an interesting and sympathetic Willem Dafoe, who plays Caravaggio, a visitor and eventual guest at the monastery who knows the darker, secretive circumstances surrounding Almasy.

The question we ask ourselves when the credits roll is if we know the circumstances surrounding Almasy.

"Sling Blade," with only $488,508 in earnings after nearly 11 weeks in release, was the most dramatic example of how a small film, despite its quality, can have limited box office potential with moviegoers.

"Hamlet," with four nominations, has earned $2.1 million; "Secrets & Lies," with five, $7.5 million; "Shine," seven, $16 million; and "Fargo," with seven, $22.1 million. "The English Patient," with 12, earned $42 million.

The controversial film "The People vs. Larry Flynt," about the life of the Hustler sex-magazine publisher, didn't receive a best picture citation, but director Milos Forman was nominated along with its star.

Also forgotten by the academy was Courtney Love, the rock singer and sometime actress who played Flynt's outrageous wife.

Cuba Gooding's nomination was anticipated. His performance as football player Rod Tidwell, with his exuberant cry "Show me the money!" to the sports agent played by Cruise, was a movie highlight.

Foreign language film nominees were "A Chef in Love," from the former Soviet republic of Georgia; "Kolya," the Czech Republic; "The Other Side of Sunday," Norway; "Prisoner of the Mountains," Russia; and "Ridicule," France.

In addition to best picture, director and three acting nominations, "The English Patient" received nominations for adapted screenplay, original dramatic score, cinematography, art direction, costume design, film editing and sound.

Original screenplay nominations went to Ethan and Joel Coen for "Fargo," Cameron Crowe for "Jerry Maguire," John Sayles for "Lone Star," Mike Leigh for "Secrets & Lies," and Jan Sardi and Hicks for "Shine."

Adapted screenplay nominations for scripts based on other material, went to Thornton for "Sling Blade," Arthur Miller for "The Crucible," Anthony Minghella for "The English Patient," Kenneth Branagh for "Hamlet," and John Hodge for "Trainspotting."

"That's a nice list," Hodge said. "I don't know what Kenneth Branagh feels about being nominated. I would imagine he's a bit embarrassed."

UGB continuity increases with more 2-year seats

▶ Need more info? This is the second part in a series of stories about offices available in the upcoming election March 10-12. The filing deadline for all offices is Monday. Recent amendments to the constitution of the Union Governing Board have changed the number of one- and two-year positions on the board. These changes will affect the number of positions available during the general election in March.

Originally, there would have been seven open seats.

"We recently changed the constitution to increase two-year positions and minimized the one-year terms," board member Matt Soldner said. "It's a continuity issue. We feel that because business can be slow-moving sometimes, the two-year positions have a better understanding of trends."

This year's general election will include at least three, maybe four two-year terms, he said. Two one-year positions will also be open.

"We wanted to make sure people could still get involved as one-year members," Soldner said.

Members of UGB are responsible for defining any building policies, which include tobacco sales, operating hours and food vendors for the enhancement project.

"We decide any broad policy issues," Soldner, senior in psychology, said. The board does not deal with specific issues like personnel decisions. The director's office takes care of that, he said.

UGB secretary Wendy Strevey, junior in psychology and secondary education, said UGB also must approve operating hours, the mission statement and budget issues.

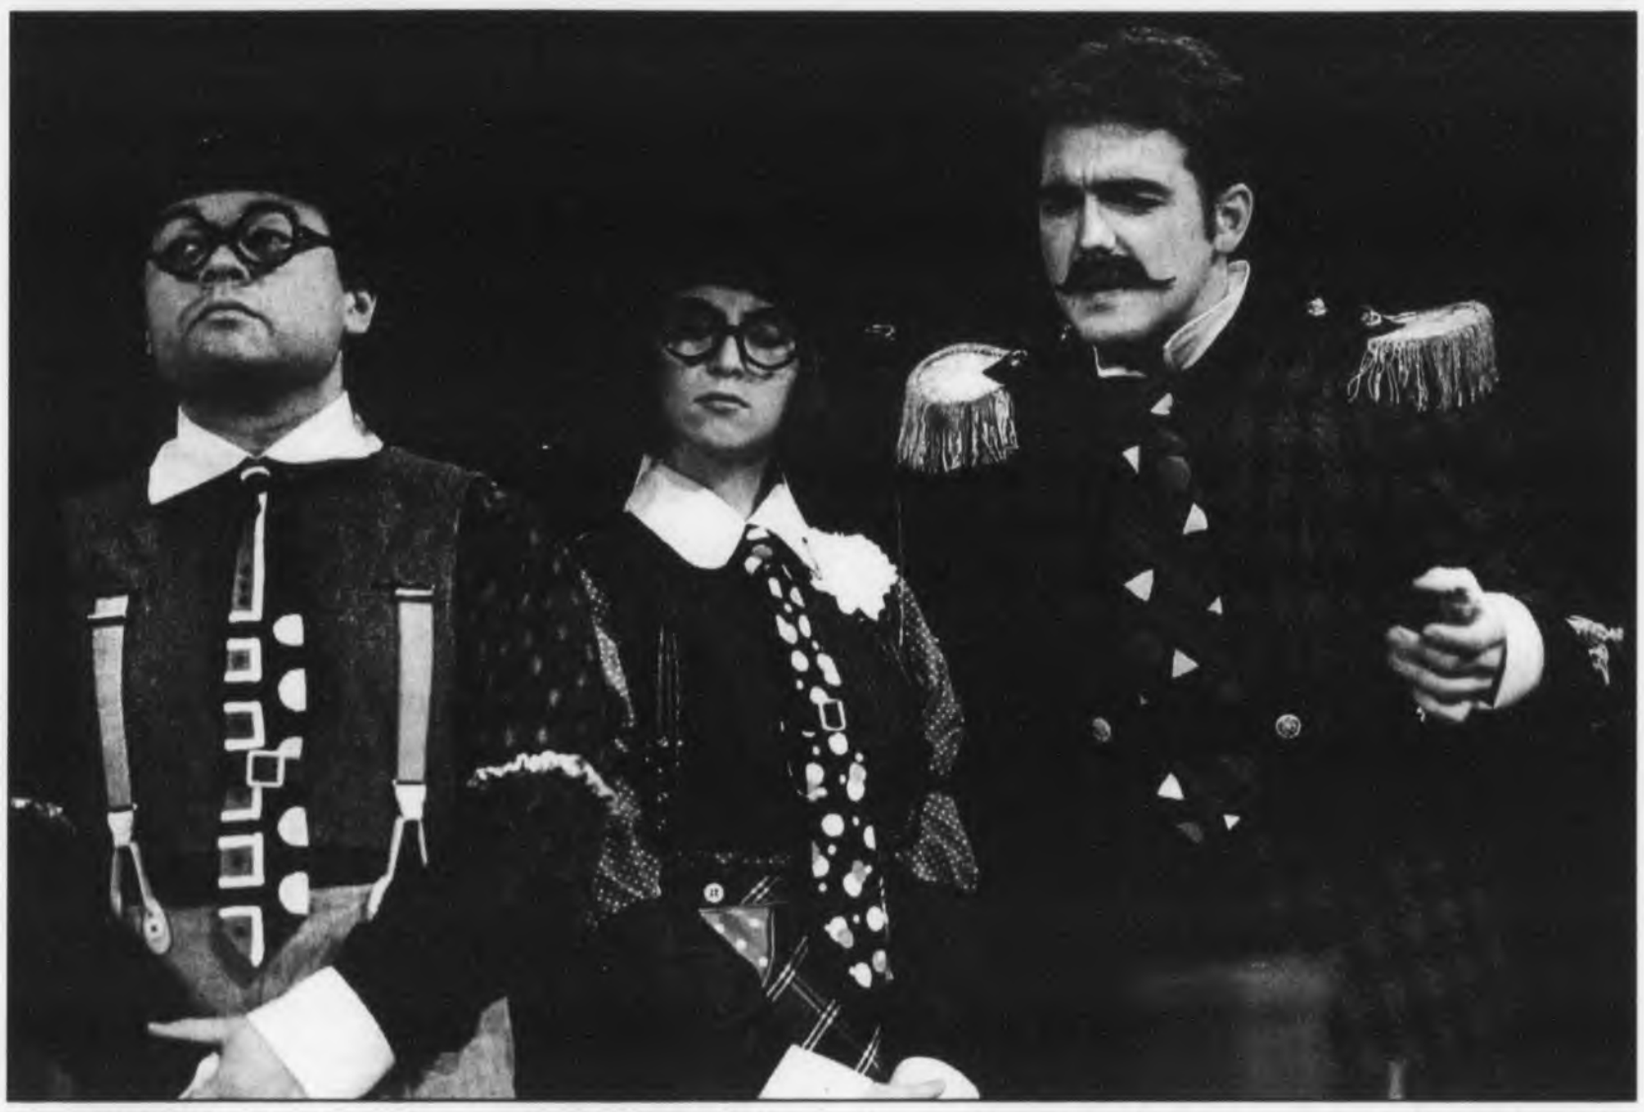
Other departments of the K-State Student Union fall under the umbrella of UGB.

"We coordinate the efforts of Union Program Council and different departments," Soldner said.

Students with a cumulative grade point average of 2.5 or better who are enrolled in at least 12 credit hours at K-State are eligible, but they must have completed at least 12 K-State hours before running. Graduate students or Veterinary Medicine students are also eligible.

Salina campus to pick new dean of technology

TRISHA LANGFORD
staff reporter



K-State-Salina will announce its choice for the position of dean of technology and aviation within the next week.

The current dean, Jack Henry, resigned last August. Henry's term will be completed July 1.

Two candidates are currently being interviewed, Chuck Reagan, executive assistant to the president, said. They are Dennis Kulhman, professor of agriculture and biological engineering, and Warren Hill, dean of technology at Weber State University in Utah.

"The search was constituted by the provost, the chief academic officer at the University," Reagan said.

The dean of technology and aviation is the chief academic officer at K-State-Salina and is responsible for personnel, budget, academic programs, fundraising and public relations.

Cutting the Red Tape
Czech satire portrays government's power

▶ Need more info? Tickets are available at McCain Box Office from noon to 5 p.m. weekdays or by calling 532-6428 during box office hours. The cost is $6 for students and senior citizens and $9 for the general public.

Bureaucracy clashes with comedy in the play "The Memorandum" at 8 p.m. Thursday in Nichols Theatre.

Written in the 1960s by Vaclav Havel, president of the Czech Republic, the play is a satire about government control, obstacles in communication and the fate of personal responsibility. It is also Havel's most widely performed play.

"This play is ultimately about the process of communication," Kate Anderson, director of the play, said. "A new language is introduced under the guise of making communication more precise, but it does just the opposite."

Set in the office of a nameless corporation, the play takes the cast on a whirlwind of endeavors.

"It's a big bureaucratic back and forth," Tyler Lansdown, freshman in theater, said. Lansdown will portray the character George.

"It becomes a big vicious circle because everything that happens just comes back again, and we really see no chance of this cycle breaking," Lansdown said.

Paige Smith, junior in theater, will play the character of Josef Gross.

Smith said the play shows how communication can contrast.

"It's a comedy about power struggle in an office complex between the old and the new," Smith said. "The characters represent two halves of one whole. One is good, the other is trying to excel at any cost."

Anderson said the play is a chance for students to see a piece of work by a respected advocate in the world today.

"It is a really unique opportunity for this campus to not only see such a good play, but it's written by a man that is both an artist and a current world leader," Anderson said. "I hope we can get audiences to come out and be engaged by this play."

sorority celebrates 84th birthday

A Founders' Day Extravaganza dinner, a speaker from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and a Way Back Wednesday bash were some of the highlights of Delta Sigma Theta sorority's Founders' Week celebration.

The black sorority's K-State chapter was founded in 1970, but Delta Sigma Theta was nationally founded Jan. 13, 1913, at Howard University. There are more than 200,000 members and alumni internationally and 12 members on campus.

Crimson and Cream Week began Feb. 8 in honor of the 22 founders and the sorority's belated 84th birthday.

On Sunday the Delta Sigma Thetas sponsored the black greek forum "Pertinent issues regarding our existence and survival as black greeks on the K-State campus"

Food, entertainment and Cornell Mayfield, the keynote speaker from the NAACP and K-State alum were included at the Founders' Day Extravaganza Tuesday evening at the Ecumenical Campus Ministry.

"(Mayfield) made us aware of what they're about and what's going on in the community and around the nation," Talishia Robins, community service chairwoman, said.

Activities continued into midweek with a Way Back Wednesday party at 8 p.m. at Union Station.

Party-goers came dressed in bell bottoms and butterfly-collared shirts from the 1960s, 1970s and 1980s.

However, Tara Turnage, president of Delta Sigma Theta, said although the sorority sponsored the party, it wanted to K-State is receiving a $500,000 Recognition Award for the Integration of Research and Education from the National Science Foundation.

Provost James R. Coffman and Dean Zollman, professor of physics, will accept the award on Feb. 21, in Washington, D.C.

Coffman and Zollman were co-investigators for the application process. Zollman is also the 1996 Professor of the Year for the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching.

"This is a rather big award for the University," Zollman said. "A number of people were involved in the projects described in the application."

• KCC ANNOUNCES NEW AREA CODE FOR NORTHERN KANSAS.

TOPEKA — The new area code for northern Kansas will be 785.

The Kansas Corporation Commission announced today assignment of that number to all of northern Kansas except the Kansas City metropolitan area on the Kansas side of the border with Missouri, which will keep the present 913 area code. The new area code takes effect at 12:01 a.m. on July 20.

• FRED GOLDMAN OFFERS TO GIVE UP MONEY FOR CONFESSION.

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — Fred Goldman offered today to give up all claims to O.J. Simpson's millions in exchange for a signed, detailed confession to be broadcast and published across the country.

Goldman is the aggrieved father who never accepted Simpson's murder acquittal 16 months ago and doggedly pursued him to civil court.

Calls left for Simpson's attorneys were not immediately returned. Messages were also not returned by Goldman attorney Daniel Petrocelli, who also stands to gain financially from the judgments.

• ARMY SEX SCANDAL SPREADS TO GERMANY, WHERE 11 WOMEN MAKE COMPLAINTS.

BONN, Germany — The U.S. Army relieved three male instructors of their duties after 11 female soldiers accused them of sexual abuse and harassment, indicating that a sex scandal in the service has spread overseas.

Two of the instructors at Darmstadt training center have been in custody since Feb. 7 after allegedly trying to influence the testimony of one woman, the Army said Wednesday.

The third suspect was ordered not to contact any victim or potential witnesses at the training center south of Frankfurt.

This is the most serious sex-abuse scandal to hit a U.S. military installation in Germany in years. At least some of the alleged acts happened after accusations of sexual misconduct surfaced at the Aberdeen Proving Ground in Maryland last November, which led to the appointment of a panel to investigate the extent of the problem in the Army.

• VIETNAM BLOCKS US-BASED RADIO FREE ASIA BROADCASTS.

HANOI, Vietnam — Accusing the United States of airwave imperialism, Vietnam said Wednesday it was blocking U.S.-based Radio Free Asia broadcasts.

The move is the latest attempt by the Hanoi government to control how the Communist country is portrayed inside and beyond its borders.

A government official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said these measures included jamming the radio signal. He didn't say when the jamming started.

Radio Free Asia, a U.S. government broadcast outlet, is aimed at promoting democracy in Asia's remaining authoritarian countries.

• SCHOOL BOARD REJECTS ADDING EBONICS TO CURRICULUM.

LOS ANGELES — The school board on Monday rejected motions to accept Ebonics as part of its curriculum after black and Hispanic groups said racism was one of the driving forces behind bringing black English to the nation's second-largest school district.

Board member Barbara Boudreaux said she was somewhat disappointed in the vote, but promised to make sure that programs in Los Angeles are expanded to help all children master standard English. Last month, Boudreaux introduced motions to train all teachers to understand Ebonics, or black English, and provide better teaching methods to help students learn mainstream English.

Her draft resolution would have made the district acknowledge Ebonics — the combination of the words ebony and phonics first coined in 1973 to describe black speech patterns — as a distinct language.

AARON OTTO, right, senior in political science, and Amy Knedlik, left, junior in accounting, announce their candidacy for student body president and vice president in the free-speech zone in front of the K-State Student Union on Wednesday afternoon.

Otto announces presidential bid

ERICA DUNCAN
staff writer

Aaron Otto and Amy Knedlik braved the 25-degree temperatures and announced their candidacy for student body president and vice president in the free-speech zone in front of the K-State Student Union Wednesday afternoon.

Otto and Knedlik stressed three main goals in their announcement speech.

They emphasized the importance of campus safety and the necessity to increase campus lighting, security cameras and the movement of the campus escort service to Farrell Library.

Knedlik said K-State was ranked second in the Big 12 in campus security, and their goal is to move into first.

She also said the move to Farrell would make the Wildcat Walk Escort Service more accessible and cut down on response times.

"It's a great service that is underutilized," Knedlik said.

Otto and Knedlik also stressed the importance of improving the methods of evaluating instructors. With the improvement, teacher evaluations would be made public to students.

The candidates' third proposal is to improve the technology and equipment in the classrooms.

Any money raised by students will be matched by state legislation, Otto said.

"I think Aaron and Amy have a lot of experience in student government and I look forward to seeing them in office," Kimberly Peschka, freshman in chemistry, said.

Otto and Knedlik have set their goals high, so even if they don't achieve their entire goal, they will have at least accomplished something, Ryan Laudermilk, junior in pre-medicine and Spanish, said.

"The higher the goals, the more we'll achieve," he said.

Otto's experience as vice president should help his transition into the presidency, Laudermilk said.

"Their goals are very realistic. They have enough experience and know what can be done in a year," Ashley Youle, junior in public relations, said.

Knedlik has been in Student Governing Association since she was a freshman, and Otto said he feels she has very good experience.

Elections will be held March 10, 11 and 12, instead of after spring break as in the past.

Greek roles reversed; sororities to bid men

CHRISTINA SMITH
staff reporter

For years, sorority women have waited around for fraternity men to come over and bid them for social functions. Times have changed.

"The girls are having a lot of fun," Keri Adams, Alpha Xi Delta social chair, said.

Sorority women are having all this fun because it is the first time they have bid the fraternity men for functions.

Traditionally, the fraternities bid sororities for functions in the fall and the spring.

"This semester, we wanted to take some of the pressure off of the guys by having the girls bid them," Kristen Mehan, Panhellenic Council secretary, said.

The idea was first brought up last semester by Panhellenic Council. Before the change could officially be made, sororities had to vote on it. Once a majority of the sororities had agreed, the council made its final decision.

"This is the first semester, so it's a trial run. Next year we can take suggestions and fix what didn't go well this year," Mehan said.

So far the response has been mostly positive.

The women will finish bidding for men today, Barb Robel, advisor for greek affairs, said.

The bidding process involves preparing skits and musical pieces to perform, offering rides to class, bringing donuts for breakfast and coming up with other creative ideas.

"In the past, the guys have had to do it," Adams said.

Now the pressure is on the girls to come up with some creative ideas.

The men say they are enjoying all of the attention and think it is nice to have the women share the work load.

"It should be both the guys' and the girls' job to do the work," said Tim Riemann, vice president of external affairs for Inter-Fraternity Council.

Some fraternities do not bid certain sororities because of uncertainty, members said.

"We always go beg the girls and wait for the response. We just don't know what they think," said Grant Willcott, sophomore in criminology and a Kappa Sigma member.

The fraternity members just do not know who likes them and who appreciates them.

"We always show our appreciation, it's nice to have the girls show us theirs," Willcott said.

Sigma Sigma Sigma was reinstalled as a chapter in January. Jennfier Holt, social chair for Tri Sigma, said this is a great opportunity to introduce themselves to the fraternity system.

"It has given us the opportunity to get out and meet people," she said.

The change has also had positive effects on other houses.

"It has made us pull together, and everyone is on a high. We are just looking for a good outcome," Jami Nelson, social chair for Kappa Alpha Theta, said.

Dole associate files suit

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A woman has filed a lawsuit claiming she was defamed by a radio talk show host's comment that she had an abortion after an affair with Bob Dole in the early 1970s.

Phyllis Wells Smith of Overland Park, Kan., sued Bonneville International Corp., owner of KMBZ radio. Her lawsuit alleges that in a Sept. 26 broadcast of the "Friendly Fire" talk show, host Steve Glorioso said Dole had an affair with a woman named Phyllis Wells in the early 1970s.

The lawsuit, filed Jan. 30 in Jackson County Circuit Court, said the remark came as Glorioso, a liberal commentator and publisher of a local alternative weekly, The New Times, discussed Dole, the 1996 Republican presidential nominee and former Kansas senator.

The suit quoted him as saying, in part: "It's right here in Kansas City, that he had an affair that was well-known with another woman named Phyllis Wells. She got pregnant ... had an abortion."

A lawyer for Wells, James Frickleton, said Wells and Dole did have a public relationship in the early 1970s when they were both single.

He said she did not become pregnant by Dole.

A GUIDE TO SECTIONS OF THE COLLEGIAN OPINION PAGE

▶ COLUMNS are opinions expressed by the columnists. The opinions are not necessarily the opinions of the Collegian.

OUR VIEW is an editorial written by the Collegian Editorial Board. The board meets every day and discusses editorial topics. The editorial is a compilation of those opinions and represents the opinion of the Collegian.

Candidacy requires serious consideration

Student elections are beginning a little early this year, so students planning to run for office need to be prepared to run their campaigns.

Last year the elections were not over until the middle of April, but this year the elections will be complete before spring break.

Although the earlier elections might have some students who plan to run for office wishing for more time, the filing deadline is Monday and students who plan to run for elections should be prepared to take a commitment to Student Governing Association seriously.

Students running for SGA should understand the issues that face Student Senate. Knowing the issues provides a candidate with the necessary background information to run a successful campaign.

Also, first-term candidates who are elected will have a smoother transition into the Senate's legislative process. Belonging to SGA is a responsibility, not a social club.

It's all right to have high expectations about what you can accomplish. After all, you should feel that your voice counts. But be sure to set attainable goals, as well. Make your voice count.

Pay attention to how the system is set up and how it operates. Students running for SGA who have not run before should research how SGA's legislative process functions.

Candidates should also have a feel for students' needs and feelings. The issues that appear in front of SGA are important to K-State and affect many daily operations of our University.

Follow criteria for the election. There are many guidelines that need to be followed. There are also rules about campaign fliers, posters and chalking the sidewalks. Be aware of the rules before planning a campaign strategy.

Finding a way to reach fellow students in a responsible manner reflects the excellence our University has been able to establish.

MATT HAWKINS/Collegian

America is a member of a worldwide fraternity which has no name. Membership requires economic and military strength, as well as an ability to use said characteristics. This fraternity does not exert direct control over the world; however, the actions of its members are felt by nearly every nation, setting precedents for weaker countries to follow.

Leadership necessitates assertiveness. Just as an aggressive standpoint means process for one group, it means the downfall of another group of people. To see a result of America's foreign policies, or that of another nation, one does not need to read a history book: it can be seen in the world today.

Last week America had another incident in Okinawa, where the United States has a military presence. A little over a year ago, the U.S. military fired radioactive bullets in a training exercise at Tori Shima gunnery range; the bullets themselves are compressed uranium, used for the purpose of piercing heavy armor on vehicles.

While the rounds are harmful only when ingested, the Japanese government, which controls the island, recently discovered what had happened. The Japanese expressed dismay over U.S. failure to bring this incident to light when it occurred. Accordingly, the U.S. military then expressed regret over the issue. Oops.

On the other side of the globe, England and Ireland had another disagreement. A nuclear power plant which powers part of England needs a place to dump its toxic waste. A site has been selected in Cumbria, on the shore which faces Ireland; the Irish don't want it there, because the waste could wash across the sea, contaminating their shoreline.

Their fears of carelessness seem well-founded. Six workers at the actual plant have been contaminated with radiation. If a plant has such lax safety standards at its facility, then one might expect that its waste grounds meet the same standards.

The message both of these events broadcast is a disrespect for people negatively affected by a larger country's actions. The Okinawan people don't want the United States in their country at all, especially after last year's incident of servicemen abducting and raping a local girl. The latest development only gives them further reason for anti-U.S. sentiments.

Despite their protest, the reigning Japanese interests, as well as our own interests, keep us in Okinawa.

It would seem that citizens of weaker countries don't count. If we can fire radioactive bullets at a test range, and if British energy interests decide to dispose of nuclear waste near a body of water with the possible result being the contamination of another country, then logic would follow that both countries don't seem to care what the end result of their actions are.

A form of colonialism is still being practiced in the world, its agents being special interests, money and military muscle. The time for such a practice must end: if a people don't want foreign influence in their land, or if they want to keep the shores of their country clean, then their wishes should be respected.

The ways of the past cannot be the ways of the present or future. Just because we have a military presence in another country, or the British need power, does not mean that any liberty may be taken to achieve an end goal.

As the world becomes smaller, relationships based on mutual respect must be formed. They will not be created through force, but through understanding.

Ingenuity, thoughtfulness might make St. Valentine's Day successful

It's that time of the year again. Hearts hang in store windows, sappy songs flood the airwaves and florists work overtime. You know what I'm talking about. Friday is St. Valentine's Day.

This has become a rather traumatic event in my life, and I know that I am not alone. St. Valentine and I have a love/hate relationship. Part of me embraces this holiday as if I owned Hallmark. But the other half of me snubs Cupid like Dr. Seuss' Grinch.

No one can plead forgetfulness when it comes to celebrating this day of love. Merchants bombard us with paraphernalia immediately following the removal of the "after Christmas sale" signs.

The little girl in me walks zombie-like up and down these aisles of red and pink. My eyes are glazed over as I study the heart-shaped boxes of candies and fuzzy teddy bears.

The mounds of chocolate delights and bunches of heart doilies remind me of those days when a simple card sporting Barbie or a cute animal would get me as giddy as most kids on Christmas Eve.

But soon my delight is dashed by the realist that occupies my inner self. It's this cynical attitude that makes me sing, "Why do fools fall in love?"

My dark side is fed by seeing lovesick fools scrambling to the florist, carrying stuffed animals that can't fit in most cars and sealing cards with real lipstick kisses.

You know who you are. You have been plotting activities for this day longer than Hitler plotted the invasion of Poland. You have been known to purchase gifts from all of the three major Valentine's groups: flowers, candy and cards. And the only dignity you have left was destroyed by that droopy, awe-struck look in your eyes.

All joking aside, I feel for you Love Day Loyalists. Serious celebrating of this holiday can be difficult. Pleasuring your significant other in the true spirit of Valentine's Day is hard work. If not done correctly, this merry-making can leave you exhausted, penniless and single.

Since couple activities don't muddle my schedule, I thought I'd assist you in your romantic strategies. Before I proceed, I must warn you, I cannot guarantee the results of these tactics. Please use them at your own discretion. But I can say, I ran a few by Cupid, and he seemed pretty certain they were heart-winning moves.

OK, let's get the obvious out of the way. Flowers. They are traditional, but also a nice touch. This year try to mix things up a little. Any idiot can send a dozen red roses. Be different. Try sending one rose each hour for twelve hours.

Red roses symbolize love, but other colors can be racy and striking. Personally, I prefer purple roses, but that is just me.

If you're really feeling on the edge, skip the roses. Go for fresh flowers or something more exotic. This dramatic move may really score some points.

Valentine's Day is on Friday this year, so there is really no excuse to skip the traditional heart-day feast. But the trick is to disguise the traditional aspect of this meal.

Unlike University of Kansas students, we all have the brain power to make dinner reservations at our favorite restaurant, but remember we are out to woo this holiday season.

What better way to do this than by boasting your culinary expertise? Cooking the meal leaves our options wide open.

This could mean a several-course meal accentuated by cloth napkins and table cloth, fresh flowers and lots of candles. If you don't have a kitchen table, throw a blanket on the floor and have a candle-lit picnic. The personal touch will go miles.

The element of this holiday that can leave the most passionate of partners stumped centers around the exchange of gifts. There are no laws that regulate the necessity or magnitude of Valentine presents, so this can be a little sticky and require some crafty planning.

Be sure not to level jump. If you've only been dating for two weeks, don't shower your sweetheart with expensive gifts. On the other hand, if you are involved in a serious relationship, don't bypass this holiday.

When it comes to tokens of love, I'm a sentimental disaster. I'll admit it, I'm a softy. Gifts dripping with personality and meaning have the ability to tug at anyone's heart.

Frame a picture of the two of you. Write a poem or love letter. Leave a note on the windshield of your honey's vehicle. Sneak into your partner's room and decorate it for Valentine's Day with paper hearts and ribbons.

Pets make nice gifts and will serve as a constant reminder of you. Take a road trip. Re-enact your first date. Start a tradition that will be fun on every Valentine's Day. Place a personal ad. Slow dance.

You get the idea. Mentally dig deep.

Happy Valentine's Day, good luck and, in the words of Jerry Seinfeld, "remember that 95 percent of people are undateable."

• COLLEGIAN MISTAKES INTEREST IN COMMUNITY FOR NEGLECT OF STUDENTS

Editor's Note — Prior to this, the Collegian has printed stories and columns that were supportive of the existence of a new outlet for art in Manhattan. No attacks have been made on the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art.

Editor,

For months I have been reading attacks on the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art. I tried to let it go when it was attacked in the opinion columns (we all have our opinion).

But, now that the collective editorial board has launched an assault, I must come to the art museum's defense. I feel that the statement that "... students weren't invited ... " to the art museum is erroneous, and I will attempt to defend my view point for point.

"The museum needs to get students involved." It has! It is called the Beach Bums. The Beach Bums are a student support and activity group of the Beach art museum. It has a low, yearly membership fee of $10 which includes a quarterly newsletter, 10-percent discount at the museum gift shop, and access to special lectures, tours, workshops and artist visits.

The fee also covers the cost of running and organizing the group. However, since its inception in October 1996, there are only 17 fee-paying members. Flyers, articles in the Collegian and forms at the museum information desk are used to promote the group.

Still, with a fair amount of publicity, student participation in the group is lacking. Yet, the art museum still offers at least one student-only activity per month.

Some concern was voiced about the art museum not being an outlet for student art.

That would be nice, except that the art museum doesn't have enough room with its revolving permanent collection and national touring shows. Pair that with the fact that the art museum was never intended to house student art (at least not until you become rich and famous).

At the time of its planning, building and opening, the University had adequate space available for the student shows, the fact that that has changed is not the fault of the art museum.

Next, there was something about the location being remote and that a central location would have been more useful. Well, where would you have them build it? Should we rip out a 100-year-old building? No. Is central campus easy for the public to access? No. Can people drive by and see the Beach art museum in the middle of campus, thus creating public awareness? No.

Finally, we must remember that this is not K-State's art museum — this is Manhattan's art museum.

Many of the events are geared to the general public (which, believe it or not, includes students), but there are also special events just for students.

While one may say that only one event a month is a bit thin — this is only because the student interest isn't there.

Trust me, the Education Coordinator of the art museum and the Beach Bums have dozens of ideas, they just lack the support and interest needed to plan them. The art museum is involved with the students, the students just aren't involved with the Beach art museum.

junior in computer graphic design and painting

P.S. My letter would not be necessary if the editorial board would have spent five minutes on the phone with the art museum.

• SCIENTOLOGISTS NEED TO ADHERE TO LAWS

Editor,

Justin Wild's column about the so-called persecution of the Church of Scientology drew an analogy between the current German government and Hitler's Germany that, I think, is not supported by the facts.

First, it is always easy to use such a comparison in order to demonize somebody, but haven't we had enough world leaders being compared to Hitler already?

A little restraint in such name calling might make for a less colorful point making, but it does shift the weight of the argument away from preconceived notions to actual facts.

Second, such an assertion is not supported when one considers that other European countries, such as Greece and Italy, have also had legal disputes with Scientology.

Moreover, these disputes have been caused not by religious intolerance, but by Scientology's financial dealings, which do not comply with its role as a religious non-profit organization.

Scientology might be a religion with some big name followers, but it does have to pay for violating the law just like anybody else would.

DEBBIE HORTIN, of Manhattan, fills out a sandwich order Wednesday afternoon in Java Espresso and Bakery.

JAVA BREWS EXCITEMENT

REVIEW BY D. SCOTT FRITCHEN • PHOTOS BY CLIF PALMBERG

When Java Espresso and Bakery reopened its doors in Aggieville Aug. 15, 1996, customers didn't know what to expect.

The old yellow walls were a deep hunter green, while the aroma of Metropolitan espresso beans was discarded for the distinct smell of Laurentis and the symphony of classical music was replaced by the warm tenor of jazz and the deep bellow of blues.

Manager Mark Skochdopole said he knew after five years in the restaurant business in Chicago that it takes more than pretty walls to maintain loyal customers.

Java was reputable when its previous owners closed down at the end of May, but he understands that with a similar coffee shop around the corner and another starting up soon, it takes more than a good caffe latte to keep visitors coming back.

"Customers are like family," Robert Sanchez, an employee, said.

As one of two carry-over employees from previous management, Sanchez said he has noticed the younger crowd that now occupies Java during the evenings. He said he knows customers by name on their second visit, but with the variance in coffees and beverages, he still can't predict what they will order.

How could he? There are five different fresh-brewed coffees. Above the Cappuccino maker sit 50 different flavored syrups. And cappuccinos are just the beginning of an extensive collection of coffees employees create.

Besides the list of coffees on the overhanging chalk-printed menu, including an impressive Espresso Joe that contains double espresso with a touch of half-and-half and sugar, is a list of 11 additional house specials for those who like to experiment with their blends.

Is the coffee good?

"If it wasn't, you wouldn't see me in here often," said Ali Kanso, assistant professor in journalism and mass communications.

Kanso said he comes to Java to get away from work, writing and studying.

"They seem to care about customers here," Kanso said. "That's very important."

Java is a bakery with its oven and trays of fresh-baked goods demanding attention in the corner of the shop. A bagel or a muffin is a great compliment, but more popular is the biscotti, a long bread stick to dip into your favorite coffee.

Customers often buy a loaf of bread and make sandwiches for a week.

Even before the sun rises, one of two employees, Mark Bramhall or Jamie Wolff, will clock in at 5 a.m. to bake muffins, cookies, turnovers and cinnamon rolls.

As the sun creeps into view, Stephen Howard begins to brew coffee.

Business people, retired couples and K-State professors and students sit sipping mochas and reading one of four daily newspapers.

When dusk falls, tables are often a scarce commodity among the K-State students who swarm early to claim their study territory.

Despite large numbers, students prefer Java's surroundings to those of a dorm room or campus building.

"It's a pretty diverse crowd," Jeff Stugelman, Java employee, said. "It's your average college student who needs to study at night."

"It's got a good atmosphere," Tara Endacott, senior in general human ecology, said. "I can get away from my apartment and everyone. I like their coffee and music."

Sanchez said Java offered live music twice since it reopened. Both acoustic concerts helped business skyrocket. Perhaps this may add another dimension to the coffee shop that isn't only known for its coffee.

Win propels Cats one step higher in Big 12

The women's basketball team climbed another rung on the ladder to the top of the Big 12 Wednesday night. The Wildcats clawed their way to a 47-45 victory over No. 23 Nebraska at Bramlage Coliseum.

Once again, the Cats looked to their defense to obtain the win.

"This was a great win for us," Coach Deb Patterson said. "This Nebraska team is very good and very dangerous. We played great defense tonight, and it got us a win."

The first Husker score came at the 14:19 mark, after guard Missy Decker fouled guard Anna DeForge. DeForge, a 72-percent free-throw shooter, sunk the back half of her two shots and went on to hit five of six from the charity stripe.

"DeForge is not a player I like to foul," Patterson said. "The team knows that now."

After a basket by Husker guard LaToya Doage at 12:39, the Huskers were scoreless for three long minutes. They responded by hitting a seven-point streak, led by Doage, and tied the game at 10 with eight minutes left in the half.

"Nebraska kept playing Kayla (Hester, center) so we couldn't reverse," forward Andria Jones said. "Reversing the ball's something we like to do, and we had to make some adjustments."

The Huskers took the lead at the 7:30 mark, when forward Charlie Rogers put up a shot to put them ahead by two. She then fouled center Angie Finkes, the Huskers' first team foul of the game. Finkes hit her second shot, and the Cats were down by one.

Center Nicky Ramage soon scored off a back-door layup, but forward Tina McClain scored on their next possession. Once again down by three, Decker again stepped up. With 22 seconds on the game clock, Decker got off a successful three-point shot. The Cats went into the locker room tied at 20.

"Nebraska is the type of team that, when the game is tied, they will take the aggressive shot," Patterson said. "We tried not to give that look while they were in rhythm."

For the first six minutes of the game, neither team was up by more than three. Hester fouled DeForge while shooting, and DeForge converted her free throw to make it a three-point play. Free throws turned out to be the only place DeForge was effective, and she went seven of 22 from the field.

"We have a great deal of respect for the player Anna DeForge is," Patterson said. "It was significant not to let her get into a rhythm."

With seven minutes gone, Jones stole the ball and got it to Decker, who in turn passed it to forward Jenny Coalson. Coalson sunk a 22-foot jumper on the right side to put the Cats within one again.

"That shot by Jenny was a great call by Coach (Kamie) Ethridge," Patterson said.

Versatile defense creates upset win over Huskers

SHANE MCCORMICK
sports writer

K-State's 47-45 victory over Nebraska can best be summed up by senior guard Missy Decker: "Definitely, defense wins ball games in the Big 12. I believe that was true all the way till the end tonight."

From the tipoff, the Cat zone defense stifled the Cornhusker offensive attack. More than seven minutes into the game, the Cats hadn't allowed one Husker field goal. In that span, the Cats forced three turnovers, while outscoring the Huskers eight to one.

Throughout the half, the Cats gave the Huskers different looks in the zone defense. The result was 11 halftime turnovers, 30.4 percent shooting from the field and just 20 points for the Huskers.

"We had success because of the defensive versatility we possess. We gave them four different looks in the zone defense," Cat coach Deb Patterson said. "It was tough for them to adjust to, it was hard for them to find a rhythm offensively."

Another big key for the Cats was holding Husker forward Anna DeForge to just one of seven from the field and five halftime points. DeForge came into the contest averaging more than 16 points a game.

"It was really significant that we didn't let her get into a rhythm. Being in the zone didn't give her a lot of good looks," Patterson said.

In the second half, the Cat defense continued their zone defense, forcing 12 turnovers. Senior forward Andria Jones led the way, recording six steals. Jones finished the game with a career-high eight steals.

It was in the game's final eight seconds that the Cats came up with their biggest stop.

Holding on to a two-point lead, the Cats switched to a man-to-man defense. The scheme worked, as the Huskers

Center fielder re-signs with NY Yankees

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Bernie Williams and the New York Yankees gave up for now on their attempt to negotiate a multi-year contract, agreeing Wednesday to a one-year deal worth $5.25 million.

Williams, the most valuable player of the AL championship series, had been seeking a two-year deal for about $13 million. He is eligible for free agency following the 1998 season, and said he would agree to a long-term deal only if it runs through 2003, a total of six years.

"To get a commitment long-term, it's going to take a substantial offer," said Williams' agent, Scott Boras. "Two or three or four won't be something he's interested in. He either wants to make New York his long-term home or take it year by year."

Boras said he expected talks for an extension might start next week.

"We've only had some initial discussions about a contract of that stature," Boras said. "There's a lot to that because of the luxury tax, so it's complicated."

The 28-year-old outfielder had beaten the Yankees in arbitration last winter, getting a raise from $400,000 to $3 million. New York had offered $2,555,000.

While some baseball lawyers expected him to file at $6 million or more this winter, Williams asked for $5.35 million, just $350,000 more than the Yankees' offer.

Yankees general manager Bob Watson made the offer Tuesday night after Boras arrived in Tampa, Fla., for arbitration hearings. Williams' case had been scheduled for Feb. 19.

As part of the contract, Williams will get a $50,000 bonus for making the AL all-Star team. It should not be hard for him to impress AL manager Joe Torre, also manager of the Yankees.

"They made an offer that resolved any need for arbitration," Boras said. "Bernie just wanted to make sure the dialogue was going to continue as to a long-term relationship with the Yankees."

Williams hit .305 last season and established career highs with 29 homers, 102 RBIs and 108 runs scored. He excelled against Baltimore in the AL playoffs, going 9-for-19 in five games with two homers and six RBIs.

In 15 postseason games, he hit .345 (20 for 48) with six homers and 15 RBIs.

Boras said Williams wasn't set on becoming a free agent after the 1998 season. If he puts up similar numbers in the next two seasons, he probably would command $10 million a year or more.

"There are places other than New York that Bernie would consider, but he's happy in New York, too," Boras said.

Reliever David Weathers is the last Yankee remaining in arbitration. He asked for a raise from $225,000 to $537,500, while the team is offered $375,000.

Costumed pride-pumpers inject life into world of college hoops

VIEWPOINT

JON BALMER
JON BALMER is a freshman in pre-journalism and mass communications. You can e-mail your comments to Jon at (jkb2004@ksu.edu).

Sitting on a stone cold bench, your motivation begins to center in on the task at hand. Beads of sweat mingle on your forehead, creating a slow, vertical stream of emotionally charged juice. Running through your mission one last time, you pause momentarily to focus, then dive head first into the ensuing madness.

Could this be the state of mind Aaron Swartzendruber faces before each tipoff? Perhaps it's the thought flow of a Todd Stewart-seeking Manny Dies? No, my Manhattan marauders, it's simply the mental recreation of what college mascots across the nation face game after game.

But where is the glory these costume-clad cohorts so rightly deserve? Usually, it rests buried beneath the suffocating praise bestowed upon the players and coaches. Well, it's about time to turn the spotlight onto these oversized pride-pumpers and acknowledge their continual support to the world of college hoops.

Unknown to most plains people, Kansas is overflowing in collegiate mascot activity. Our own Willie the Wildcat stands out vividly as an ambassador of purple pride every time you enter Bramlage Coliseum. For Willie, anytime is a good time to crowd surf, and halftime merely signifies the start of his funky show.

One night he may choose to exhibit his shooting skills from way downtown (a tough task for anyone wearing an oversized mask), while another evening may feature his dance hall display of moves to the flow of "Wabash Cannonball." You never know what to expect in Willie's world.

Beyond Bramlage, the Sunflower state features other mascots bent on adding their share to the round-ball revelry. A creature known only as "the Gorilla" claims the campus of Pittsburg State as his stomping grounds, and every sporting event provides the chance to look in on this Zubaz-clad beast and his super-charged antics.

The Gorilla has been known to seize visiting band members and carry them off to his "jungle," and his cheerleader-tossing activities are legendary in southern Kansas. The furry mascot is a fixture of the school, and no trip to P-Town is complete without a viewing of the ultimate banana-chugging beast.

Another area mascot that makes a case is the University of Missouri-Kansas City's Kasey the Kangaroo. Although not very life-like in appearance, you can't knock a guy pacing the court in a pair of Roos (the legendary 1980s shoe) and over-sized tail.

If you think area schools feature the only worthwhile display of sideline activity, think again. Within the Big 12 Conference alone, several universities offer worthwhile mascots that help make college basketball an aura of its own.

Along with the recent influx of four Texas schools into the Big 12 pot came a plethora of Lone Star state mascots. While Bevo the Longhorn and the infamous Red Raider put up an argument, Baylor's Bob the Bear seems to be the cream of the Texas crop.

This giant Teddy Ruxpin clone goes to town on visiting mascots, usually giving them a taste of "the Bear Claw," his own specialized swat that leaves the visitor down for the count. When not slapping, Bob struts around Baylor's Ferrell Center enticing the crowd and doing the Bear dance. With a pocket full of antics and a creative spirit, Bob the Bear works it overtime for the Waco faithful.

This rundown of mascot activity is only the tip of the iceberg. Within the confines of each college, there undoubtedly lurks a suited-up individual ready to dazzle the crowd.

So next time you visit Bramlage or turn on the tube to enjoy hoop hysteria, take a moment to acknowledge these feisty figures and their accompanying sideshow. They may just be the next famous chicken.

DESTROYED CREDIT
Credit counselors help fix bad records

STORY BY CORI HERBERS

The ATM spits out a card and a statement that says insufficient funds. The bank sends a statement that shows a check bounced. Creditors are calling on the phone, and the rent check is late.

Students have options, even when they don't have money.

Consumer Credit Counseling is a division of Housing and Credit Counseling and is a private, non-profit community service agency for people who need help with money problems.

"CCC was formed to educate people to become more aware of their financial situation," Susie Thompson, senior credit counselor of Topeka CCC, said. "Education is our main focus and then we try to help people with budgeting and debt repayment to creditors."

The majority of the clients with CCC are people who had to deal with life changes.

"Death, divorce and medical illness are some life changes that throw people into tail spins," Thompson said. "By the time the clients come in and visit with us, they already have delinquent payments, judgments and collection accounts already on the credit report."

Regardless of income or debt load, anyone can join the CCC program.

"The only requirement is you have enough income in order to cover living expenses and payment to the creditors," Thompson said. "We have to figure a way to cover living expenses first and then determine what the client has left over to use toward debt repayment."

Once a client is on the CCC program all credit cards must be destroyed and no new debt must be obtained.

"We make the clients cut up their cards in front of us," Thompson said. "Then proposal letters are sent to creditors proposing certain payments regarding their income status.

"Visa, Mastercard and Discover all have certain guidelines that have to be met and most finance charges will be reduced or waived depending on the national creditor."

When people have problems paying their minimum balance on credit cards, some choose to take out a loan and try to consolidate their cards.

Marilyn Van Norton, loan officer with First State Bank, said it's hard for students to qualify for this type of loan.

"Most banks require some type of collateral," Van Norton said. "If you are $25,000 in debt and want to consolidate that amount, then you need $25,000 in collateral," she said. "We can't take household goods but if you have a vehicle, savings or cattle, then that's the type of collateral we look for."

Students use their credit cards for necessities and entertainment.

"I have a credit card to charge my plane tickets," Staci Busch, senior in accounting, said. "I'm from Las Vegas and couldn't get home without my card.

"Having a credit card is a privilege. You just have to be responsible when you use it and try to pay off the balance at the end of the month."

Consumer Credit Counseling has four locations in Kansas: Topeka, Lawrence, Emporia and Manhattan. For more information on CCC in your area, call 539-6666.

Insteps release debut Jamaican ska album

▶ Listen to it on the E- Collegian. Insteps' album "Eleven Steps to Power" can be found online at (http://collegian.ksu.edu). Tracks one and six are featured.

PHIL KELLUM
staff writer

Review Music

After wowing audiences for years, the Insteps, from New York City, has finally issued its debut album, "Eleven Steps To Power" from Another Planet Records.

From the vintage Blue Note Records-esque cover art to the list of impressive guest stars in the liner notes, people will know they are in for quite a treat.

It is an upbeat, jazzy, soulful, traditional ska affair from beginning to end, yet the band manages to inject its own style into the music as well.

The band managed to attract two legends from the original wave of Jamaican ska of the 1960s to appear on the album.

Glen Adams, from the Upsetters, plays organ on half the songs and also co-produced the album. The Upsetters were eccentric Jamaican producer Lee "Scratch" Perry's house band in the '60s.

King Stitt, one of the original Jamaican DJs and toasters, appears on two tracks: "The Dragon" and "The Goat." His distinctive vocal delivery adds authentic flavor to the tunes.

Stitt's vocals were recorded onto the tapes after Adams and original Studio One producer Coxsone Dodd, both longtime friends of Stitt, contacted him. They then shipped the backing tracks via Federal Express to him in Kingston, Jamaica. He recorded the vocals and then sent them back to New York.

This album should finally give the members of the Insteps the recognition and exposure that they so rightly deserve, after appearing on such compilations as "Oi!/Skampilation Volume 1" and "Ska: The Third Wave," as well as a 7-inch single on Stubborn Records.

Their song, "Shotgun Jimmy," from "Ska: The Third Wave," is what got them their record deal with Another Planet. It also exposed ska fans the world over to what they were about. But the band dismisses the song as a terrible ripoff of New York ska band, the Toasters. To this day, they will not play it in concert, because they haven't taught their bassist Sheldon Gregg to play it.

The Insteps has shared the stage with original Jamaican ska kings, the Skatalites, as well as the current new jacks of the genre, the Pietasters and the Slackers, among others.

While most ska bands in the scene today sing about such topics as drinking beer and chasing girls, the Insteps sing about real-life situations and experiences, like how joining together in brotherhood will defeat the selfishness of others.

But don't let the meaningful, thoughtful lyrics discourage you from moving your feet to the beat. The band members want you to dance the night away.

Their lyrics are very spiritual, but not overly religious. Much in the way that reggae bands mention Jah as a spiritual guide, the Insteps mention both Jah and God.

Everything on this album shines, from the horn work to the guitars to the vocals. Nothing is left out of the mix or sounds sub-standard.

Vocalists Peter Loshak and Noah Roy's voices sound fantastic when placed on top of the skanking, moving backbeat. Their harmonies should be envied by most choirs.

The highlight of the album is the song "Every Slacker Is A Star," which is about succeeding even when those around you think you aren't going to. I guarantee the chorus to this song will be running through your head for hours on end.

Also, "Always Remember" has a great intro that is very Latin jazz-sounding that draws you in and makes you dance.

It is a refreshing break from all the ska-punk and pseudo-ska that is getting all the exposure nowadays.

In a time when ska music is gaining in popularity and publicity, the Insteps plan on keeping it real and focused.

The Insteps utilize the vibe and feel of the original Jamaican ska to create its own brand of ska, yet still keep it true to the roots of the music.

If you are a fan of bands like the Skatalites, Toots and the Maytals, the Slackers or Stubborn All-Stars, pick up the Insteps.

Red Cross plans spring blood drive

Tips to consider if giving blood.
Donors must be at least 17-years-old, weigh a minimum of 110 pounds and in good health. Eat regular meals and double up on fluids, such as juice and water.

TRISHA LANGFORD
staff reporter

Seventy-one.

That's how many times George Clark, geology professor, has given blood to the American Red Cross.

"I am hoping to complete my ninth gallon next week," Clark said.

More than half of his 71 donations have been completed at K-State. Students, faculty and alumni will have the opportunity to join Clark next week and donate during the Purple Pride Blood Drive.

The drive will be from 1:30 to 7 p.m. Feb. 17 in Derby Hall. It will continue from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Feb. 18-21 in the Cottonwood room, the K, S and U rooms in the K-State Student Union.

"K-State has traditionally done very well for us in the past, and we are looking for them to do good for us this time," Nancy Powell, of the Red Cross, said.

The goal for the five day visit is 725 units of blood. One unit can help three or more patients in need of a transplant or infusion.

Another goal of the drive is to have a large number of minority donors.

Donor blood must be compatible with the recipient's blood. Sometimes the best possible match can only be obtained from a donor from the same racial or ethnic group.

Safety is a priority to the Red Cross. With the use of needles, individuals have a tendency to be wary of giving, Powell said.

"There is no way a person can contact any disease from giving blood. A needle is used just one time and is then put in a protective cover and disposed in a biohazards basket," Powell said.

Donors must be at least 17-years-old, weigh a minimum of 110 pounds and be in good health. Eating regular meals and doubling up on fluids, such as juice and water, are good tips to consider if giving blood.

"Being dehydrated and feeling light headed after giving is due to a lack of preparation," Powell said.

Powercat key chains will be given to donators as a thank you from the Red Cross and its corporate sponsor, Dick Edwards Motors.

TEVAL publication evaluated

STEVE WARE
staff reporter

Students and teachers voiced their opinions about the TEVAL teacher evaluations at a forum Wednesday sponsored by Students Advocating Valid Education.

Those attending voiced their concerns about publication of TEVAL results, anonymity of students and worth of the evaluations to members of a student and faculty panel.

"To most students this is just a 15-minute way to get revenge on a teacher that the student doesn't agree with," Jay Goodwin, former president of SAVE, said. "And what purpose do they really serve? It's just a large amount of administrative trivia."

The ineffectiveness of the TEVAL questionnaire was brought up repeatedly throughout the discussion, but several points were made in favor of the existing evaluation system.

"We cannot be without some kind of system like TEVAL," James Hamilton, head of the Department of Philosophy, said. "You have got to have a definitive measure of a teacher's effectiveness. Tenure, salaries and effectiveness depend on teacher evaluation."

Hamilton further explained that while some of the TEVAL questions are rather subjective in nature, their generalities are necessary to screen out biases in the responses.

The publication of TEVAL results was also an issue of discussion. The advocates claimed that a public record of a teacher's evaluation would aid students in their selection of future classes.

"Being able to find out how other students rated them would help students find the better teacher," Rosemary Moore, senior in secondary education and forum moderator, said.

Opponents said publication would be an invasion of privacy.

"I don't see how publishing my evaluations will help," George Keiser, professor of English, said.

"Students seem to rely more heavily on the word of their peers than on their advisers' anyway. How would it make any difference? It would just help them find the easiest classes to take."

While no consensus was reached on the usage of TEVAL questionnaires, one idea was proposed to assist students with course selection.

"Posting course syllabi on the department Web pages before pre-enrollment would define the classes' structure. That might be of some real assistance to students, and that's what we're trying to do," Hamilton said.

DEFENSE

seemed discombobulated and forced up two missed shots to end the game.

"They really didn't get set. They were confused by the change," Decker said. "Everybody did a good job of turning around and picking up a player. It was a smooth transition."

Patterson said switching to the man defense was a result of the three-point possibility.

"It was really important that we didn't give up a three. Nebraska is a team that will go for the aggressive game-winning shot," she said. "We thought that giving them a different look would play to our needs, and I think it did."

After a DeForge basket at the 2:49 mark, the Cats didn't allow a Husker field goal for the rest of the game.

The Huskers came into the contest shooting more than 46 percent from the field and averaging more than 74 points a game. By the end of the game, the Cats held the Huskers to 35.6 percent from the field and just 45 total points.

"Our defense just played terrific the whole game. It got us the win tonight," Patterson said.

BASKETBALL

the Cats within one, and DeForge went on an eight-point scoring streak.

The Cats managed to answer her every time, and Coalson sunk another three from 21 feet on an offensive rebound.

At this point, the game was about defense. Jones scrapped for a steal to add to her career-high eight for the game. Coalson couldn't convert the shot, and a Nebraska free throw put the Huskers down by one.

She then pulled down a crucial defensive board on a Husker's third attempt at a shot.

The Huskers' shooting went cold, and the only time they posted a score was on two free shots by guard Nicole Kubik at the time when free throws count — the 15-second mark. This made the score 47-45.

"On Nebraska's final possession, our only thought was, 'Don't foul,'" Larson said.

However Decker was fouled, and missed the first of her one-and-one shots. Nebraska had one final chance to tie the game, but a DeForge jumper from the lane fell just short.

Nebraska couldn't get it done, and three Cats under the basket ensured the ball would land in Cat hands

"If you look at Jenny's numbers, she only got one rebound," Patterson said. "It was probably the biggest one of the game."

Patterson went on to call the win the biggest one of the season to date.

"This is 10 times the importance of the win over OSU," Patterson said. "They're one notch above us, and we played toe-to-toe with them on our home court. This is the most significant win of our program."

McCain announces cancellation, apologizes

LILLIAN BEEBE
staff writer

It won't be raining on the McCain Auditorium stage Feb. 28. "Singin' in the Rain" has been canceled.

Letters were mailed to ticket holders during the weekend informing them of the cancellation, David Frain, assistant manager of McCain, said.

Ticket holders can choose to have their money refunded or choose another performance on the spring calendar, he said.

A form is included with the letters explaining the options.

If patrons choose to have their money refunded, they will need to mail their tickets to McCain.

A refund check will be sent to them in about three weeks, Frain said.

According to the letter, McCain is unable to reschedule the performance.

The only dates available are already filled by the music and theatre department's production of the opera "Fledermaus."

McCain was unable to fill the spot with another performance.

"We will not be able to get anything that is suitable, comparable or available at the time we need it," Frain said.

People have been disappointed to hear about the cancellation, he said.

"We had a very good response to 'Singin' in the Rain.' I suspect that in the end it would have sold out or at least sold more tickets than the fall production of 'Tommy,'" Frain said.

Because Manhattan is not a large metropolitan area, Richard Martin, director of McCain, said it is sometimes difficult to get the kind of events people want to see.

"There's an incredible amount of hours to make the schedule, and then you have this black hole. It's tremendously frustrating," he said.

The letter explains that the management company who booked the musical for McCain was bought out by another company.

The agents for both companies failed to double check dates and the performance was double-booked, making it impossible for "Singin' in the Rain" to be at McCain on Feb. 28.

"There is no such thing as risk avoidance in the performing arts business," Martin said. "There is only effective risk management."

"Singin' in the Rain" has not been offered to McCain as a possible musical for next year's season.

promote more than just fun.

"I prefer that people get a positive aspect of the sororities rather than just partying," Turnage said.

As part of its membership, the sorority follows what is called a five-point thrust: economic development, educational development, international awareness and involvement, physical and mental health, and political awareness and involvement.

"Not every sorority stresses community service like we do," Sheila Muhwezi, co-chairwoman of Crimson and Cream Week, said.

Aside from the week-long celebration, the sorority members spend Monday and Wednesday evenings tutoring elementary up to high-school students in English, math and reading at the Douglass Center Annex.

"The community help is important. That's why people don't see what we do campus-wise," Turnage said.

AWARD

"One-hundred and thirty-seven universities were eligible for the award and most of them applied," Zollman said. "Only 10 got it. So you have to feel good about that."

K-State received the award because of a commitment to bringing current research into the classroom, he said.

The University wants to bring things up to date in some areas, Zollman said. Providing easier access to project results to more people is a main objective.

The World Wide Web will be an integral part in integrating many of the projects and presenting them to a broader audience, he said.

Three significant projects were cited in the application.

The first focuses on getting modern research techniques and concepts into the kindergarten through 12th-grade classrooms, he said.

The other two focus on teaching non-science majors and future teachers recent research results along with improving their confidence with science, he said.

Tom Manney, professor of physics, is working on a genetics project by taking research results from his lab and converting them into a program that can be used in the classroom.

Zollman is working on a program that explains to students how modern physics ideas are related to quantum mechanics — how modern solids are put together, he said.

The NSF has some stipulations for spending the half-million dollars during three years, Zollman said.

"We have to sort out what made it possible for our programs to work," he said.

The NSF is requiring K-State to provide more detailed information about its programs, Zollman said.

"It will take a while to do the documentation, and it will take a while to figure out what questions to ask," he said.

The NSF also wants this information made available to other universities so they can learn from what K-State has done, Zollman said.

Finally, the NSF wants K-State to keep pursuing and building on its current programs that bring current research into the classroom.

Zollman said he is working on the documentation, which will take about a year.

A committee has not been set up to decide where the money will be spent yet. A more formal structure will be needed later in the project.

Keep up to date.

Kuhlman excited about being named dean of technology

SHANE MCCORMICK
staff writer

Dennis Kuhlman, professor of biological and agricultural engineering, was named dean of technology at K-State-Salina effective July 1.

Kuhlman will replace Jack Henry, who announced his resignation at the end of the 1996-97 school year. President Jon Wefald and Provost Jim Coffman made the announcement Thursday.

Kuhlman said he is excited about the opportunity he has been given.

"K-State-Salina is a very exciting opportunity in the area of technology," Kuhlman said. "This is a tremendous opportunity for the faculty and staff, there is a tremendous area of growth here. K-State-Salina can be the premier institution as far as technology."

Kuhlman is a 1970 graduate of K-State and earned his doctorate in agricultural engineering from Oklahoma State University in 1985.

He has served on the faculty at K-State since 1977 and was president of the KSU Faculty Senate in 1994-95.

Kuhlman said he heard about the opening last July and decided to pursue it in October. He said it is too early to discuss any immediate goals, but Kuhlman said he does have his sights set on long-term goals.

"I want to increase student enrollment at K-State-Salina, and I want to increase the community involvement with KSU," Kuhlman said. "I want to listen to the faculty and students to hear what they say are the strengths and weaknesses, then address them."

Kuhlman has conducted numerous technology research studies in the area of production agriculture. He also serves on many national professional organizations that relate to agriculture, aviation and technology.

"I decided it would be a good match with the technology expertise that I have obtained," Kuhlman said. "This will be an opportunity to be challenged with administrative aspects."

Donald Rathbone, dean of the College of Engineering, served as the deans' representative for the selection committee. Rathbone said Kuhlman's background attracted the committee to him.

"He had a good technology background," Rathbone said. "He also possessed excellent communication skills. He works well with faculty and students. His ability to bring people together and discuss issues is his strength."

IT'S IN THE KISS

BRANDY EPPLE, freshman in music education, and Ryan Edelman, senior in animal science and industry, confetti kiss while the audience watches. The confetti kiss is where someone tosses confetti into the air, and the couple kiss until the confetti touches the ground.

Smurthwaite speech gives private matter an outward display

STORY BY CHARLE SIOUX CHARLETON • PHOTOS BY CLIF PALMBERG

▶ Read to your heart's content? Sure, the Valentine's Day coverage continues on pages 3 and 9.

Kissing is something that most people think of as a private matter. It was, however, less than private Thursday evening at Smurthwaite Scholarship/Leadership House when Heidi Eichman gave a presentation on "Kissing, America's Favorite Pastime."

The room, decorated with red, white and black balloons covered with kisses, was filled to overflowing. The show opened with six women singing a medley of songs appropriate for the occasion.

The songs included hits like "And Then He Kissed Me," "My Guy" and "Baby Love." The medley concluded with "It's In His Kiss," also known as the "Shoop-Shoop" song.

During the medley, the audience exchanged smiles and laughter.

"Ancient lovers believed kissing literally united their souls," Eichman, freshman undecided, said.

When Jane Goodall studied chimps she discovered they kissed for different reasons, such as showing submission as well as affection, Eichman said. They are probably closest to humans but dogs, horses and fish give kisses, too.

"In France, people kiss twice — once on each cheek. Chinese people don't kiss in public," Eichman said. "Americans take an inordinate amount of pleasure in kissing."

Perhaps that is why participation for kissing demonstrations ran high.

The first couple demonstrated a teaser kiss, based on a scene from the movie "Top Gun." That kiss was greeted with enthusiasm by the audience.

"This next kiss is called the ice kiss," Eichman said. "It celebrates winter."

The second set of volunteers followed Eichman's directions. One person held an ice cube in their mouth until it became cold.

Removing the ice cube from their mouth, they then gave their partner a kiss guaranteed to send chills up the partner's spine.

While the kissers may have been chilled, the audience's reception was warm. People clapped and hollered for more. Eichman and her volunteers willingly requited.

The next series of kisses came from the book "365 Ways to Kiss" and encompassed the Hair-Combing Kiss where the partners ran their fingers through each other's hair; the Vocal Kiss which involves making a lot of noise while kissing; the Confetti Kiss where the confetti missed the mark, but the kiss did not; and the Kissyface Kiss.

Eichman asked for audience participation from the beginning but may not have anticipated the responses, including one to demonstrate kissing herself.

"I'll demonstrate a kiss if three girls and three guys who don't know one another get up and demonstrate three different types of kisses," she said.

Eichman rounded up six semi-willing participants, with a little persuasion on the part of their peers. The next three kisses incorporated the Photo Kiss, complete with a camera; the Morticia Kiss, a la the Addams family, with a little role reversal; and the Frog Kiss including hopping.

Eichman first talked to an audience about kissing in high school, when she gave an informative speech on kissing. Later she won competitions with kissing speeches.

"I was shocked at how many people turned out," she said. "I did not think this many people would participate."

Participant Diane Eilerts, freshman in chemistry, said she thought the demonstration was a good way to meet people.

"I was really nervous when we were kissing," Eilerts said.

As the evening wound down, Eichman reminded her audience to keep working to perfect their kissing.

"Kiss any way you want. Develop your own style," she said. "And remember, despite what the song says, a kiss is definitely not just a kiss."

HEIDI EICHMAN, freshman undecided, speaks about "Kissing, America's Favorite Pastime" Thursday evening in Smurthwaite Scholarship/Leadership House. Eichman spoke about early kissing, animals kissing and kissing technique before beginning a kissing session.

Senate approves publications fee, procedure changes

▶ For more coverage. Because Thursday's meeting was still in progress as the Collegian was going to press, Monday's Collegian will have details about what occurred with the OSAS fee as well as other late-breaking senate news.

staff reporter

Student Senate voted in favor of the Student Publication Inc. equipment budget increase after more than three hours of discussion.

The bill increases funding for equipment used by the Collegian, Royal Purple and the campus phone book.

The equipment includes new computers and upgrades for software.

However, the bill did not pass in its original form. Three amendments were brought to the floor, but only one passed.

According to the original bill, the Collegian would be able to print in four-color format. The original bill's budget asked for almost $130,000. The amendment reduced the budget to just more than $95,000.

Debate concerning whether the Collegian should change to a four-color paper became the primary focus of the bill.

"Overwhelmingly, everyone I talked to didn't want to invest more money to have the Collegian in color," Nicole Johnson, arts and sciences senator, said.

Tracey Mann, governmental relations chair, said he was for the four-color press because the press would be an investment for at least the next 20 years.

"I believe this is going to save us money," he said. "This is not an expenditure, this is an investment. In 20 years, they will easily pay it off."

He said if the color press were to pass, student fees would only increase $6.50.

"That's 'Star Wars' and a hot dog," he said.

Agriculture Senator Gabe Eckert said he agreed with the amendment. He said as long as the bill was still going to be able to provide the Collegian with the insert machine, there is no immediate need for four-color pages.

The insert machine would allow the Collegian to insert coupon inserts and paid announcements. The Collegian pays organizations to stuff the papers one to two nights per week.

"Four color would be nice, but it's a luxury," Eckert said.

He said if the insert machine were provided, it would allow the Collegian to get the most for the money being allocated.

Two other proposed amendments failed.

One would require the adviser of Student Publications to write a report that would outline the costs of changing the current computer system to another system.

The other amendment attempted to cut funding for a digital camera.

Also accomplished at the meeting was a Presidential ballot spots require applicants with desire for power

TANYA NISLY
staff reporter

For anyone who likes to be in charge and have power, the jobs of student body president and vice president are for you.

To run for student body president and vice president, students must be members of Student Governing Association and be enrolled in at least 12 undergraduate hours, or at least six graduate hours with at least a 2.0 grade point average, Student Body President Chris Hansen said.

"Every student who is enrolled at K-State is a member of SGA. It's the largest club on campus," Hansen said.

Candidates are required to attend all mandatory meetings. Those who fail to attend will not have their names on the ballot.

The best advice Hansen gave to those interested in running for a position is to visit with those in the position they are interested in.

"They should actually come talk to me," Hansen said.

Hansen also said some of his duties include dealing with the Kansas Board of Regents and serving as an advocate for students.

"This has taken up 40 to 50 percent of my time," Hansen said.

Hansen said dealing with University special events such as Landon Lectures and speaking at orientations and being a liaison for the students to the administration are part of his duties.

The president is also a member of the Chamber of Commerce and the Alumni board.

The cost of the president and vice presidential campaign cannot exceed 75 percent of the tuition paid for 12 in-state undergraduate hours. Candidates are also required to turn in an expenditure report detailing expenses of the campaign.

Although there is a lot of responsibility involved in being student body president and vice president, Hansen said the experience is worth it.

"It has been an incredible experience. It will require you to put everything you have into it and if you don't, you're selling the experience short. You have to be willing to put your life on hold," Hansen said.

These briefs encapsulate the news of the past 24 hours and are from staff reports, wire reports and other news services.

▶ NATION AND WORLD

• MISSISSIPPI DENIES RECOGNITION OF HOMOSEXUAL MARRIAGES.

JACKSON, Miss. — Gov. Kirk Fordice signed a law banning homosexual marriages in Mississippi, denouncing same-sex relationships as perverse.

Mississippi's law denies recognition of homosexual marriages performed in other states.

Fordice said the law would ensure that gay couples do not enjoy benefits of marriage, such as health insurance.

Mississippi lawmakers were responding in part to a case in Hawaii, which is appealing a judge's ruling that the state must grant marriage licenses to gay couples.

• KING FAMILY: RAY TRIAL WOULD ANSWER PAINFUL QUESTIONS.

ATLANTA — The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr.'s family called for a trial today for James Earl Ray, saying it might be the only way to answer painful questions about King's assassination.

The family is appealing for a trial because Ray, who suffers from liver disease, could die before the truth comes out, said Dexter King.

Ray, who pleaded guilty to the 1968 assassination and was sentenced to 99 years in prison but has since recanted his confession, is dying in a Nashville, Tenn., prison from cirrhosis of the liver. He is 68.

• DOW INDUSTRIAL BREAKS 7,000 FOR 1ST TIME, THEN EASES BACK.

NEW YORK — The Dow Jones Industrial average rose above 7,000 today for the first time with stocks advancing for a third straight session, yet another milestone in one of the most powerful bull markets in history.

The index crossed 6,000 only four months ago and its current historic lift followed a 104-point surge Wednesday, its fifth-biggest gain in points ever, and a 52-point run Tuesday.

• SECURITY HEIGHTENED AFTER CHURCH ATTACK LEAVES 9 DEAD.

MINYA, Egypt — Police stationed armored vehicles around churches in southern Egypt on Thursday after assailants stormed a church charity meeting and killed nine people.

Police blamed Muslim militants for the attack.

At least 79 people were arrested by nightfall Thursday.

Gunmen burst into the Mar Girgis Church in El-Fiqriya on Wednesday and opened fire, killing eight people.

A ninth person died Thursday of his injuries.

Five people were wounded.

• BILL WOULD DENY BENEFITS TO THOSE DISMISSED FOR DRUGS.

TOPEKA — Denying unemployment benefits to people who are fired for failing a drug test would create safer places to work, a committee was told Thursday.

A spokeswoman for the American Civil Liberties Union said the measure is an invasion of privacy and could result in workers being unjustly terminated.

The measure would deny jobless benefits to people who refuse to take a drug test or fail one if such tests are a condition of employment.

• MCVEIGH'S SISTER TALKED ABOUT REVOLUTION IN DECEMBER 1994.

BUFFALO, N.Y. — Timothy McVeigh's sister said at a Christmas party before the Oklahoma City bombing that a revolution was coming and her brother would play a role, according to court documents unsealed Thursday.

An FBI agent said in the documents that two witnesses claimed to have heard Jennifer McVeigh's remarks at a party on Dec. 23, 1994.

Both witnesses said Jennifer McVeigh, who was studying to be a teacher at Buffalo State College, spoke repeatedly about overthrowing the government.

One witness quoted Jennifer McVeigh as saying, "There's going to be a revolution, and you're either going to be with us or against us. I know I'm going to be ready."

Legislators hear student concerns

BEN YODER
staff reporter

Student delegates voiced their opinions on ways to improve Kansas Board of Regents universities to state legislators Thursday.

A group of almost 70 students from the five regents schools talked with legislators about nine proposals included in the Policies and Positions Handbook at the state capitol in Topeka.

K-State sent nearly 30 delegates.

The booklet states the joint opinions of the regents universities' Student Senates, but does not implement any policies. The state legislature must vote and approve the proposals before they take effect.

Gabe Eckert, College of Agriculture senator, said improving classroom technology and increasing faculty salaries were the focus of the day.

The technology improvement proposal recommends a $12 million grant for computers, audio-visual equipment and instructional aids.

Funding for schools in the regents system has not matched state budget increases, according to the booklet.

Tracey Mann, Senate governmental relations chair, agreed with Eckert.

"Improving technology has definitely been the No. 1 purpose," Mann said. "They definitely understand that we need more computers and better maps."

Agriculture Senator Jennafer Neufeld said faculty salaries were also an important issue on campuses.

Overall, faculty at regents universities were underfunded by 9 percent compared to their peer institutions. K-State's faculty is 8.5 percent below comparable universities.

Student Body Vice President Aaron Otto said faculty salaries have not kept up with the inflation rate.

"Each year we slip further and further behind," Otto said. "It's a very delicate process."

Jill Hayhurst, Senate vice chair, said it helped that students talked to legislators themselves.

"They're very willing to listen for us," Otto said. "We're not paid staff. We're volunteers."

Also included in the booklet were recommendations to lower tuition levels, increase scholarship grants, and establish a comprehensive grant application.

Mann said today's events were a joint effort of all the regents schools, but especially K-State and the University of Kansas.

Ashleigh de la Torre, Senate governmental relations chair at KU, said it was important for the universities to work together.

"As much as we like to disagree on sports, we can agree on the issues," de la Torre said.

Elvis resurrected for valentines

ERICA DUNCAN
staff writer

Elvis was spotted twice Thursday afternoon.

Clad in a white jumpsuit with gold trim and a diamond ring the size of a small country, Elvis sang "Love Me Tender" to three unsuspecting people.

Part of a Valentine's Day singing telegram offer by Balloon Boutique, the telegrams cost $40 and came with balloons.

Courtney Ukens, senior in elementary education, played the part of Elvis. Ukens defied the stares of disbelievers as he drove to Fort Riley to sing to Mike Lacer, education counselor at Learning Center No. 2 on base.

"I hope it's from my wife," Lacer said.

Elvis forgot the last line to the song, but he recovered and proceeded to embarrass Lacer.

"It's not usually a guy singing love songs to a guy," Lacer said.

This was the first time Ukens played Elvis.

"I usually do characters like Lance the Latin Lover and Provocative Paul," Ukens said.

Elvis left the building, jumped in his truck and high-tailed it back to the Riley County District Court Building to sing to Kim Jackson, civil clerk from Manhattan.

"Oh my God," Jackson said, as Elvis got down on one knee, sat her in a chair and serenaded her.

Jackson said she has not been a huge Elvis fan all of her life, but she said she liked him.

Valentine's Day options available whether or not you are attached

Today is Valentine's Day. We all know it's here, we've all seen it coming. You're either ready or you're not. If you have someone to celebrate with and still haven't decided how to spend tomorrow may we suggest the following:

- Take a stroll with your loved one down Lover's Lane. It runs by Bluemont Hall and President Jon Wefald's house.
- Go to Union Forum Hall and watch "West Side Story" or "Sleepless in Seattle," two of the most romantic movies ever made. Share your popcorn and soda with the one you love or a darn good friend.
- Rent any movie with Molly Ringwald or Cary Grant in it.
- Stay in and make finger food for each other.
- Remember, actions speak louder than words. Do something — don't just buy something.

Now, a couple of guidelines to help the day go smoothly for you and those around you:

- If you go out to dinner, remember to show up early, keep your reservation and tip your server well. Everyone will be impressed.
- Stay away from public displays of affection. No one will be impressed with you and your Schmoopie.

For those of you who don't have any plans for the day, please consider our ideas for ways to pass the time.

- Go out with a group of friends and stay away from known romantic spots. Go to a movie or take a road trip to somewhere you've never been.
- Rent a couple of violent, dark movies. "The Wild Bunch" and "High Plains Drifter" are both classic shoot-em-ups with no romantic overtones.
- Take care of yourself. This is the perfect night to take a bubble bath or throw your blankets in the dryer and read in a warm bed.
- Last but not least, ignore the whole stinkin' day. It's only 24 hours, and it will all be finished by Saturday morning.

Isn't it Romantic?

History of St. Valentines Day has questionable origins

Cupid can bite me.

There are a lot of holidays in our culture that, to be honest, don't make a lot of sense. Groundhog's Day is one of the first to pop into mind.

A rodent pops its head out of the ground, and what it sees is supposed to have some bearing on the long-range weather patterns?

Enter April Fool's Day. One 24-hour period of deliberate mischief with no necessary provocation or rationale other than, well, the calendar.

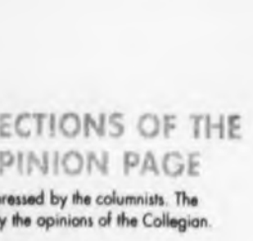
One day of deliberate lunacy as opposed to the general ongoing insanity we settle for everyday.

Then somewhere in between we get St. Valentine's Day.

So what's the proud, rich history inspiring today's festivities?

Like I know, like everybody knows — this is one of those lost-to-antiquity stories with theories that make the Warren Report seem almost believable.

Roman history mentions two Christian martyrs by the name of Valentine (though some think there might just be one — chalk it up to a clerical error) who lost their heads on Feb. 14. One story goes that in the time of Emperor Claudius II's ban on young men getting married (thinking that single men made better soldiers), Valentine performed marriages of young children behind the emperor's back. In the year 496, Feb. 14 was named St. Valentine's Day by Saint Pope Gelasius I.



So a man fights the establishment by consecrating bonds of love, gets killed for it, and we have a holiday? Wait, it gets better.

Geoffrey Chaucer, that love machine of a 14th-century English poet, makes mention of Feb. 14 as the date when birds begin to choose their mates. By the next century, the day was celebrated by unmarried women standing by their windows, waiting for the first man to pass, believing he, or someone who looks like him (now that's noncommittal), would marry them within a year.

Another literary footnote — this tradition gets a mention in Shakespeare's Hamlet by Ophelia who, coincidentally enough, goes mad and drowns herself. Coincidence? You make the call.

Following the British obliteration of the French army on the field of Agincourt in 1415, a French duke named Charles was imprisoned in the Tower of London and, on Feb. 14, sent his wife a rhymed love letter, reportedly signed, "From your Valentine." And so the madness began.

KEN WELLS

KEN WELLS is a graduate student in theatre. You can e-mail comments to Ken at (sigma7@ksu.edu).

You'd think a date that's now associated with such passion and adoration would have a rich, loving history, wouldn't you? Instead we have beheaded saints, the sexual practices of birds, French prisoners rotting in English prisons and a bunch of women thinking that they'd end up marrying the paper boy.

Modern-day practices don't really cling to logic, either. Modern American society drills into the female psyche that they need to be skinny enough to see through, and what's one of the most traditional Valentine's presents? Chocolate? That's like tossing anvils to drowning victims.

Cards are okay, but if you're shopping for that special someone, you generally want to get them something a little more substantial.

Flowers? Great — they'll be dead in a matter of days, and let's not read too much into the symbolism of that with regards to the relationship.

Stuffed animals? Not bad, now that there's a wider variety in the Valentine menagerie, with everything from penguins to cows sporting big red hearts and dopey smiles.

Lingerie? If you've found someone you can feel comfortable buying lingerie for, you shouldn't even worry about this holiday, they'll understand if you do something rational and nonconformist. And you won't have to size it.

Take the cynic's advice for the overcommercialized holiday — if you must celebrate this bizarre holiday with your love (or focus of unfulfilled passion) do something practical that doesn't just linger in utility for a week in February. Buy them supper, a nice supper (no drive-thru). Take a trip together (kidnapping optional). Do something, don't buy something.

And if someone asks you to be their Valentine, ask if they want to lock you up in a tower or just cut off your head.

• READER: TODD STEWART'S GERNERALIZATIONS ARE WRONG

Editor,

Criticizing the ability of an athlete is one thing, but questioning one's sexuality and making false generalizations is another.

As a male that does wear nail polish, I can easily ascertain that I am indeed a man. Todd Stewart, it is not "flowery trash." It is not a question of one's sexuality, as the two are not even remotely related.

You are confusing correlation with causation. Why are you wearing a hat, Stewart? Is it because you have a bad haircut? Do you see how childish and incorrect this is yet?

Stewart, you did get one thing right though. KSDB-FM 91.9 is a great radio station. However, you are not totally correct on the disc jockey end. I am also a disc jockey at DB92 and never once did I mention you on the radio.

Anyway, isn't it also hypocritical to criticize all the other disc jockeys for making fun of you on the radio and then immediately belittle them? Sorry Stewart, but you are not Jason Whitlock and this writing doesn't become you. I would simply urge you to think about what you are writing and your choice of words before you publish your next column.

• CAMPUS DESKS DON'T ACCOMIDATE NEEDS OF ALL STUDENTS

Editor,

Anyone who knows me knows I'm a big guy. Maybe a few will think this is just pointless whining, but I think I have a valid complaint: the desks on this campus are too small.

I'm not merely speaking of seat size, but also in the bottom-of-desk-to-floor size. If I sit up straight in most desks at this school, most of the time my legs are pressing into the muck on the bottom of the desks. Quite often, I'm forced to sprawl in uncomfortable positions merely to write on the pint-sized platforms, and the discomfort involved makes concentrating on classes difficult.

Whoever decided that these desks would accommodate larger students as well as those of smaller and more average sizes should be promptly defensterated.

Look around you in class, and you'll find one or two of us spread across several desks that are two sizes too small. How can we be expected to do well in class if merely sitting requires contortions not seen outside of gymnastics practices?

Fortune cookies interpretion might hold key for happiness

VIEWPOINT

JEFF CHAN

JEFF CHAN is a graduate student in English. You can e-mail comments to Jeff at (defcon1@ksu.edu).

Just because this Valentine's Day column is about food doesn't mean I'm going to elaborate on any way-to-a-man's-heart claim. Besides, we all know that the quickest way to a man's heart is through his ribcage.

Did I say I have no love for Valentine's Day?

Fortune cookies are what I am talking about. No overview of the fortune cookie would be complete without a little researched history. Surely, though, no more than the St. Valentine's Day Massacre, my original topic.

But no, after an hour and a half in Farrell Library navigating databases into dead end after dead end I walked away no wiser than before.

In desperation I combed my own book collection. Finally, tucked in-between "The Pocket Book of Quotations" and "The Dictionary of 20th Century Allusions," I found the answer in J. Allen Varasdi's "Myth Information: Popular Misconceptions, Fallacies, and Misbeliefs."

According to Varasdi, the fortune cookie is an American creation despite its association with Chinese restaurants.

The fortune cookie as we know it was invented in the United States in 1918 by a Chinese immigrant named George Jung. These message-containing treats were given to customers at Chinese restaurants before the meal, the tiny tracts meant to amuse the diners while waiting to eat.

I usually save my fortunes, but only the better ones end up lying around my cramped desk. Some of the best:

"Many possibilities are open to you — work a little harder." I should tattoo this on my head.

"An empty stomach is not a good political adviser." If the "Tao Te Ching" had been a cookbook, this would be the thesis.

"Each person is a book to those who can read him." Perhaps, but I read so s-l-o-w-l-y ...

"One learns most when teaching others." I learn this every day.

"Stiff in opinions, always in the wrong." At first I thought this was a direct reference to me and not a maxim. I still think it is.

And my favorite: "You love Chinese food." Wow, they really do work!

Of course, if you frequent Chinese restaurants at all, you must have some ritual or another when it's time to eat the cookie. If I'm with three or more people, we pass the tray around, and a person picks a cookie and gives it to the person on their left, going around until everyone has a cookie.

For the fortune to work, you need to eat all the cookie before reading the slip inside. Of course, I know many people who just don't like eating fortune cookies; they break them open, read, and leave the cookie in crumbs. Those people just got no future if you ask me.

Finally, the fortune must be read aloud to all those at the table. Depending on who I'm with, I'll read the fortune straight; whenever possible, however, you must end the reading of the fortune with the words "in bed." Think of it as just a little more free advice.

Of course, now we reach the deeper issue at stake here: just how accurate is a fortune cookie? I have two prevailing theories.

The first and one I am currently leaning toward rests on the basis that the information contained within a fortune cookie is not person-specific.

In other words, it is not directed at you specifically, but rather is there by chance, waiting for someone to discover it. Anyone familiar with runecasting or tarot might already understand this. The fortune acts as a receptacle for that person's own questions and doubts, a mirror into which the person can look inside him or herself. Ancient psychology.

The second, far more theoretical explanation delves deep into metaphysics itself. I like to call it Schrodinger's Fortune Cookie after the Austrian theoretical physicist and cookie lover Erwin Schrodinger, whose research uncovered the wave equation that describes the motion of subatomic particles at nonrelativistic speeds. No, really.

In Schrodinger's Fortune Cookie, we must assume that the fortunes are indeed person-specific, that they are fated to be read by that person, that they are accurate glimpses into a particular person's future or situation.

What this means is, the fortune on the slip of paper is not fixed until the recipient of the cookie is chosen. The information that composes the fortune remains in a wave-like state of flux, unfixed within a near-infinite range of possible fortunes, and only determined when someone chooses a cookie or has one chosen for them.

Of course, a controlled experiment is impossible; any attempt to analyze this flux state would collapse the Cookie Continuum, and a fortune would appear on the slip. Opening your cookie and revealing a blank slip, which has happened, presents all kinds of philosophical and spiritual dilemmas in this scheme.

Conversely, the benefit of spouting off such theories is that they're equally hard to refute. Perhaps I should seek a grant.

If nothing else, the preceding mind-candy about this food for thought proves one thing: "Soon you will be sitting on top of the world." In bed, even.

Better go get those lotto tickets, oh yeah.

Speech focuses on empowerment, identity

Although the Roman Catholic Church excommunicated Archbishop G. Augustus Stallings in 1990 for forming the Independent African American Catholic Congregation, he received applause Thursday night.

Stallings was the keynote speaker at the Annual Black Student Union Black History Month Achievement Banquet in the Union Ballroom.

"He was a dynamic speaker at the Big 8 Conference on Black Student Government that we hosted here last February," Marcella Burks, president of Black Student Union, said. "A lot of the students didn't get to hear him speak, and we wanted to bring him back."

The banquet was in honor of the achievements of three black faculty and staff members at K-State. Medals were given to James Boyer, professor of foundations and adult education; Veryl Switzer, associate athletic director for academics; and LaBarbara Wigfall, associate professor of landscape architecture and regional and community planning.

"We do need more people with the mind and heart of a Sister Wigfall, a Brother Switzer and a Brother Boyer," Stallings said.

Stallings said empowerment comes when people realize who they are.

Peterson's anti-PAC proposal fails

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — A display of temper by some Democrats doomed a proposal to ban campaign contributions from political action committees to candidates.

The House initially voted 63-60 on Wednesday to approve a proposal from freshman Rep. Jeff Peterson, R-Manhattan. He offered it as an amendment to an ethics bill.

The House then voted 64-60 against a Democratic proposal to ban direct contributions from the insurance industry to candidates for insurance commissioner. Peterson first voted yes, then switched his vote to no.

Angry Democrats punished Peterson by forcing a reconsideration of the proposed ban on PAC contributions.

"Incidentally, freshman, welcome to the House of Representatives," Rep. Ted Powers, R-Mulvane, told Peterson.

Without amendments, the ethics bill under consideration would prohibit executive branch officials from accepting or soliciting most gifts, including free meals and drinks.

The House passed the unamended version of the bill today, 107-18. It went to the Senate.

The proposal to ban PAC contributions had its strongest support from conservative Republicans, but moderates supported it as well. The overwhelming majority of Democrats opposed it.

The House has never before approved a ban on PAC contributions, despite continued debate about campaign finance laws in recent years. The Senate has approved such a proposal several times, including last year.

Statistics from the state Commission on Governmental Standards and Conduct show Kansas PACs contributed $1.9 million to legislative candidates during the 1996 election cycle, more than a third of the money those candidates received.

Incumbent Democratic House members relied the most heavily on PAC contributions of any group of candidates, with nearly half of their money coming from that source. For incumbent Republican representatives, the figure was nearly 42 percent.

Peterson said his constituents want PAC contributions banned because they view the special-interest groups that form them as too powerful.

Some members questioned whether a PAC ban would infringe too much on free-speech rights and therefore would be unconstitutional. They also noted that Peterson's proposals would not ban contributions from corporations and unions.

Rep. Bill Reardon, D-Kansas City, a legislator since 1977, recalled that lawmakers originally saw PACs as a way to allow working people to pool their funds, which would counter the influence of the wealthy.

FIELD DAY AT AHEARN

With eyes looking to the Big 12 conference championship, K-State romps competition at the KSU Coors Invitational

STORY BY JEREMY KELLEY • PHOTOS BY BRANDON WHITE

The K-State track team propelled as far the field event tracksters tossed the weights Thursday night in Ahearn Field House at the KSU Coors Invitational.

Track results delayed. At press time, these were the only results available for the KSU Coors Invitational Track Meet.

The Cats had yet another successful track meet, especially in the throwing division.

Renetta Seiler, who earned NCAA provisional marks at last week's tournament in Nebraska, again earned high marks with a heave of 58'3-3/4", which gave her the meet record.

"I was pleased, I guess," Seiler said. "My fingers hurt, and I hadn't been throwing all that great in the last couple of weeks anyway."

Seiler blistered two fingers on her throwing hand a few weeks ago, yet still was able to out-throw the competition.

Coach Cliff Rovelto said he was pleased with Seiler's performance, but said she was going to get substantially better in the coming weeks.

"She really didn't throw all that well, so that gives you an idea of how good she really has gotten," he said. "It shows what a great athlete she is to not throw well, yet have good quality marks."

Seiler beat KU's Lisa Beran by nearly 7 feet to capture the top spot in the meet.

"I always want to throw further. That's pretty much a given," Seiler said. "We are trained to peak at certain times in our events and hopefully my peak will be during conference."

Seiler was speaking of the Big 12 Conference Indoor meet next weekend.

Both Seiler, Schultz and teammate Anna Whitham made it into the finals in shot put, but no one placed in the event.

Matt Thompson also received NCAA provisional qualifying marks in the 35-pound weight throw with a pitch of 60'6-3/4".

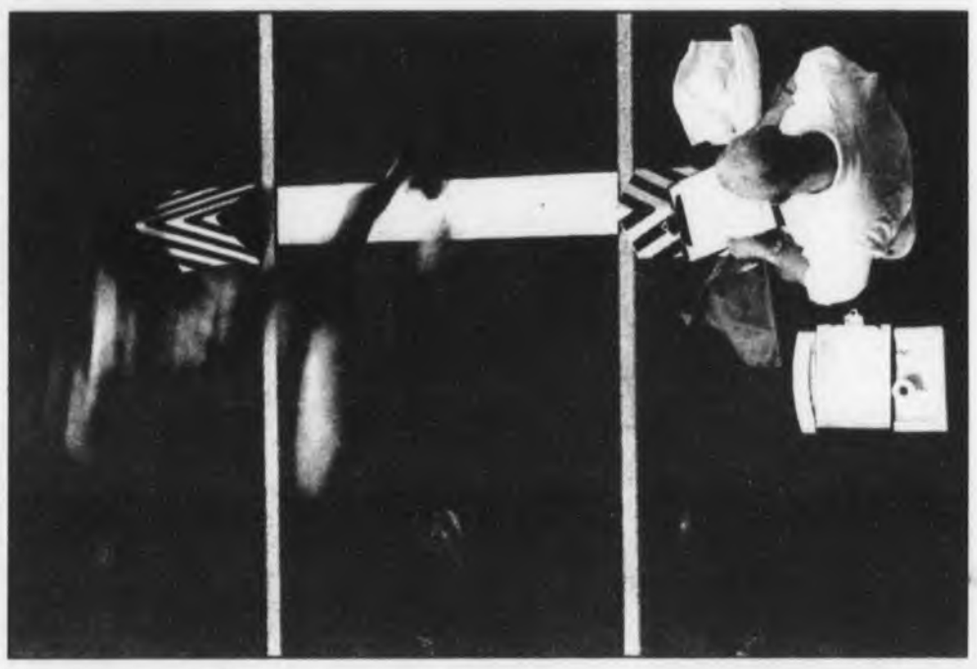
"He's gotten really consistent, and that's what we need, because if you're going in and you're counting on people P.R.ing out the the rear to score points, you've got problems," Rovelto said.

Gene Peterson had a great day in the throwing events as well. Peterson threw the shot put 57'9-1/2", which earned him the third spot in the event.

"Gene is getting consistent at that level in the shot, and that's a big pivotal event for us in the conference," Rovelto said. "He got his weight back up, and he's doing a good job for us."

Varitta Kinard, the second-best triple jumper in the nation, did not compete in the event, choosing to save herself for the conference meet. Tara Marmie jumped instead of Kinard placing third with a leap of 36'9-3/4".

The women continued to progress throughout the track events. Karissa Stewart won the 60-meter dash with a time of 7.46 seconds.



Kelly Andra ran past competitors in the mile and the 800-meter run, and Wanita Dykstra continued her success of a week ago by winning the women's high jump, leaping 5 feet 8 inches.

"She really has been doing well for us in the past couple of weeks, especially last week at Nebraska. I was very pleased," Rovelto said.

On the men's side, Travis Livingston won the 60-meter high hurdles, and Shawn Maxwell took the 600-yard run title.

"The competition here is so varied, and there are so many different competitors, but I think overall that we had a pretty good meet here today," Seiler said.

BELOW. A long jumper takes a leap Thursday at Ahearn Field House. Competitors from at least 15 different schools took to the track in the KSU Coors Invitational in both track and field events.

LEFT. Wendy Escobar takes her turn in the long jump Thursday afternoon at Ahearn Field House. Escobar placed third in the event with a jump of 17'6-1/4".

Wildcats storm into Ames to take on Cyclones in Big 12 matchup

SUN DEE MILLS
staff reporter

The K-State women's basketball team will be watching its step Saturday night when it meets the Iowa State Cyclones in Ames.

"They're one of those programs that stands behind the corner and yells 'Boo' at you when you walk in the door," Coach Deb Patterson said. "Last time we met them, it came down to the last three minutes of the game."

The Cats (14-7, 7-4), coming off a significant win over No. 23-ranked Nebraska on Wednesday night, will lose their home court advantage when they take the Cyclones on the road. Having stayed undefeated in Bramlage Coliseum, the Cats have won just one Big 12 conference game on the road.

"This week is a tough week for us," Patterson said. "Nebraska was one notch above us, and Iowa State is one notch below us. The next game always takes on more significance."

Patterson said mixing defensive looks against Nebraska was the key to a huge win.

"This team doesn't have the depth to play in-your-shorts defense for 40 minutes," Patterson said. "We've learned lots of defensive looks, which is frustrating to opposing offenses."

Patterson said the plan of attack against the Cyclones will be a similar one, by mixing the defensive looks and playing a lot of zone defense. She also said she wanted to contain forward Jayme Olsen.

Olsen is fourth in the Big 12 in scoring, right under Cat senior forward Andria Jones. Averaging 18 points a game, Olsen also shoots 44 percent from the three-point line.

The Cats are a game-to-game ball club in terms of their success, Patterson said.

Inconsistent play needs to be looked at in practice, something she said she plans to do.

"I thought the team played badly at OU," Patterson said. "I'm the type of coach who believes in reveling in a win for the night and waking up in the morning and getting back to business."

Pitchers, catchers report: Spring is here

VIEWPOINT

TARA WRAY

TARA WRAY is a sophomore in print journalism. You can e-mail comments to Tara at (twray @ksu.edu)

Valentine's Day is upon us again, the time of year for lovers — lovers of baseball, that is.

Despite the groundhog seeing his shadow (spring is on its way, folks), it's downright cold out there, hardly weather to envision baseball. Nonetheless, the first signs of summer are peeking through.

Die-hard baseball fans' most favorite words were uttered today: "pitchers and catchers report," marking the start of the 1997 major league baseball season.

Two dozen teams report to spring training from both leagues today, suiting up in sunny Florida and even sunnier Arizona. Forget about your earmuffs and gloves, hello swimsuits and SPF 50.

With a layer of snow still on the ground, the boys of summer are back in business. And it's a safe bet to say all are hoping on being in playoff contention when fall rolls around.

Sadly though, only a handful will remain come trick-or-treat time. But that doesn't stop them from dreaming.

I'm a dreamer, too.

I'm dreaming of a happy place where the Cubs are the better team in Chicago. Where the ivy-covered walls of Wrigley Field are packed with screaming fans who aren't just there for the beer, but are there to see a winning team play.

But with the White Sox's adding high-priced superstar Albert Belle to their lineup, Chicago's north side — home of Wrigley Field — will likely be better known for its bars than its baseball.

The addition of Belle to an already potent line-up, including slugger Frank Thomas, doesn't mean the Sox are a shoe-in to win the American League central.

Instead, look to the Royals to take the division — I'm kidding. I love them, but bless their little hearts, they'll be sitting on their butts in October.

Cleveland should be considered a favorite again, despite losing Belle. The Indians partially made up for the loss by acquiring Matt Williams from the Giants.

Williams banged 22 homers last season and will fit in nicely with Manny Ramirez and Jim Thome, who hit a combined 73 dingers in 1996.

Williams comes to the Indians with no prior record of gambling debts or hitting the press with profanity or baseballs. What he lacks in power, he makes up for in civility.

Reunited in Oakland, and it feels so good. The Bash Brothers, Jose Canseco and Mark McGwire are back together again in hopes of sparking the offense there. The duo hit a combined 80 homers last season, McGwire with the A's, Canseco with the Red Sox. The excitement might be back in Oakland.

The Yankees, barring any big lineup changes, will take their division again and will most likely play in the World Series for their 24th title. Pretty ho-hum in New York.

Come fall, perennial cellar dwellers like the Cubs, Royals, Tigers, Mets and the rest of the lovable losers will be kicking back preparing for winter and watching the playoffs on television.

Over in the National League, look to Atlanta and Ted Turner's boys to return to the limelight and the World Series. If you pay them, they will stay.

For some reason, the Reds signed Deion Sanders again. It likely won't do much for the team other than put a few more fans in the stands.

Sanders hasn't picked up a bat in more than a year, so other than speed he won't have a huge effect. But it's just so much fun to watch him run with all that jewelry on.

While the boys of summer are gearing up for the 1997 season, they've got dreams of hitting game-winning homers and pitching no-hitters in their heads.

Because it's still plenty early in the season, fans have some dreams of their own.

I'm dreaming of a season where the only spitting is at the dirt, where brawls are reserved for hockey, where players love the fans as much as fans love them, where there's no fear of strike, where inter-league play is successful ...

Baseball team to start season in Texas games

BRIAN SMOLLER
staff reporter

When the K-State baseball team steps off the bus in Arlington, Texas, this weekend, the last thing head coach Mike Clark wants to see is snow.

"There is a chance for snow on Friday, believe it or not," Clark said. "I've been watching, and there's supposed to be a storm going through.

"The rest of the weekend looks good, though," he said.

So, barring a blizzard, the K-State baseball season begins Friday in the University of Texas at Arlington tournament.

The tournament consists of three other schools, UTA, Arkansas and Iowa. The Wildcats take on UTA on Friday, Arkansas on Saturday and Iowa on Sunday. Clark called the opposition far from pushovers.

"UTA beat Texas at Texas and split with Texas A&M in College Station, so they're a very good ball club," Clark said.

Arkansas is a possible top-20 team and Iowa finished at .500 in the Big 10 last year, so they're both going to be very competitive, he said.

UTA players bring a 5-3 record into Friday's game. With eight games under their belts, they have a definite advantage over the Cats, who haven't had a practice outside since mid-January.

"We're two weeks away from the Big 12 season, and we need to get on the field to work out some of the kinks," Clark said. "We really just need to play somebody to see what we need to work on."

The Wildcats will send Chris Traylor to the mound to start on Friday with Mickey Blount to come on in relief.

"If we get four innings out of each of those guys that would be great, but we'll probably get three," Clark said.

The starting lineup for Friday at this point is tentatively set, but Clark said changes might occur pending the scouting reports.

But the infield is set, with Josh Marn at third base, Heath Schesser at short stop, Todd Fereday at second base and Jason Bichelmeyer at first base. Yancy Ayres and Paul Cranford will split time at catcher.

The only injury on the team relegates Scott Poepard to the designated hitter role. Poepard is recovering from a severe ankle sprain.

"Scott's injury is healing up pretty well, but he won't go into the outfield unless as an emergency fielder," Clark said.

The outfield is still uncertain, as the depth of players on the roster allows Clark to change his field according to UTA's strategies.

"We'll wait and see whether the pitcher is left- or right-handed before we announce the starters for this weekend," Clark said.

Clark also said the full-time starting positions in the outfield generally take three weeks to decide.

The pitchers slated to start Saturday against Arkansas are Jon Oiseth and Jason Wells.

Eric Yanz, who is coming off shoulder surgery, along with Casey Cook, battle Iowa on Sunday.

Cats face Shockers after rest

SHANE MCCORMICK
staff writer

The women's tennis team will continue its spring dual campaign Saturday, as they play host to intrastate rival Wichita State at 1 p.m. at Cottonwood Racquet Club.

The Wildcats, 2-1, will come into the contest with plenty of rest. The Cats last action on the courts was more than two weeks ago, when they swept Southwest Missouri State and Creighton.

In those matches, the Cats were battling the injury bug, playing without the services of junior Dinah Watson and senior Nikki Lagerstrom.

Although Lagerstrom is still being bothered by a disk problem in her back, Watson should see her first action of the spring.

"Dinah's been practicing, she hasn't had any problems," Coach Steve Bietau said. "She's just been trying to get her stamina and timing back in practice."

One of the biggest matches this weekend will come at the No. 1 singles spot, where junior Yana Dorodnova faces Shocker Lisa Field. Dorodnova comes into the match ranked No. 9 in the ITA Central Region rankings.

Last year, Dorodnova beat Field in a close two-set match, 7-6, 6-3.

"Lisa has great control of the ball, she has very nice touch," Bietau said. "She is a consistent player that will make Yana have to be patient. If Yana lets the point open up, she'll be in good shape."

The Shockers come into the contest ranked three spots behind the Cats at No. 10.

Bietau said their strength lies in their top players.

"Field is their best player and their doubles team is very strong," he said.

The Shockers No. 1 doubles team consists of Jane White and Allison Passmore. The duo is ranked No. 2 in the central region in doubles.

Bietau said his No. 1 doubles team of Dorodnova and junior Lena Piliptchak has improved during the year.

SPOTLIGHT ON MOKSEE

STORY BY CORY MORGAN • PHOTOS BY STEVE HEBERT

AARON FISHER, freshman in architectural engineering and lead guitarist for the band Moksee, solo's on his guitar during a concert at Bombers in Aggieville Wednesday night.

MOKSEE, an alternative and rock and roll band, play for a crowd of fans at Bombers Wednesday night.

Moksee offers fans a local sound with a sense of family

Moxie. According to Webster's New Encyclopedic Dictionary, moxie is energy, pep, bravery or courage. It is also a trademark for a soft drink.

Moxie is also a local band, spelled Moksee, which derived its name from the word moxie in the dictionary.

Jessica Cullison, sophomore in mass communications and lead singer, said the band members are full of energy and have a lot of courage.

The name for the band came about the night before the band members performed for the first time. They couldn't agree on anything, so they searched the dictionary and came up with moxie.

Moxie, however, is a trademark for a soft drink, so they had to change the spelling to Moksee.

The band plays alternative and rock 'n' roll music, but it has a distinct style of music. It plays 16 original songs that Aaron Fisher, freshman in architectural engineering and lead guitarist, wrote. Keyboard player and back-up singer Ann Giebler said Fisher is the creative one of the bunch. The band's original singles include "Red Windows," "Tuesdays Again" and "Help."

Along with its original songs, Moksee covers musicians from Bad Company to the Indigo Girls and Smashing Pumpkins.

Moksee has four members, all of whom attend K-State. Cullison is the lead singer and rhythm guitarist. Giebler, sophomore in elementary education, plays the keyboard and is the back-up singer. Fisher is the lead guitarist and Monty Brown is the drummer. Brown attends K-State-Salina.

The sound technician for the band is Adrian Gordinier, freshman in microbiology.

Moksee became a band last year when Cullison went to Opus 9.

Giebler sang in a collegiate musical with her. They met Fisher through a mutual friend in a residence hall, and then they searched for a drummer.

They waited and waited, until January 1996, when the phone finally rang. It was Brown, and he said he was interested.

One week later, the band participated in the all-residence-hall talent show and won second place.

"We are all fortunate to get to play in a band. It is a dream come true for all of us and one that we have all had," Cullison said. "This is the neatest thing that I have ever done. We all love it."

In its first year of existence, an article about Moksee was written in Pitch Weekly.

"We all play in the band for the fun of it and don't get too caught up with all the hoopla," Cullison said. "It is nice though, to see an article about our band in a magazine."

This year, the band won Opus 10, the competition that last year sparked an interest for starting the band.

"We haven't had to try too hard for anything we have done," Cullison said. "It's almost like things have just fallen into our laps. We are extremely lucky."

Moksee practices two to three times a week, depending on when its next gig is scheduled. The band usually practices for an hour at a time.

Giebler said being in a band was kind of like being in a family.

"We are like a family. We fight, laugh, cry and enjoy the moments of time that we spend with each other," Giebler said.

Moksee has played at establishments around both Manhattan and Lawrence, including Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon and Rowdy Trouty's in Manhattan, and the Jazzhaus in Lawrence.

Cullison said they played at a fraternity party last year and had a great time.

The local band scene around Manhattan is becoming more and more popular right now, Cullison said.

At least 10 local bands perform around town and each band offers its support to the others, Cullison said.

"We have a good local following from our friends and other local bands around town," Giebler said. "It's actually pretty cool to see what other bands are doing."

Moksee's music can be heard on KMKF-101.5 around 6:30 p.m. K-Rock plays music from local bands around that time and sometimes bands are brought to the set for exclusive interviews.

ST. VALENTINE'S DAY

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 1997

Valentine's Day rich in historic meanings

RACHAEL KRUEGER
staff reporter

Lupercalia.

A foreign word to many, yet it began a tradition that is still practiced today.

Romans celebrated Lupercalia, a fertility festival, annually on Feb. 15.

Through a lottery system, adolescent Roman men drew names of women who became their sexual partners for that year's duration.

These festivals were the first Valentine's Days.

The transformation of this festival to the greeting-card frenzy of today took thousands of years and produced much debate that continues today.

A popular theory concerns the martyred St. Valentine. Valentine, a Roman bishop, was beheaded on Feb. 24, 270, for refusing to renounce Christianity.

Legend has it that Valentine secretly married lovers during a time when the emperor, Claudius II, abolished marriage. This act led to his death, which led to his sainthood.

But many are unaware that two Valentines existed. One was the bishop, and the other was a Roman priest who, ironically, was beheaded on Feb. 14, 270. This priest was never concerned with lovers, and the connection of his name with such a day is purely accidental.

"I associate Valentine's Day along the lines of girlfriends, not saints," Chris McCurdy, sophomore in public relations, said.

The accident occurred in the early days of the church. Christians sought to obliterate pagan superstitions and substitute their own beliefs. Lupercalia, Feb. 15, had to be replaced with a saint's day.

There were two saints' days close to that date and with the same name: Valentine.

On this new St. Valentine's Day, Feb. 14, the men drew the names of saints to worship — not names of women to sleep with.

Through the years, the church's emphasis on this saint's day diminished and the emphasis on lovers returned. This turn was supported by a medieval belief that birds began to mate on Valentine's Day.

Charles, the duke of Orleans, sent the earliest existing Valentine card in 1415. These cards became increasingly elaborate through the Victorian Era despite the church's efforts to return Valentine's Day to the saints.

Valentine projects were so elegant and complex that they were passed down in families as heirlooms. Some cultures made love tokens, some exchanged exquisite gloves, and some wrote beautiful love letters and poetry.

The first American valentines made of lace sold from $5 to $35 in the 1870s.

The growth of the greeting card industry has cheapened the cost of valentines and lessened the labor that goes into them.

"Valentine's Day is a time for Hallmark to make money," Kirsten Morgan, junior in horticulture, said.

Valentine's Day, however, continues to be a fun day for lovers, friends and families.

If Roman influence seems all but forgotten, think again. One of the most popular visions of Valentine's Day is Cupid. That chubby cherub dates all the way back to Roman mythology as the son of Venus, the love goddess.

Convenience stores provide shoppers last-minute gift resources, sort of

CHRITA CAREY

Imagine Valentine's Day 1997.

Joe is on his way over to Nancy's house to pick her up. He's had a real rough week. He's taken three tests, worked overtime and last night his toilet overflowed.

Although Nancy has been hinting about different gifts for a week now, Joe has totally forgotten this highly advertised holiday.

He pulls into Nancy's driveway in time to see the guy next door walking up his front steps with two-dozen roses.

Immediately Joe freezes ...

Valentine's Day!

He puts the car in reverse and goes to the only 24-hour mecca of fine gifts — the convenience store.

There are many things people can buy at a convenience store: sunglasses, air fresheners, nail clippers, foam coolers, support pantyhose, alcohol, over-priced groceries, dream-catcher earrings, Kansas maps, removable tattoos, school supplies and industrial shoelaces.

Sound appealing?

"We used to order special gifts for Valentine's Day, but we ended up eating our leftovers," Laura Phillips, the manager of Mini Mart in Aggieville, said.

People just don't seem to buy from the convenience store like they used to, Phillips said.

Does this mean standards have risen or memories are improving?

"I think it's pretty cheap to get a loved one something from a convenience store, I could not think of one thing I would buy," Brian Hensley, junior in business education, said.

Other students said they thought of gifts they would accept from a convenient store.

Rachel Williams, junior in pre-health professions and life science, said she wanted the ever popular gasoline gift certificates.

"If someone were to buy me a present from a convenient store it would definitely have to be

Curious about what size to buy? Knowing approximates help out

It's lacy and frilly, or simple and elegant. It's lingerie.

If the Valentine's Day plan is to purchase such an item for a loved one, there are a few guidelines to follow.

First, find out their sizes.

"The biggest problem for men is knowing what size to buy," Patricia Yeater, owner of Patricia's Undercover, said.

The men are typically asked if their girlfriends are small, medium or large, and if they know approximate breast size and hip size.

"These things affect what type of lingerie will look good on a woman," Yeater said.

It's more helpful if they know what size their girlfriend or wife is before they begin shopping, she said.

There are many styles on the market ranging from sexy to kinky. So it is advisable to go armed with the proper information about lingerie.

For those who prefer tamer styles, there are the chemise and the camisole tap-pant suit.

The chemise is satin or silk, and looks like a slip with spaghetti straps.

"It is a safe bet for almost any women," said Amber Larkin, assistant manager of Frederick's of Hollywood in Westridge Mall in Topeka.

It costs about $20 in most stores.

The camisole tap-pant is a satin or silk boxer and shirt combination.

"They are practical and great for young people watching their money, because they can be worn all the time and just not on special occasions," Judy Stuck, owner of Just Judy's, said.

For the slightly more daring types there is the bustier and the teddy. For both of these it is necessary to know the bra size of the women you are purchasing it for, Yeater said.

The bustier is a corset. It's a long lacy bra

Are you alone today? It's time to take action

As Father Time continues his incessant watch-winding, we find ourselves, once again, at that dreaded time when starry-eyed couples profess their undying love in the most romantic way they can — spending money.

Being a proficient consumer is good I suppose, but for the ranks of the unloved, there is very little joy in whispering sweet-nothings to your wine glass while dining alone at Harry's Uptown.

Being alone on lovers' day just isn't easy for the mateless and dateless. There's no place to go without looking like a loveless soul trying to not look like a loveless soul.

So, what are singles supposed to do on Valentine's Day, then?

For some of us, a triple-pepperoni pizza, a gallon of double-chocolate ice cream and reruns on cable might pass the time, but one more episode of Baywatch is just too much. Besides, those beach babes just remind me of all the, uh, stimulating conversation I'm missing out on. That won't cut it. I know — I did it last year.

A trip to Aggieville might suffice to keep the doldrums away. There's always plenty of action there. Who knows — the woman of my dreams might be there, all alone, waiting to soothe my restless heart out of its pathetic and miserable state and into that forbidden ecstasy called passion. I doubt it. It hasn't happened yet, and up until now my life rarely mimics a Robert Redford flick.

VIEWPOINT

STEVE WARE

STEVE WARE is a senior in pre-journalism and mass communications. Steve can reached by email at (seware@ksu.edu).

Perhaps I'm a little too cynical. But at this point, a little cynicism feels good. To the dateless and desperate, Valentine's Day is only a condescending reminder of the emptiness our hearts know only too well.

So I've decided that it will be different this year. Not just for me, but for every lonely-hearts club member who feels as pathetic as I have in the past.

To every single man and woman in Manhattan, I say don't give in to having a terrible day. Don't sell yourself short of enjoying your time. And don't let your roommate's date tell you, "Have a nice evening. See you tomorrow."

Just say, "No. You will see me now, because I am going with you, and you will enjoy my company, because I am kind, I am funny, and dammit, somebody has to want me!"

This leads to this year's plan of action. Be forewarned, it may be a little too treacherous for some, but trust me, it will be like no other Valentine's Day in your history. This time we, the single people of Manhattan, are going to take over Valentine's Day.

Operation V-Day is under way.

Our objective: A tactical strike on the Manhattan-area Valentine's Day hot spots.

Here's the strategy. One singles battalion will advance to Applebee's Grill & Bar. The house will be full. Most tables will seat at least four, but they will definitely be occupied by the enemy, the couples.

So, deceptively tell the hostess you're meeting somebody there. Then pick out the most romantic couple there and move in for the kill. Invite yourself to dine with them. They can't refuse without making a scene, and if they try, just tell them that the hostess insisted, since it was the only open seat in the restaurant. Two new friends right there.

A similar tactic will work at the movies, too. If all of the singles were to converge simultaneously on the theater, one of two things would happen. Either there would be no tickets left for the couples to buy, or even better, seat yourself in every other seat so that the couples would have to split up to watch the show. Who knows — if you're resourceful, you might even be able to pick up on somebody's date that way.

I realize that very few singles will concede to my methodology or my tactics, due mainly to their own self-confidence flaws that tend to breed a non-confrontational character. Fine, forget the treachery. To each their own, just don't stay home. No wallowing in self-pity or gaining needless pounds this year.

At the very least, attempt something you wouldn't normally do. Try a sport you haven't played. Bowl ambidextrous. Shoot pool with a pitching wedge. Or coerce a senior citizen into a doubles game of solitaire. At least you'll have an original comeback to that dreaded question, "What did you do for Valentine's Day?"

Our main theme this holiday is "Enjoy yourself, not somebody else." Just have fun with you, because once you feel comfortable with you, someone else can too.

Thank you, Dr. Joyce Brothers.

Better luck next year.

Study abroad program allows students chance to travel, gain world experience

RACHAEL KRUEGER
staff reporter

Studying for semester after semester on the same campus can become monotonous.

Studying abroad may be the answer.

Take advantage of what is in front of you, Barry Michie, K-State's study abroad director, said. He said many exciting opportunities await students who want to travel.

"The biggest misconception concerning study abroad is that it's too expensive," he said.

Those who study abroad pay tuition at K-State, and they also pay for their plane ticket. Scholarships and financial aid can help with expenses.

Many international exchange programs simply have students pay their home institutions.

K-State students studying in France pay K-State. This covers the costs of French exchange students at K-State and vice versa.

Aside from the change in scenery, some students study abroad to upgrade language proficiency, which may give them an edge on employment possibilities. Several business, architecture, engineering and teaching students consider international experience invaluable knowledge when entering the work force.

"Students are realizing the world is shrinking," Michie said, referring to everyday international communication.

Those with prior knowledge of other nations have the advantage, he said.

K-State links students to over 150 universities around the world and can access any international program to fit individual needs.

Some participants want bucks instead of books. In this case, there are also opportunities to work abroad. Jobs range from busing tables to fulfilling career goals.

Students may choose to work or study abroad for a year, a semester, a summer or a few weeks.

Group or individual travel is another decision facing students. The journey becomes tailored to students' goals.

Amy Ziegler, senior in print journalism and pubic relations, studied abroad in England last spring semester.

"It changed my life," she said.

She said the experience opened her eyes to the fact that there is much more out there than just Manhattan. Her career goals now possess an international aspect.

When students realize they are alone in a foreign country, they experience culture shock. In the process of overcoming that feeling, students learn a lot about themselves, Ziegler said.

Ernest Appiah, an exchange student from Ghana, left his wife and family to study at K-State.

"At home, we don't have enough textbooks," he said. The textbooks available in Ghana usually are not the most recent editions. He said Farrell Library is his greatest resource.

"It's all so different here," Appiah said.

Appiah said not only the resources, but the new climate and food of the United States were a big adjustment for him.

He also said communication is his biggest problem.

"In lectures, I hear very little," he said, adding that despite his English skills, the professors and students talk too fast for him to catch everything.

Appiah said he has much respect for the U.S. educational system and is glad to be here.

Ziegler said she recommends study abroad to everyone for the enriched education and the travel opportunities.

"It's a great way to see the world," she said.

Candidates discuss key issues

NICOLE KIRBY
investigations editor

Six candidates for the City Commission met Wednesday night to publicly discuss issues such as taxes, housing and economic development.

Ralph Wasem, one of the candidates, organized the forum, where the six explained why they wanted commission seats and what policies they would support if elected.

Breta Bloomberg-Ellis, Ed Klimek, Karen McCulloh, Roger Reitz, Edith Stunkel and Wasem each made ten-minute statements, then the group took questions from the audience of about 15 to 20 people.

The candidates' statements reflected involvement in the community.

Bloomberg-Ellis, a local elementary school teacher, concentrated on her connection with the Manhattan citizens.

"I feel like I can relate to people from all walks of life," she said.

She also proposed close monitoring of businesses that receive tax breaks from the city, an internship program between Manhattan Area Technical College and local industry and fostering the Community Youth Council.

Bloomberg-Ellis also said the commission needs to control the process of executing its policies in order to serve the community.

"I really feel process is important because that is the only way we can be fair to people and treat them with respect," she said.

Other candidates said the commission's job was to make policy, and the city administration should be allowed to control the process of carrying out the goals set by the commissioners.

Klimek, general manager at KQLA-FM 103.5, said the staff was capable of implementing commission-created policies.

Controlling the cost of infrastructure and the high turnover rate of residents highlighted Klimek's list of concerns.

"I would like to see the time when our young people can stay here and work and live and raise their families," he said.

McCulloh, former county commissioner, also had a list of concerns, which centered around protecting the local economy from changes, such as the new programs that will become the responsibility of local governments when the federal and state governments cut them from their budgets.

With the precarious standing of Fort Riley, K-State is the most important employer, but even the University isn't entirely reliable for the local economy McCulloh said.

"I think the most important thing is to create a diversity of businesses so if there is a recession at the University, it doesn't affect the city," she said.

Current Commissioner Stunkel agreed that these uncontrollable influences on the economy require anticipation.

She said her experience as commissioner and mayor have provided examples of her clear-thinking. She also works part time at K-State in the Center for Aging.

"One of the reasons I like working part time is because it allows me to do the kind of homework and research I need to do to be a good commissioner," she said.

Reitz, a local physician, said Stunkel and the other members of the current commission are doing a fine job, but some things should change.

"We've got to look at the fluff in our budget and move it around," he said.

He also cited a need for more doctors and specialists in Manhattan.

"Manhattan's going to be a better place when those people finally get here," he said.

Wasem said Manhattan would be a better place if more citizens got involved in the government, but said he planned to represent the interests of everyone in town, not just those residents who are vocal with their concerns.

measure to excuse absences for attending a Landon Lecture without penalizing students for missing quizzes or tests.

Under the resolution, students would have to inform instructors five school days in advance of their absence. Instructors would be able to require students to write a short summary of the lecture.

In other business, senators voted to limit their time for discussion and questions to 10 minutes instead of 7 minutes for discussion and 3 minutes for questions.

"Questions are getting out of hand," Mann said. "Let's get down to business."

Arts and Sciences Senator Sean Tomb said the questions were the heart of Senate meetings.

"This is about the most undemocratic thing I've heard," Tomb said. "We have to ask questions. We need to worry about our job, not our time."

Senate also approved a resolution to commend Engineering Dean Donald Rathbone with a plaque for his continued service to the College of Engineering.

At press time Senate had not finished second readings concerning the Office of Student Activities and Services Fee Increase.

with garters. They typically run anywhere from $35 to $45.

The teddy is made of satin, lace and sheer material. It is full bodied and looks a lot like a one-piece swimsuit. These run around $25.

None of this information does any good if you buy the wrong gift.

"If a woman doesn't feel comfortable in what a man has bought for her. she won't wear it. That is why we usually get returns," Ruby Ortega, sales clerk at Just Judy's, said.

Stick to something simple.

"My best piece of advice for men is to remember women want comfort, elegance and everyday use out of their lingerie," Stuck said.

those lacy red panties rolled up like a rose bud," Susan Neumann, junior in family life and community service, said.

For smokers, a pack — or to splurge — a carton, of their favorite cigarettes plus a red lighter or air fresheners in any color.

For hygienic people, nail files, nail clippers and hair nets make clean gifts.

For passionate people, a bottle of passion fruit flavored Fruitopia.

Laurie Lovitch, senior in criminology, said she thought convenience stores are OK gift centers.

"I think anything picked out from the heart is special. I would really like a winning Powerball ticket," Lovitch said.

"Power lies in us as spiritual beings," Stallings said. "The power arises when we come in communion with our essence."

Stallings further said people have a collective responsibility to themselves as well as to others in the community.

"Our lives don't belong only to us. They belong to the people, to the country, to the world," Stallings said.

He urged people to comfort the disturbed and disturb the comfortable in order to make the world a better place.

The banquet in honor of Boyer, Switzer, Wigfall and Stallings attracted more than 100 people.

"I think this evening is a great necessity because it tends to be spiritually uplifting in a non-sectarian way, not only for African American people but for all," said H. Prentice Baptiste, professor and associate director of the Center for Science Education.

LAFENE: THE FUTURE OF STUDENT HEALTH

Is Lafene moving? If so, is it a boon or a bane?

STORY BY BECKY WINTER

Speculation about Lafene Health Center moving into empty space in Mercy Health Center on Sunset Avenue is receiving mixed reviews.

Lafene is being considered for the move because increased parking would make it more accessible, and it would free up space on campus for classrooms, Lannie Zweimiller, director of Lafene, said.

"The university is looking for space, and Lafene is located strategically for classrooms," Zweimiller said.

Zweimiller also said the move could provide more space for the center.

"We're cramped here now, and it would give student health services a little more elbow room," he said. "If an opportunity were to arise in the future to add a service, we'll have some room to do that. Right now we have no way of doing so."

Bruce Reed, freshman in electrical engineering, said he agrees that the move would add more space.

"I think it would be a good idea because Lafene is kind of small, and it would have more space. It has its drawbacks because the people on campus would have to leave, but a good percentage of the people live off campus anyway," he said.

Zweimiller said Lafene will discuss transportation alternatives with the campus shuttle service if the move is approved.

Currently only 10 to 15 percent of Lafene's patients are walk-ins, because students are required to have an appointment unless it is an emergency, Zweimiller said.

"I think this could be a very positive opportunity. Everybody could benefit," Zweimiller said.

Araminta Haynes, sophomore in correctionals and ethnic studies, said she does not think this is a good opportunity.

"I think it would not benefit the students at all. If you

Advisory committee tries to ensure adequate care

STORY BY SHAWN T. DENTON

A K-State advisory committee has influence over the largest amount of money garnered from student privilege fees.

The Student Health Advisory Committee attempts to ensure adequate health care for K-State students.

"SHAC serves to be a liaison between the student body and the administration of Lafene," Ashley Weekly, junior in public relations and committee member, said. "We deal with issues like health insurance and working with senate on the health privilege fee."

Weekly said that students pay the fee so they can have lower cost at Lafene.

"It helps with services such as lab services and X-rays to remain low," Weekly said.

SHAC has 14 members in its organization. The members are ultimately appointed by the student body president.

"Applications are reviewed and interviews are then constructed," Lannie Zweimiller, director of Lafene Health Center, said. "Then recommendations are made to the student body president."

Weekly said applicants are selected by a panel of students.

"It's not much of a true appointment, but really an interview process," Weekly said. "The current members really do the most of the interviewing. The student body president also sits in and questions."

One goal of the selection process was to form a diverse committee.

"We try to get diversity in both ethnic as well as the college representational community," Zweimiller said. "We see that the entire campus is well represented.

Fine Arts Council has five seats to be filled this year.

Three will be elected to one-year positions and two will be appointed by the student body president after the general election.

FAC allocates money generated by the fine arts line-item fee every student pays. Council Chairwoman Elizabeth Hochberg said the fee generates about $250,000.

FAC sets percentage amounts for each department instead of allocating specific dollar amounts. The council also sets aside a small reserve for special allocations to departments and student groups.

"There are nine departments that receive a percentage of the fee," Hochberg, senior in premedicine, said. "And, student groups designated by the UAB as under Fine Arts Council come to us. We look at the groups and can give them money from the fine arts reserve."

The departments that benefit from the Fine Arts fee are the Departments of Speech Communication, Theater and Dance, Music, Art, Architecture, English, the International Student Center, McCain Auditorium and the Office of Diversity and Dual Career Development, Hochberg said.

The council also approves money for capital improvements in the departments.

"If a department wants to buy something like computer equipment or a bass amplifier, they must have it approved by Fine Arts Council," Hochberg said.

Students interested in the appointed positions can pick up applications in the Office of Student Activities and Services shortly after elections, Hochberg said.

After applications have been filled out, students will be interviewed, and the president will appoint someone to fill the seats. Of the two appointed, one will be chosen as chairperson of the council.

Manhattan man kills wife, self after marital difficulties

County's 1st homicides of year.

A Manhattan man shot and killed himself and his wife in the couple's mobile home Friday morning.

Officers responding to the 911 call at 8504 East U.S. Highway 24 found the bodies of Damian Mendoza, 26, and his wife, Rebecca, 23.

Believing there was someone still in the house with a gun, officers stormed the house, finding the bodies, Pottawatomie County Under Sheriff Bill Henry said.

The 911 call, at 9:16 a.m., reported a domestic dispute with shots fired, he said.

Pottawatomie County detective Gerald Schmidt said a friend of Rebecca Mendoza — whom he would not identify — was in the house at the time of the shooting. She ran from the house after the weapon malfunctioned when Damian Mendoza tried to shoot her.

Schmidt said the couple had been having marital difficulties, and Rebecca Mendoza had gone to the mobile home with her friend to talk to her husband.

The Mendozas' children had been left with a babysitter at the time of the shooting.

These were Pottawatomie County's first homicides this year.

▶ NATION AND WORLD

• AMERICAN AIRLINES ATTEMPTS TO LURE BACK PASSENGERS.

DALLAS — With a pilots strike averted, American Airlines quickly switched gears to keep its planes in the air and tried to lure back passengers with hefty discounts and double frequent-flier miles.

But some angry travelers said they won't be bought.

The pilots' strike was blocked by a presidential order only minutes after it was called early Saturday, and American said fewer than 100 of 2,200 daily departures had been canceled.

The cancelations involved flights to Europe, Japan and South America, and had been announced in advance of the midnight Friday strike deadline because the company did not want to have planes stranded at foreign airports.

• DIPLOMAT COULD BE ARRESTED FOR ROLE IN FATAL CAR CRASH.

WASHINGTON — In a rare move, the Republic of Georgia lifted immunity for the second ranking diplomat in its Washington embassy, clearing the way for his arrest in a fatal car crash, the State Department said Saturday.

George Makharadze could be charged with crimes reportedly as serious as involuntary manslaughter in the death of 16-year-old Joviane Waltrick.

At the crash site Saturday, Viviane Wagner, the girl's mother said, "Immunity is not impunity ... was it necessary for my daughter to have left for people to understand?"

Wagner, a Brazilian immigrant, has campaigned since the accident to force a decision in the immunity case.

• SPOKESMAN DENIES JONBENET HAD HISTORY OF SEXUAL ABUSE.

BOULDER, Colo. — JonBenet Ramsey did not have a history of sexual abuse, the 6-year-old girl's doctor and a family spokesman said after an autopsy indicated she was sexually assaulted and strangled.

Portions of the autopsy released Friday revealed chronic inflammation of the girl's vagina, which could be an indication of prior sexual abuse, family spokesman Patrick Korten said.

"In this case, it is not," he said.

JonBenet's pediatrician, Dr. Francesco Beuf, said he never saw any indication that she was sexually abused.

JonBenet, the 1995 Little Miss Colorado, was found strangled in the basement of her family's home Dec. 26, and authorities have released few details about the investigation.

• PALESTINIAN INTELLIGENCE HEAD, INTERROGATORS ARRESTED.

NABLUS, West Bank — Palestinian police arrested the head of Palestinian military intelligence in Nablus and two interrogators suspected of torturing a prisoner to death.

Two officials in the Nablus governor's office were also arrested.

Capt. Hani Ayad, head of Nablus military intelligence, was being held along with two of his interrogators after an arrest warrant was issued by Palestinian Attorney General Khaled Kidreh and approved by Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat. Ayad and his interrogators are suspected of beating Yousef Baba, 32, who died earlier this month in Nablus' Rafidiyah Hospital after being held for a month without charge.

• PRESIDENT PROMISES TO TALK; WARLORD RELEASES 5 HOSTAGES.

DUSHANBE, Tajikistan — A Tajik warlord released five of his 11 hostages Sunday after the government threatened to use force and the president of this Central Asian country promised to meet him in face-to-face talks.

Bakhram Sadirov freed three United Nations workers and two Russian journalists. He was still holding five U.N. personnel, including two military observers and three refugee workers, as well as Tajikistan's security minister.

The freed hostages were taken to a government military garrison at Obigarm, a village 50 miles from the capital of Dushanbe.

MINH TRAN, sophomore in chemical engineering, helps customers Friday evening in the Dillons Superstore.

Paper or Plastic

Quality grocery bagging sacks one K-State student a trip to national competition

STORY BY CHRISTINA SMITH

Speed is not the only thing to consider when bagging groceries.

"A quality bagger is better than a fast bagger," Minh Tran, sophomore in chemical engineering, said.

Tran should know. He has been competing for the past three years in grocery-bagging competitions. In November, he won the state competition in Kansas City, Kan., against the Price Chopper grocery store chain, an accomplishment that has earned him a trip to Houston to compete for the national title.

To win the national title he must be able to bag two paper and three plastic bags full of groceries in as little as 30 to 45 seconds, while being judged in five categories.

"During competition you are judged on weight, technique, appearance, distribution and speed," Tran said.

When he is not studying for a chemistry test or competing, Tran can be found bagging groceries at the Dillons Superstore.

Though he said he does bag fast, he doesn't sack as fast as when he is competing.

"You wouldn't want your groceries sacked that fast," Cindy Wall, customer service manager at Dillons, said.

That is because the sacks weigh more and have more items in them during a competition.

"In the store, I try to bag the way the customers want me to," Tran said.

Co-workers said Tran is known for customer service around the Dillons store.

"He is always friendly to the customers," Ely Sprenkle, a co-worker, said.

Hard work probably helped get his job as a floor coordinator.

As a floor coordinator, he runs the front of the store. He is the first person customer service problems are taken to, and he decides who gets to go on breaks and leave at the end of shifts.

"He is a good boss and an all-around nice guy," Heather Ubel, a co-worker, said.

Ubel said Tran's success doesn't seem to have changed him much.

"He doesn't like to talk about his sacking," Ubel said.

Other co-workers said he just isn't used to people recognizing his name and commenting on his successes.

Tran himself has little to say about his recent success except, "All this publicity is new."

Senate passes altered OSAS fee increase

▸ Office of Student Activities and Services budget increases to $169,000 to allow for salary raises, maintenance.

BENJAMIN YODER
staff reporter

Senate approved the Office of Student Activities and Services Fee increase bill late Thursday night.

The OSAS budget finances the daily operational costs and salaries for office personnel. Salaries were raised more than $10,000 because of minimum-wage increases.

The original bill set the budget at nearly $160,000, but five amendments increased the amount to more than $169,000.

An amendment to increase the salaries of the Senate chair, vice chair, attorney general and student body vice president passed, but not without debate. It called for a $1,000 increase for the attorney general position, $600 for the student body vice president, $500 for the Senate vice chair and $60 for the Senate chair.

Sean Tomb, arts and sciences senator, was against the amendment. He said the increase was outrageous and wasn't in the best interest of students.

"The total increase is mind-boggling," Tomb said. "Let's stick it to them. It must be the theme of the night."

Jason Ross, engineering senator, said he agreed with Tomb.

"If they were in it for the money, they'd go somewhere else," Ross said.

Other senators said the pay should fit the time these positions require and the added responsibilities.

"It's pathetic it's so low," Craig Korth, arts and sciences senator, said.

Four thousand dollars was added to the budget for new computers and upgrades in the current system in another amendment.

The current system requires senators to wait in line to use outdated computers.

"We can spend some money now and save some later, or we could spend no money now and a lot later," Senate Governmental Relations Chair Tracey Mann said.

"This room is full of a bunch of beanie weenies," Mann said. "Let's support ourselves."

Senate Allocations Chair Bret Glendening agreed with Mann. He said the amendment did not need to be debated.

"Why this is an issue blows my mind," Glendening said. "It's high time that we face the music and not scrutinize every budget proposal and ask if we need it."

A third amendment added a $500 honorarium for the Student Governing Association retreat.

The honorarium will set aside money for next year's Senate to plan a retreat to learn proper etiquette and the hierarchy of office.

Arts and Sciences Senator Mandy Reese said the money was needed so the future Senate will have a starting place to plan the retreat.

"You've got to have money to get started," Reese said. "Let's just get the quality program."

Glendening said the amendment was wrong. He said raising funds was the responsibility of the Senate vice chair and student body vice president.

"We're opening this can of worms again," Glendening said.

"Granted, it's a nice idea to say 'vice president and vice chair, you don't have to worry about gathering funds,'" Glendening said. "That's their job. We need to let them do their job. Let them do the work. Let them get the experience."

Tomb said there was no reason to debate the amendment. He said the future Senate should raise its own money.

"You've got to get your selfish attitudes out of here," Tomb said.

Another amendment to the bill added $250 to the budget for judicial notebooks. The notebooks include the SGA constitution and rules for the judicial board.

In other business, Senate approved the Student Publications equipment fee increase and resolutions to excuse absences for Landon Lectures, to commend Dean of the College of Engineering Donald Rathbone and change Senate standing rules.

Regents name 1st-ever female ESU president

ASSOCIATED PRESS

EMPORIA — The provost and vice chancellor for academic affairs at the University of Wisconsin at Whitewater has been named the 14th president of Emporia State University.

Kay Schallenkamp was picked Saturday and is the first woman to head a Kansas Board of Regents institution. She will start Aug. 1, replacing Robert Glennen, who is retiring after 13 years.

The regents chose Schallenkamp from among three candidates. Board members met in executive session at the campus Thursday, Friday and Saturday to interview the finalists.

The other candidates were Daniel Ball, vice president for academic affairs at Southern Arkansas at Magnolia, and Jerald Tunheim, president of Dakota State at Madison, S.D.

A 15-member search committee composed of faculty, staff, students, alumni and community members screened the applicants this winter.

The University of Wisconsin at Whitewater is a public school of about 12,000 students.

Before going to Wisconsin, Schallenkamp was provost at Chadron State in Nebraska and was dean of graduate studies and research at Northern State in Aberdeen, S.D. She earned a doctorate in communication disorders from the University of Colorado.

Ford Hall programs teach residents about nutrition, fitness, scholarships

RYAN O'HALLORAN
staff reporter

Ford Hall residents will have a chance to learn more about physical fitness and eating right when the resident assistant staff presents "Day-by-Day: Healthy eating and exercising" today.

The informational lecture is part of a year-long series operated by the resident assistants at Ford Hall.

This is one of two scheduled programs for the month of February. Later this month, there will be a lecture on student government and hall involvement.

The program will involve informing residents about what the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex offers and how to eat right at the Derby complex.

"We're having somebody from the Rec come over and say what's available over there and how the fitness consultants can work with you," Jenn Cink, resident assistant, said. "And we're also having a nutritionist from Derby come out and speak."

While most meetings average around 30-40 people, the turnout has been good as of late, and Cink doesn't expect that to change.

"It seems to be more of a popular topic," Cink said.

Ford residents are made aware of the programs through a variety of outlets.

"We have a lot of flyers up, and we put individual postings on every door," Cink said. "The turnouts vary, usually. You can't really tell because some nights are bad depending on tests. We hope to get about 35 people, but we expected only 20-40 at the last one."

But a January program regarding scholarships drew over 120 residents.

"You never really know," Cink said. "We were shocked at that one — we were expecting only 40 people max, so it blew us away."

Cink said the idea of having a lecture on physical fitness and health came up at a staff meeting because she's aware of many people who are unaware of what, for example, the Rec Complex offers.

"All of us came together with some ideas and a couple of us initially wanted to do this," Cink said.

"A few people are uninformed. I've heard people talking down in the lobby, and one person would say, 'I just got back from a workout that they gave me,' and someone else would say, 'I didn't know they even had that over there.'

"From hearing people talk, you can tell what they don't know about."

A representative from the Rec Complex will explain what activities and programs are available for students while the Derby representative will go over menus from the complex.

"She's going to talk about how you choose off the food service menus," Cink said. "And how you can choose which meals are healthy and which not to eat."

Cink said the group doesn't have to do the projects, but they want to provide a service to their residents.

"We're not required to have so many a month, but we set a goal before the year," said Cink. "We break up the responsibilities — one does publicity, one does contacts, and it was a lot more stressful doing everything individually like we did last semester.

"It's rewarding, though, when you have a good turnout."

SHAC members should be elected so they will be accountable to all

The Student Health Advisory Committee may be made up of students, but it isn't accountable to the student body.

Members of the group, after an application process, are appointed by the student body president and approved by the Student Governing Association.

It is possible for a president with a certain agenda to put people with similar views on the board, regardless of the feelings of the majority of students. For example, if a future president wanted to push the unpopular required health insurance proposal, he would just appoint people who agree with this idea.

As an advisory committee, SHAC cannot allocate money or set policies, so it makes recommendations to be approved by SGA.

So in effect, from selection of members through policy making, SHAC is accountable to the executive and legislative branches of SGA, not the students at large.

SHAC, which deals with topics as important as students' health and a student fee, which is larger than any other, is empowered to come up with ideas and policies for Lafene Health Center that are invariably passed by SGA.

Other groups, such as Union Governing Board and the Board of Student Publications, are elected – at least in part – by the students.

So for a more equitable SHAC, a few of the members should be elected by the nameless masses of students who frequent Lafene.

It isn't necessary that all members be elected. After all, there is something to be said for an appointment process that chooses dedicated people instead of popular ones.

But when the dedicated people have no accountability to those affected by their work, we have a problem.

freeing the inner child makes life more bearable

Somewhere between the disappearance of the tooth fairy and the traumatic onset of puberty, the rules of fun got warped. The things we used to do as kids for fun are no longer acceptable for people older than 15.

No more public nose picking. No more unexplained fits of giggling. No more tantrums in the cereal aisle of Dillons. No more playing doctor.

The strange thing is there are all sorts of books out there aimed at helping people better themselves, focused on helping them have fun. The truth is we need look no further than those little people whom we call, among other choice words, children.

Kids know how to have fun.

Give a kid a box and they're amused for hours on end. Give a college student a box and they either throw it away or puke in it. No space shuttles or igloos for us.

T'was a glorious time when the art of decorum was an unknown concept. Public flatulence was not an event at which to blush, but one at which to laugh hysterically. I was magically transported back to this time a few weeks ago while sledding with my best friend, Ben. He would giggle with every step he'd take back up the hill.

"You wanna know why I'm laughing?" he said. "I'm farting every time I take a step."

Adult-like? No. Fun? Oh yeah.

Laughing at truly funny, yet socially-awkward situations is something that adults are expected to not do. Why on Earth are we expected to hold back our giggles, creating an ever-embarrassing "grrsssrk" noise through our noses?

If that guy in your French class insists on blowing his nose at the most inopportune moments, let that guffaw free.

If someone in your Biology class says "orgasm" instead of "organism," snicker with them (never at them, of course). A good giggle is always a good tension reliever. Adults just seem to forget that.

One of the most satisfying things in the world for me to do as a kid was to litter the sidewalk with chalk graffiti. There was nothing better than a bucket of fat chalk and a vast canvas of concrete. Now, the only chalking that's acceptable for college students is on campus sidewalks, announcing upcoming events.

Tsk-tsk.

Flopping down on the grass and looking for hidden messages in the clouds has been exchanged for drooling incoherently over textbooks. Our curiosity has dried up, leaving us to rifle through the back of our books for the answers.

When was the last time you broke into a dance to the tune of a catchy song in public (sober, mind you)? When I was five, I liked to dance around to the sounds of the Oakridge Boys at Pizza Inn when we went there for dinner. For some reason, I think if I did that now, people wouldn't find it so cute. It's still a fun thing to do though, as long as you're not violating anyone else's personal space.

Then there was the Kool-Aid. Guzzled by the gallon back in the days of youth, it's probably a little inappropriate to show up to class with a wet red moustache. I highly recommend returning to this beverage in lieu of your everyday fare. There are a plethora of new fruity flavors to enjoy, unless you have a fear of onset diabetes.

Here are a few other things that should carry over from childhood:

- Splish-splashy baths with Mr. Bubble and a few action figures
- Occasional thumb-sucking
- Singing in public
- Tree climbing
- Bedtime stories
- Making snow angels
- Pick-up games of Duck Duck Goose
- Coloring books

Being an adult doesn't always mean we have to act like the preconceived notion of what an adult should be.

Sometimes we should worry less about embarrassment and more about enjoying life. If we could just let the little kid in us free once in a while, there would be many more Kool-Aid-stained smiles to go around.

• SAINTS NOT WORSHIPPED

Editor,

I just wanted to bring a little error in your Valentine's Day coverage to light. I certainly doubt early Christian men drew names of saints to worship on Feb. 14, as stated in Rachael Krueger's article.

Saints have never been, and never will be, worshipped. They are only asked to intercede for their brothers and sisters here on earth before the throne of God. God is the only One who Christians worship.

This probably seems like a small distinction, but it is a very important one.

Speaking out in defense of the hot pink collar worker

I throw my underwear at men, sometimes professors, and I get paid for it.

What would you do to pay for a college education?

Your tuition or rent may come out of your parents' bank account.

Mine comes out of my G-string.

The truth is, I would do a lot more than take off my clothes to pay for school, but luckily I don't have to.

This is the column I wasn't going to write, but as both a feminist critic of the sex industry and as a stripper, I felt obligated to.

I started dancing at Dr. Love's following the spring semester of last year to avoid spending another summer on food stamps. If it weren't for my job, I couldn't have afforded school this year.

My opinions don't pay the rent. Just as I may be opposed to capitalism, but I still have to pay taxes, and although I'm a pacifist, my taxes pay for military toilet seats, rather than socialized medical care.

It says a lot about our society that stripping is virtually the only occupation where a woman can earn (and I do mean earn) as much money as a man.

It is not the safest of professions. We have no stripper's union, and few women working within the sex industry could win a court case if she were raped by a customer.

In reality, our society condones prostitution through the legal sex industry.

First, by definition, prostitution is a sexual favor, and I don't know what stripping is other than a sexual favor.

Second, if the law condones rape as an extension or as a repercussion of what we are paid to do, that means the law is condoning prostitution.

It is important to point out that the issue is not sex, it is sexism. It is validating as a feminist to be exposed to sexism in its most pronounced and raw form.

The message is that nudity is the problem, but if women are exploited with their clothes on it's acceptable.

To attack strippers rather than the mainstream exploitation of women in the media, especially the promotion of anorexia through the idolatry of women like Kate Moss as a standard of femininity, is absurd.

The accessibility of mass reproductions of these types of images is what targets young women and has already resulted in an epidemic.

One positive aspect of stripping I hadn't counted on was its function in presenting an alternative image of femininity to mainstream pornography and beauty magazines.

Unlike the exploitation of women in pictures that dehumanize or reduce women to dimensionless, airbrushed objects, my sister strippers and I are real women, complete with bruises or stretch marks.

I've never had a job where I didn't find some form of gender-based discrimination or harassment. The difference is, now I get paid to be sexually harassed.

When I was growing up, like most girls properly socialized, a.k.a. brainwashed, into an accepted standard, or should I say tolerance, for feminine ambition, I wanted to be a ballerina.

Rich girls may have the opportunity to take ballet, but on the other side of the tracks it is another kind of dancer.

We don't wear point shoes and pastel leotards, but high heels and fishnet. One is seen as graceful and beautiful. One is a threat to society.

There really isn't much of difference between my stripping to "I Want Your Sex," and my white collar counter-part dancing to "Swan Lake."

We do get our share of psychos at Love's, but nothing compares to some of the homicidal hate-mail I get.

As for Dr. Love's character, Bill may be rough around the edges, and the man can growl, but he has a sensitivity and protective paternal affection that has made an atmosphere for the dancers that is laid back and comforting.

He is an example to me, as one who was a dancer himself for six years and is now an entrepreneur. He lives in a world that isn't candy-coated or sterilized by statistics and academic jargon.

Dr. Love's is both a source of financial aid and a source of sanity for me. After jumping through academic hoops all day, my job resensitizes me to my humanity.

CHRIS HANSEN, STUDENT BODY PRESIDENT

A PRESIDENTIAL HONOR

12th president catalyst for University changes

STORY BY CLAUDETTE RILEY • PORTRAIT BY STEVE HEBERT

Big dreams and strong leadership in the past decade have reversed a downward spiral in everything from academics to athletics, but President Jon Wefald continues to be a tireless cheerleader for K-State.

Wefald has also been called a walking encyclopedia of the University's success and achievement.

Hired in July 1986, Wefald's tenure as the University's 12th president has seen enrollment increase from 15,000 to around 20,000 full- or part-time students.

The enrollment jump is one of the many reasons Chris Hansen, student body president, was co-author of a commendation through Student Governing Association to celebrate Wefald's tenure and talents.

The resolution to declare Sunday, the 134th birthday of the University, Jon Wefald Day was passed by unanimous consent by Student Senate on Oct. 3, 1996.

"He's been at the University for 10 years, and we started looking at all the things that have happened during that time," Hansen, senior in nuclear engineering, said. "We just wanted to thank him from the students."

Hansen said he appreciates the work and dedication Wefald has shown the University.

"He tries to approach problems with an open manner and listens," he said. "He has created an atmosphere of joint-governance. As the president, he ultimately has the power but delegates a lot of decision-making power out to students and faculty."

Whether he is talking to high schools, rotary clubs or alumni, Wefald is never slow to remind audiences about the success of K-State students and faculty.

His concerted effort to enroll the best and brightest students began with hiring recent graduates to visit the 304 school districts in Kansas and has resulted in garnering about 35 percent of the state's valedictorians and salutatorians.

"I talk about the 200-plus academic programs here and the quality of our students. We've become the university of choice since 1990 for the top high-school students in Kansas. We're getting the most No. 1s and No. 2s," Wefald said.

"We've proved beyond a shadow of a doubt that we have the students and faculty to make things happen."

Wefald has described himself as a no-more-than-average high-school student. After getting a 2.5 and 3.0 grade point average his freshman year at Pacific Lutheran College, he made straight A's and graduated cum laude in history. He earned a master's degree from Washington State, and by age 25, had his doctorate from Michigan.

He attributed the turn-around to doubt expressed by a Minot, N.D., high-school teacher who said he wasn't college material.

"I think it was the challenge of my high school English teacher telling me that I wouldn't succeed," Wefald said. "It took me the first part of my freshman year to realize I was just as smart as everyone else."

Wefald said any student with average intelligence, confidence and a never-give-up attitude can succeed.

"Expect big things of yourself. People don't dream big enough," he said.

Cats fall to Cyclones in final minutes of game

IOWA STATE'S Kenny Pratt grimaces while trying to pass the ball around K-State's Marcus McCollough Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum. K-State couldn't stop the Cyclones, who beat the Cats, 62-58.

Up until the last six minutes of Saturday's game, it appeared K-State would gain its biggest win of the season over No. 9 Iowa State. But that six-minute stretch resembled the stretches the Cats had during their 10-game losing streak, aiding the Cyclones in a 62-58 victory.

After a Gerald Eaker put-back with 6:04 left in the game, the Cats would not score another field goal until a meaningless three-pointer by Marcus McCollough at the buzzer.

Two key plays highlighted this stretch that buried the Cats. The first came at the 2:51 mark when Eaker was fouled by Cyclone center Klay Edwards. Eaker hit the front end of a one-and-one, giving the Cats a five-point lead, 55-50.

At the 2:47 mark, Edwards tried to get away with the same foul on Eaker, who is a 54-percent free-throw shooter. This time, an intentional foul was called on Edwards, giving Eaker two shots and the Cats the ball afterward. With the two free-throws and the following possession, the Cats had the opportunity for a four-point play that would stretch the lead to nine.

Eaker missed the free-throws, and Shawn Rhodes missed on a turn-around jump shot on the possession. The result was one point off of four free throws.

Cyclone coach Tim Floyd admitted that he told Edwards to foul Eaker both times.

"Yes, I told him to do it," Floyd said. "Teams do it all the time. You're always scouting out who you want to put on the line. Clay thought Gerald couldn't shoot free-throws well and wanted him at the line."

K-State coach Tom Asbury said the missed free throws were a huge difference.

"Those were big. It doesn't help any, but getting no defensive rebounds in the last five minutes was the difference," he said.

While Asbury downplayed the free throws, Floyd said it sparked his team.

"We thought we were in real trouble with the intentional foul. We were fortunate they didn't make them," he said. "It was a real emotional lift for our team to get away from that with only one point given."

Cyclone guard Dedric Willoughby carried that emotional lift with him down the court, draining a three-pointer at the 2:25 mark. The score brought the Cyclones to within two, 55-53.

"I feel that if I get somewhat of a good look, I'll make it, no matter what the circumstances are," Willoughby said.

The play sparked a 12-0 run that carried the Cyclones to victory. Leading the way in that stretch was Cyclone forward Kenny Pratt, who scored eight points in the final 3:32 of the game and finished with a team-high 20 points. His two free throws with 27 seconds remaining gave the Cyclones a 59-55 lead.

"I have to give my teammates the credit for setting screens for me on our offensive plays," Pratt said. "My objective was to get to the line. Fortunately I stepped up and made the free throws we needed."

Swartzendruber's defense halts three-point threat

SUN DEE MILLS
staff reporter

Iowa State guard Dedric Willoughby has had an injury-plagued season, keeping him out of part or all of six Big 12 games. But in Bramlage Coliseum Saturday afternoon, a new complication kept him from scoring his average 18.5 points: Wildcat guard Aaron Swartzendruber.

Willoughby plays an average of 33 minutes per game and set a Cyclone school record Feb. 9 when he hit nine three-pointers against Kansas.

In his 40 minutes against the Cats, he went four of fourteen from the field and three of nine from the three-point line. Willoughby himself attributed his performance to Swartzendruber.

"He was probably the best defender I've seen this year." Willoughby said after the game.

Cyclone coach Tim Floyd said Swartzendruber and guard Chris Griffin's efforts on Willoughby were relentless.

"He was fantastic," Floyd said. "I told he and Griffin both after the game that they did a great job on Dedric. He didn't have many good looks, and you can credit their defense for that."

Floyd said he recognized Swartzendruber's face-guarding, because the Cyclones often use that tactic themselves.

"We were trying to screen. You can tell good defensive players when they don't quit on screens," Floyd said. "A lot of guys will just die when they get screened and not fight through it. Griffin and Swartzendruber both were relentless in terms of their effort on that end of the floor."

Willoughby said Swartzendruber kept slipping through the screens to give him trouble.

"He did a great job," Willoughby said. "He was really physical and stuck to me."

Swartzendruber said the dubious honor of defending Willoughby was difficult.

"He's a great offensive player," Swartzendruber said. "You never know what he's doing."

Swartzendruber's two mistakes cost the Cats eight points. With four seconds to go in the first half and at the 11:27 mark in the second half, Swartzendruber fouled Willoughby on a three-pointer.

Willoughby, as comfortable behind the charity stripe as he is behind the three-point line, sunk five of his six free shots.

"The fouls on the threes aren't the wisest thing," K-State coach Tom Asbury said. "But it happens from time to time when you're coming through screens."

A Willoughby head fake helped him get past the Swartzendruber defense and successfully sink a crucial trey when the Cats were up 55-50.

"There are a lot of great players in the Big 12, and Willoughby is one of them," Swartzendruber said. "He stepped up at the end and made the big shot.

"He showed everyone why he's an all-American candidate."

Asbury was pleased with Swartzendruber's efforts despite the disappointing loss.

"Aaron did a terrific job on Dedric," Asbury said. "He couldn't be played better than that. If people say, 'Dedric didn't have a good night,' it's because of Aaron."

Quality coaches few and far between in today's basketball world

Good coaches are hard to find.

And this elite continues to diminish, which could be even scarier.

You have coaches who can't coach, coaches who can't recruit and coaches who just can't deal with people.

It is so hard to find the total package in a coach anymore.

TODD STEWART

TODD STEWART is a junior in secondary education/English. You can e-mail comments to Todd at (toddvs@ksu.edu).

In college basketball, you can probably count them on two hands. In college football, you can do about the same.

Take Kansas coach Roy Williams, one of the classiest guys in the business today.

Putting aside all my dislike for the school down the road, it is still hard not to admire Williams. He has developed one of the most successful programs in the nation and taken no shortcuts to get there.

He can recruit with any school in the nation and takes only the cream of the crop. He develops good players into good people. For Williams, it is about more than just a game.

And when the game is on the line, Williams can push the team to the win. Plain and simple, Williams knows the game and knows how to win.

Williams, however, is an exception in this day and age when all people think they are coaches.

Look no further than Phoenix Suns coach Danny Ainge.

Ainge is fresh out of his NBA playing days and was asked to take over the reins of the struggling team early into this season. The problem with Ainge is he is completely underqualified.

He has very little experience on NBA sidelines as a coach, and just because he was a player, this is a new ball game. In fact, it is a new ballpark.

Let me put this in perspective. You would not try to turn a patient into a doctor. No matter how many knee surgeries someone has encountered, they are in no way, shape or form ready to perform a knee surgery themselves.

Patients would have to educate themselves and study before that day could become a reality. In any field, an uneducated teacher is doing an injustice to the entire field. Everyone hurts from this.

At K-State, however, the verdict is not out.

Football coach Bill Snyder cannot yet be called a great football coach. He has turned this program around and always fares well in the Midwest recruiting battleground. However, Snyder still has not pushed himself into the upper echelon of coaching, because in the Bill Snyder era at K-State, the Wildcats have never beaten a team they should not have.

Great coaches get great performances out of good players. While I will admit Snyder is the best thing to hit K-State football since, well, ever, there still is work to be done, and Snyder knows it.

Basketball coach Tom Asbury is the same way.

When it comes to the Xs and Os on the bench, I would take Asbury every day of the week against almost any coach in America. That is not an exaggeration.

Asbury knows basketball, and he knows it well, but recruiting has been the thorn in Asbury's side.

With the possible exception of my friend Manny Dies, Asbury has yet to pull down a blue-chip high-school prospect. Look no further than the offensive production of this year's team and the Cats' lack of a scoring punch, and it comes down to talent.

Asbury's mastery of the Xs and Os can take a team only so far before it really boils down to the other team having better players.

As with Snyder, the verdict on Asbury is not out. Sooner or later, Snyder will be able to push his team over the hump, and Asbury will get the players he needs at this level.

But in today's tumultuous coaching world, we at K-State have it good with Asbury and Snyder. It could be worse.

After all, we could be at Oklahoma.

Dorodnova upset in anticipated match

SHANE MCCORMICK
sports writer

The K-State women's tennis team improved to 3-1 on the season with a 6-3 victory over Wichita State Saturday at the Cottonwood Racquet Club in Manhattan.

The Cats took four of six matches in singles competition, and four of the matches went to three sets.

The closest and most anticipated match of the day came at the No. 1 spot, where Yana Dorodnova faced Shocker Lisa Field. Dorodnova came into the contest ranked No. 9, while Field came in at No. 18.

Dorodnova got off to a quick start, winning the first set, 6-4. Field returned the favor in the second, taking the set 6-4. Both players exchanged games in the third set, forcing a tie-breaker at 6-all. In the end, Field prevailed, winning the tie-breaker 8-6 and taking the match.

"Yana had a difficult time attacking her. She couldn't hurt her consistently," Cat coach Steve Bietau said. "Field just stayed consistent. She never took herself out of any of the points."

Junior Lena Piliptchak pulled her three-set match out against Jane White. After winning the first set, Piliptchak dropped the second set, 6-3. She rebounded in the third, taking the set, 6-3.

Also pulling out a three-set thriller was Cat freshman Aisha Butt, who beat Nikki Plant. After winning the first set, Butt dropped the second, 6-2. Throughout the second set, Butt was openly frustrated with her play on the court.

"Being used to winning helps. She expects that to happen," Bietau said. "Now she just needs more experience to keep on track for the whole match."

Also in singles action, junior Dinah Watson made her first appearance of the season. Watson missed the first three duals, recovering from melanoma on her knee. Playing at the No. 3 spot, Watson posted a 6-3, 6-1 over Annette Hartman.

"It felt really good to get back on to the court," Watson said. "I felt a little bit rusty and tired out there, but I was mentally tough today."

Dorodnova bounced back from her singles loss to team up with Piliptchak to serve up a victory at the No. 1 doubles spot. The Cat duo beat Alison Passmore and Jane White, 8-5. Passmore and White came into the contest ranked No. 2 in doubles.

After trailing 5-2, Dorodnova and Piliptchak rallied off six straight games to take the match.

"They just never backed off," Bietau said. "WSU kept coming into the net off every ball. Sometimes you have the tendency to sit back and let them control the net. Yana and Lena didn't let that happen."

At No. 2 doubles, Butt and senior Karen Nicholson were defeated by Field and Hartman, 8-3. It was Butt and Nicholson's first action together in doubles this season.

Watson and junior Chris Schulte posted an 8-2 win at the No. 3 spot over Plant and Colleen McLarty.

The Cats will face another Missouri Valley Conference opponent this Friday when they play host to Tulsa.

POOH-TOPIA INVASION

JILL JARSULIC/Collegian
TELLING THE STORY of all his friends and relations, Rabbit signs and talks to Eeyore and Winnie the Pooh. Cleveland Signstage Theatre brought the show to McCain Auditorium Sunday.

Production adds sign language to Pooh

REVIEW BY CHARLE SIOUX CHARLETON

Disney has created a Pooh-topia within our society. Pooh and friends appear on clothing of every size and shape, home furnishings, books and greeting cards.

It's here a Pooh, there a Pooh, everywhere a Pooh. My senses are already Pooh-inundated. When it comes to Pooh, I've been there and done that.

However, the Cleveland Signstage Theatre production of Winnie the Pooh in McCain Auditorium on Sunday was a sign of originality. It was delightful and imaginative.

Before I venture further into the Hundred Acre Wood, there is one thing that sets the Cleveland Signstage Theatre apart from other children's theater. It's the signing.

The company combines the voice of one actor while another signs their lines. The actor who played Pooh, David S. Prince, is deaf. He signed his lines and another actor spoke for him. That actor, Valerie Meachum, played Christopher Robin.

It was a bit disconcerting when Pooh and Christopher Robin were on stage together and Prince signed his lines while Meachum spoke them.

Most of the other characters signed on stage while their voices were spoken by people off stage, which helped. Nevertheless, the signing added to the production rather than detracted from it.

And there was so much wonderment going on it was hard not to enjoy the production. What made it fun was the professional attitude of the actors and the way they made their characters so easy to understand.

Pooh, Piglet, Eeyore, Rabbit, Kanga and Roo were identifiable but acted with an originality beyond what Disney gives us. The difference between Disney and Signstage is the difference between fast food (Disney, complete with marketing) and home cookin' (Signstage).

Review
Theater

It had a homier feeling. The setting was simple, the costumes were silly, and there was a lot of slapstick humor. The jokes were obvious, but they got the laughs.

There were some changes that made the production more Signstage-able. For example, Eeyore had a Southern accent.

There were three scenes that were the highlights of the play. Judging from the laughter in McCain, they were other people's favorites, too.

First, of course, Pooh got his head stuck in a honey jar. As he ran around on stage trying to get the jar off his head, he kept running into the playground equipment and taking pratfalls.

Piglet was mistaken by Kanga for little Roo and ended up getting a bath. Piglet and Roo were both played by Ray Seal. Seal was tall but played two really small characters, and believably so, thanks to terrific pretending by the rest of the cast.

Kanga, performed by Elizabeth Quinn, had a New York-Jewish-mother accent, which was a hoot. Quinn was definitely smaller than Seal but did a great job wrestling Piglet into a tiny tub and scrubbing him. She also put Roo down for a nap and hauled him off stage — no small feat considering his size compared to hers. Kanga also involved the audience in the nap-time song.

The cast members continuously involved the audience in the play. This technique works wonderfully well in children's theater.

All the characters taught the audience the signs for their names and that was another bright touch. It helped create a pleasant warm link.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) If Cupid neglected you last week, he'll make it up to you this week. Your essence is lined with sequence, and your charm is irresistible. But if your motives have been impure, that too will surface. You may have to come to terms with the fact that you are the only one you've fooled with your unspoken agenda.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Welcome to Lonerville, although you probably hadn't noticed your migration. Seek intellectual nourishment; your mind is especially fertile for absorbing new knowledge at a deeper level. Seemingly empty information will lead to answers you didn't know you were looking for.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Stay on the sidelines of domestic issues. In work affairs, remember others can't read your mind regardless of how Tarzanic tour innards are. To avoid alienating a lover, rely on your convincing bedroom techniques to buffer the blinding glare of your emotional hazard lights.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Be practical in approaching new projects or your ambition may sink the boat at the dock. Get back to the basics and take a mental margarita with your favorite prophet. Stop dismissing yourself by trivializing your issues.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You may have to resort to an archaeological dig to finalize a project that expired many moons ago. Try on as many different angles as you can find in every aspect of your life, even if rearranging your furniture is as drastic as it gets. Pursue some incessant insights available to you now that alluded you before.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) The financial frontier ahead may be rugged, so start budgeting now. Feeling fragmented, like a subtle emotional leprosy is devouring you? What's that on your sleeve? Could it be your heart?

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Your timing may seem a little off in relationships, but it will serve as a humbling momentum in upcoming negotiations. The pillar may not be your favorite role, but take into consideration your long-term plans and seek compromise above convenience.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Don't let others' plans detour you. Put your money on your instincts, or you may risk getting off course. Don't settle for sandbag bedfellows; batteries are less stress. Stop punishing yourself in the name of discipline.

LIBRA (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) Head in the clouds? Don't save the worst for last. The smog of distractions is only getting thicker, and your flakiness will know no bounds. Keep new blood at a distance; your paradoxical nature and impressive capacity for inconsistency can be frightening.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) Life overpopulated? Maybe it's time to re-adjust. Make room for incoming traffic by discarding parasites. In relationships, You may be right, but your delivery is wrong. If your content is heavy, keep your voice light. Play the field, but beware: you'll be drawn to the devil this week.

HOROSCOPES

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) You're tiptoeing on the verge of an intellectual peak. Secure a note pad close by and allow others to cop a mental contact high. Keep in mind your self-absorption may be interpreted as an intimidating inconsistency by those sharing the elevator with you.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Watch your tendency to confuse being a doormat with being a diplomat and let others know exactly where you stand. Leave no room for misinterpretation. If you've been obsessing about money, it is a signal that it is time to take action. Don't pass up any new opportunities this week.

have a real crisis, you're going to go to a real hospital. The way it is now, if you get sick in class, and you need to go to Lafene, it's right here on campus," she said.

Jason Smith, senior in agricultural business, also likes having Lafene on campus.

"If they take it off campus, it will probably be more of a disadvantage because having it on campus makes Lafene more accessible to people," he said.

Others are more optimistic about the move.

"I think it's a good idea if it is going to benefit the student population, but I don't know if the expenses are going to be worth it," Josie Pike, senior in kinesiology and food and nutrition, said. "We pay enough for tuition and fees the way it is."

Zweimiller said cost is a prime factor in the move.

"One of my concerns is that it doesn't cost us anymore over there than it does here so that we don't have to pass it on to the students. Hopefully we can do some resource sharing and lower the cost for both student health services and the community," he said.

"I think if the facility is better off-campus, then that overshadows the convenience of it being on campus," Reed said.

Zweimiller said Lafene should know by March if Mercy Health Center has enough space.

"A lot of people think that this is signed, sealed and delivered, and that is just not true. Right now it is just in the speculation stage," Zweimiller said.

SHAC

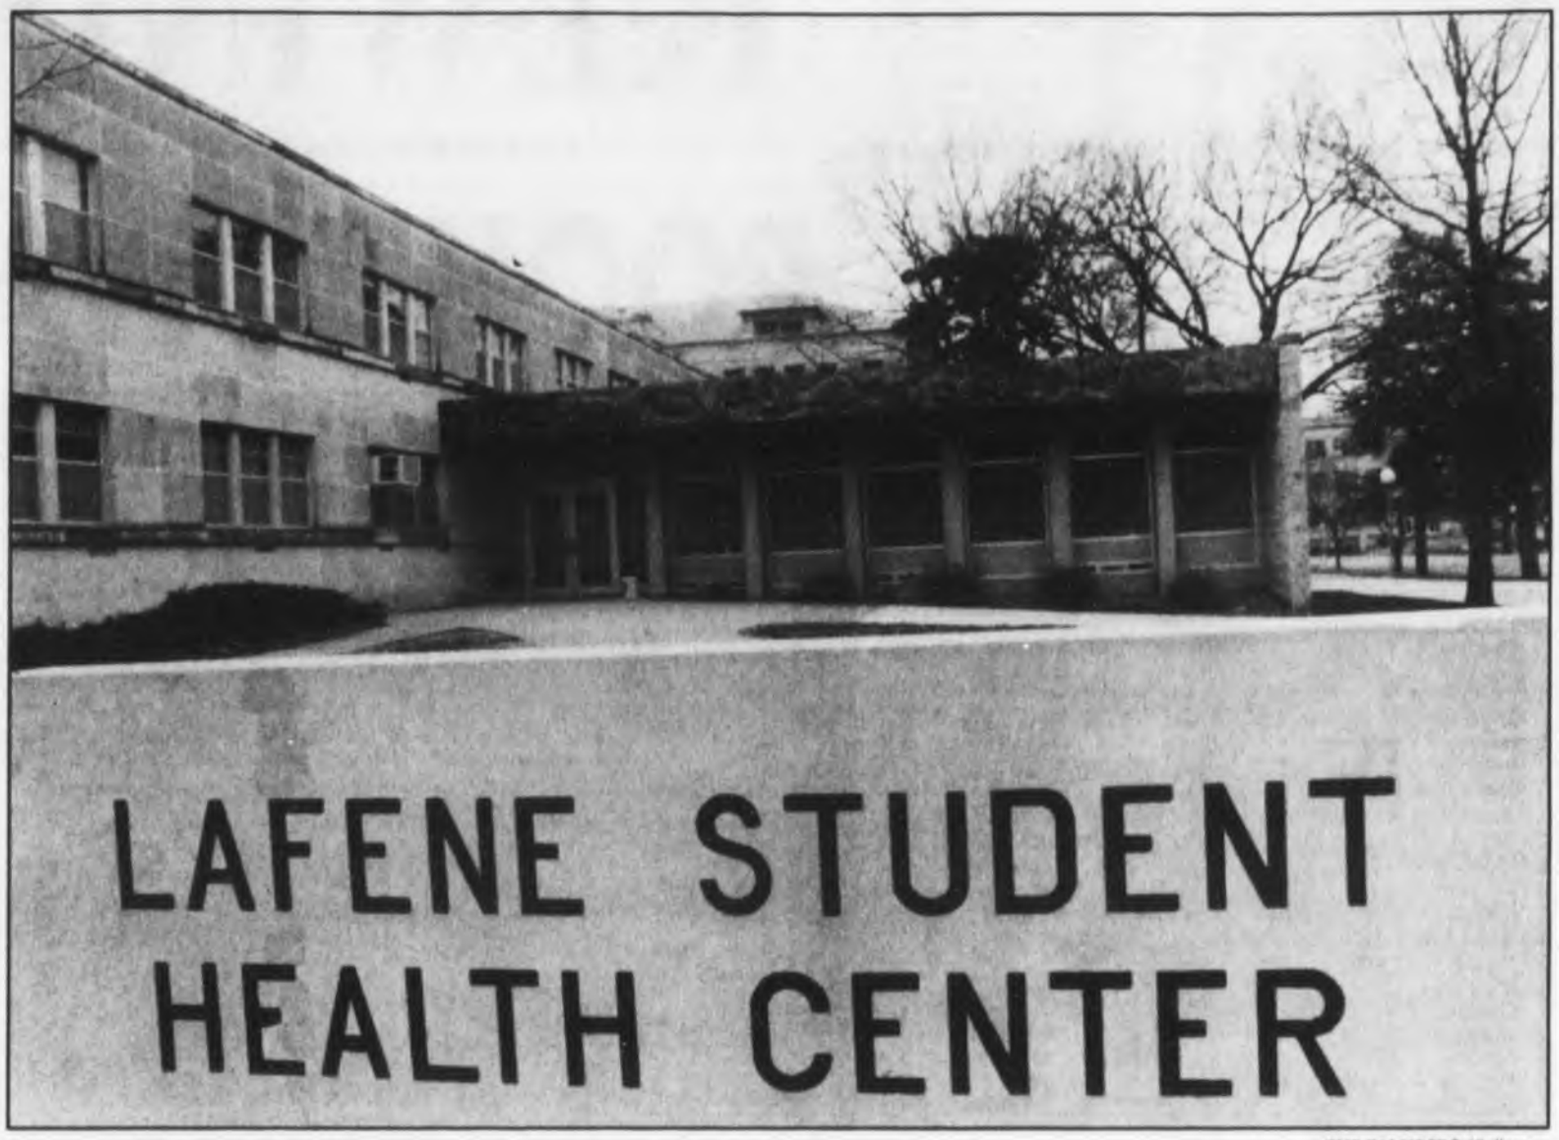
SHAC members look for certain qualities in new applicants.

"We look for someone who is not scared to speak out, who's not scared to ask students what they want and what they want out of their own health center," Weekly said.

Membership of SHAC includes 11 at-large students who serve a two year staggered term. Two faculty members serve and also have staggered two-year terms. The last position is filled by a student senator who serves a one-year term.

Amy Donahy, junior in pre-medicine and chairperson of SHAC, said that the committee had been restructured into three sub-committees.

"We have public relations, health insurance and student health fee budget," Donahy said. "Each committee has a chairman and members."



Those members and sub-committees have many different responsibilities.

"We do everything from looking at health insurance policies to looking at the best policy for the lowest amount of money," Weekly said. "We also try to balance what Lafene needs to operate but also try to keep it low enough so students don't have to pay as much."

Dianne Urban, students' attorney, said that part of the committee's duty was to consider insurance plans, changes in the existing plan, and soliciting bids to other companies.

Student senate ultimately approves the insurance plan. But SHAC has a good track record with senate.

"I've never seen a denied proposal from SHAC by senate, and I've been around since 1983," Urban said.

Mentor programs help agriculture students discover professional networking connections

KARA LOWE
staff reporter

Joining campus organizations, doing volunteer work, completing an internship and getting good grades are not the only way college students are preparing for careers.

Many students in the College of Agriculture are getting involved with mentor programs to help them network with professionals and learn first hand about career choices.

The National Agri-Marketing Association and the Livestock Publications Council offer mentor programs to students wanting more exposure to the agricultural marketing and agricultural-journalism fields.

Chris Stockebrand, junior in agribusiness, became involved with the NAMA mentor program this year.

"I'm getting all kinds of exposure to the agribusiness world through the mentor program," Stockebrand said.

During winter break, Stockebrand visited the Kansas City Board of Trade to see his mentor, the president of the association.

"I figured if I spent the day at the Board of Trade I would get a better idea if that was what I wanted to do for a future internship or career. The most helpful thing about my visit was talking one-on-one to my mentor. He felt out exactly what I want to do in regards to a future career," he said.

To become a part of the NAMA mentor program, Stockebrand completed an information form about himself at the first K-State NAMA meeting last fall. He indicated his primary and secondary career interests, major and year.

The form was then sent to the Mo-Kan professional NAMA chapter where Rustin Hamilton paired him with his mentor.

"We try to match students with professionals that have similar interests so the student can learn more about that type of career. For instance, if a student has an interest in sales, we try to match them with a salesman," Hamilton, a 1985 K-State graduate, said.

Debbie Wood, junior in agricultural journalism, is a part of the LPC Mentor Program.

"I became involved with the program to help sharpen my skills and become prepared for a career. I thought by having a mentor I would get information into what companies are looking for in employees and gain extra insight and knowledge by being around a professional before graduation," she said.

Wood was matched with Kim Watson from Vance Publishing in Lenexa. During Thanksgiving vacation, she visited the office to see what her mentor does.

"I found the experience very interesting since my mentor has the kind of career I want to go into," Wood said.

Students in the LPC mentor program also fill out an informational sheet and are matched with professionals with similar interests. Todd Domer, a 1983 K-State graduate and communications director of the Kansas Livestock Association, is involved in the program as a professional.

"The mentor program is beneficial to my company because it helps us identify potential employees. The experience is broader than the one-on-one match. We now have a whole list of students who are involved in the program and are identified as the work force of the future. Hopefully this talent will help improve the quality of work we do," Domer said.

About 15 K-State students are involved with the two mentor programs.

"I think the programs are beneficial to students. They are able to participate at any level they have time for. The students gain insight and ideas to careers and employment and possibly get an internship or job after school," Hamilton said.

Both Wood and Stockebrand plan to visit their mentors again this spring. Wood said that although her mentor's schedule is busy, Watson plans to visit her in Manhattan in the future.

During spring break, Stockebrand plans to revisit the Kansas City Board of Trade. His mentor is also going to try to introduce him to professionals at Cargill and Farmland so he can learn more about those companies.

"I am making good connections for summer interns. I am definitely going to be involved with the mentor program again next year," Stockebrand said.

The first half saw four lead changes and eight ties between the two teams. In the first half, the Cats were led by McCollough, who scored 14 points. His buzzer-beating three-pointer scored his only points of the second half.

"Marcus did a great job, but he didn't have much left in the second half, and good teams will take away your effectiveness in the second half," Asbury said.

The Cats took a 37-31 lead into the locker room after an Ayome May 37-foot bank shot at the buzzer.

After a careless first half, Willoughby said the team had to turn things around.

"We committed nine turnovers in the first half, and KSU had the emotion," he said. "In the second half, we only committed three. We got in sync offensively and got back the emotion. That was the difference."

The loss ended a two-game winning streak for the Cats. The Cats must now take to the road, playing two ranked teams. Their first action comes Wednesday when they travel to Boulder to face No. 15 Colorado. Saturday, the Cats will travel to Lawrence to face the No. 1 ranked team in the nation, Kansas.

"I'm very disappointed. This is a lost opportunity," Asbury said. "We should have won this one."

STEVE HEBERT/Collegian

THE SUN sets after a day of nice weather in Manhattan. Highs today are expected to be around 60 degrees.

Accomplishments since the arrival of President Wefald

- On July 1, 1986, Jon Wefald was chosen as the University's 12th president.
- The library system has been improved by additions and changes to facilities and periodicals.
- The campus has been enhanced by additions of new buildings and improvements of older ones.
- The College of Technology and K-State-Salina have been added.
- The University's first art museum, the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art, has been added.
- The Wildcat football team has gone from a toilet-bowl team (as described by Sports Illustrated) to a bowl game going, top ranked, victorious team.

losing sleep

Lack of sleep harms students by altering moods, disrupting health

HEATHER PERKINS
staff reporter

It may seem like there is just not enough time to get everything done in the 24 hours of each day. Sacrifices have to be made to fit everything into a schedule, and sleep is usually the first thing to go.

The average college student needs seven to 7-1/2 hours of sleep each night, but typically only gets about five hours, said Dr. Ted Daughety of the St. Francis Hospital Sleep Disorders Center in Topeka.

"All college students are sleep deprived. College students need more sleep, but the need to socialize makes them get less," Daughety said.

Lack of sleep can lead to health problems and mood swings. It can also impair the ability to perform tasks involving memory, learning and reasoning skills. This can affect personal lives and the ability to function in the classroom.

The loss of sleep can also cause serious problems, such as death.

"The health risks can be as severe as dying from falling asleep while operating heavy equipment. One beer on top of sleep deprivation makes it more likely to fall asleep while driving," Daughety said.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration estimated that more than 200,000 auto accidents annually are fatigue related.

"There is no replacement for sleep. There isn't such a thing as sleep in a bottle. If you can't get more sleep, then find someone else to drive when you go out and avoid dangerous situations," Daughety said.

For some students, exercise can help give an added energy boost during the day.

"Exercise works great, but if I can't get to the gym, meditation helps, and as a last resort I just live with being tired," Darin Elliott, sixth-year chemical engineering student, said.

Taking a short nap can help replenish energy lost from lack of sleep.

"Napping an hour in the early afternoon is no problem. You should still be able to sleep at night. The nap will just add another hour towards what you need in a 24-hour day. There is a problem if you sleep longer than one hour too late in the day," Daughety said.

Going into deep sleep phase too fast or from sleeping too long can make it difficult to wake up without feeling groggy.

"If I know I am not going to be able to get much sleep, I will sleep in 1-1/2 hour intervals. Either an hour and one-half or three hours. When I wake up I feel more rested," Wes Schnelle, junior in business management, said.

Stress is considered the No. 1 cause for lack of sleep. Worries about school, work and money can cause stress.

"Stress, usually regarding things I haven't had time to do like homework and studying, keeps me from being able to sleep," Amanda Nystrom, sophomore in elementary education, said.

Consuming too much caffeine, tobacco and alcohol are some common contributors in not being able to sleep well. Delayed sleep phase disorder — constantly delaying the time that you go to bed and get up — is another factor involved with lack of sleep.

"Get up at the same time each day, seven days a week. Don't go to bed until you are drowsy. It doesn't matter what time you go to bed, just don't shift the time you wake up. You'll get better sleep that way," Daughety said.

If you cannot fall asleep within 20 minutes, get up and do something boring that will make you drowsy. Read a book, watch television or listen to soothing music.

"Even if you can't sleep at night, get up at the same time in the morning. Don't sleep in," Daughety said.

Studying or watching television in bed can contribute to sleeping problems.

"Avoid using your bed for other activities than sex and sleep. Don't watch TV for five hours or lay there and study. You start to associate bedtime with other things," Daughety said.

Sleep deprivation occurs when people do not get the amount of sleep needed to stay alert throughout the day. In time, it can build up to form a sleep debt.

Getting one good night of sleep can replenish a sleep debt, regardless of the size.

"Most problems that college students have with sleeping are easily identified as having inadequate sleep or erratic sleep. These can be dealt with on their own," Daughety said.

WEFALD

He said hard work also plays an important part in achievement. Quoting Woody Allen, Wefald said 90 percent of success is just showing up. Besides never missing class, he said students should try to sit in the first couple rows, take good notes and try to study two or three hours each day.

Wefald said he is convinced this formula works. He reverts to his often-quoted response to point out that during his presidency, K-State students have won more prestigious scholarships than any other public university in the nation.

These awards include five Rhodes, seven Marshalls, 19 Truman and 23 Goldwater scholars, in addition to national championships for K-State's agriculture competition and debate teams.

"I think we have outstanding academic programs and a diversity of academic programs to offer students," Wefald said. "We have an outstanding faculty that does a great job teaching."

Wefald said his goals were clear cut when he took the job in 1986. In addition to increasing enrollment and getting the best students, he turned the absence of a large fundraising effort into a top 10 national ranking for the percent of alumni who contribute to the University.

During his tenure, the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art opened, K-State-Salina added the College of Technology, and a $30 million library expansion and renovation has left K-State looking like a work in progress.

Perhaps the most visible transformation involves taking the football program once described by Sports Illustrated as a toilet-bowl team to a top 10 ranking and four straight bowl games.

The choice of a new football coach was a significant turning point.

Coach Bill Snyder said Wefald supports everything students and faculty are interested in from academics to athletics.

"Everything on this campus has been enhanced since he got here," Snyder said. "He has been supportive of us, of course, but philosophically, he also provided us with the opportunity to do the things we've wanted to accomplish."

Wefald said the success of the football team is another example of hard work combined with the can-do attitude.

"My first priority is academic excellence. My second priority is academic excellence and that's my third, fourth and fifth priority. But I thought, why can't we have a good football team?" Wefald said.

"When we first started, people thought it was out of the question and couldn't be done. It's not only the most extraordinary turn-around in football history, but it's also an example of beating the impossible. When people say it's impossible, that's when I get excited."

ELECTION

The president's appointments must be approved by Student Senate, like any cabinet position.

Eligibility requirements for FAC are the same as all other Student Governing Association positions.

Students must be enrolled in 12 credit hours, and must have at least a 2.5 grade point average. Graduate students enrolled in at least six graduate hours are also eligible.

LAFENE CONSIDERS CHANGES IN SERVICES

SHAC decides not to recommend mandatory insurance after negative response a series of four stories keeping watch at LAFENE

YESTERDAY
- If Lafene moved off campus, would it be a good or bad thing?
- Advisory committee tries to ensure adequate health care

Available in the Collegian archives at (http://collegian.ksu.edu).

TOMORROW
- If Lafene moved off campus, what would happen to its employees?

STORY BY JOHN HENDERSON

Only 491 students bought health insurance through K-State this year, which makes the Student Health Advisory Committee a little apprehensive.

Amy Donahy, junior in English, is chairwoman of the committee. Her appointed duty is to advise Student Senate on issues concerning the physical health of students' bodies.

To this end, SHAC has recently accepted bids from three other insurance providers to compare services and prices.

"We wanted to keep things competitive," Donahy said.

K-State doesn't require that all students have health insurance. Lannie Zweimiller, director of Lafene Health Center, estimates that between 20 and 25 percent of the student body is uninsured.

Donahy said that for the sake of consideration, SHAC suggested that K-State make health insurance mandatory for enrollment.

"Most of our responses were negative," she said. "There is a trend among other schools towards the mandatory requirement, but we're not recommending it to the Senate."

Donahy said the main unresolved question was whether universities have the right to make insurance mandatory.

K-State has received health insurance for their plan from G-M Underwriters Agency Inc., since the 1992-93 school year. The two plans that G-M offers for coverage are Comprehensive and Basic.

The comprehensive plan is more expensive, but has a higher maximum benefit per claim. In addition, the basic plan has a $750 maximum on outpatient services per claim, a $2,500 maximum for surgery per claim and requires a 24-month waiting period for coverage of pre-existing conditions.

Both plans require that students receive treatment and/or referral from Lafene before any other hospital; unless it is an emergency, or if the necessary treatment is not available at Lafene. The plans cover most, but not all, expenses at Lafene.

These same plans are offered to students at Kansas University by G-M. Copies are available from Lafene.

Donahy said the bids from other insurance underwriters were within $100 of G-M's prices. That didn't seem like enough of a difference to change underwriters. She said there haven't been many problems with G-M's service.

"Whenever there's a problem, G-M is very responsive," she said. "They take us very seriously."

Donahy said she knew of only two complaints

Lafene move unlikely due to lack of space

STORY BY ERICA DUNCAN

Preliminary reports from Mercy Health Center on Sunset Avenue's architect indicate there is not enough space available for the relocation of Lafene Student Health Center, said Mike Nunamaker, chief executive officer of Mercy.

In order to move Lafene's services to Mercy, sufficient space would have to be freed up.

"It seems to make a lot of sense from a functional standpoint," Nunamaker said of the move.

If student health services remain at Lafene, X ray machines and lab equipment will need to be upgraded, Nunamaker said.

"If you already have the capabilities, why duplicate the services," he said.

Nunamaker said the architect is continuing to look for alternatives, but it doesn't appear as if it's going to happen at the Sunset location.

"The move doesn't look real imminent," Nunamaker said.

Bubble drawings from the architect will be in around the beginning of April, and they will be able to give a picture of space that could be freed up, he said.

Services would still be close to the majority of the student body when and if space is available, Nunamaker said.

House working on bill to identify Gulf War soldiers

ASSOCIATED PRESS

▶ Look it up on the Wide World Web. The bill is HB2108 and is a vailable on the Kansas government site on the Internet at (www.ink.org/public/legislative/fulltext-bill.html).

TOPEKA — Wendy Henault's husband served in the Persian Gulf with the Kansas National Guard's 190th Air Refueling Group during Operation Desert Storm.

Their 18-month-old son suffers from a rare combination of birth defects also found in children of other Gulf War veterans, but they have found no official interest in his problems, she said.

"We contacted the (Department of Veterans Affairs) and the Pentagon, and they said they're not taking information on spouses and children," she told the House Federal and State Affairs Committee on Monday.

The committee had hearings on a bill that would require the state to identify Kansas veterans suffering from Gulf War syndrome and children with birth defects who were born to veterans of the 1991 war.

The committee endorsed the bill on a voice vote. It now goes to the House.

"This bill is very important to allow people to get registered and get it all on paper," Wendy Henault said.

Symptoms of the syndrome include persistent dizziness, chronic fatigue, painful joints, heart problems, rashes, hair loss and night sweats.

Rep. Dan Thimesch, D-Cheney, is the principal sponsor of the bill, which has 67 cosponsors in the 125-member House. It is modeled on a similar law that was passed in Ohio.

Thimesch told the committee that 13,900 Kansans served in the Gulf War.

Other family members and veterans also told the committee about medical problems they attribute to service in the Gulf.

Researchers at K-State are doing a similar study of Ohio veterans who served in the Gulf War, said Ron Trewyn, associate vice provost for research at K-State.

"Many who served America in the Persian Gulf War believe their needs are not being addressed by the federal government," Trewyn testified. "Many don't know where to turn. House Bill 2108 will begin to remedy that problem for Kansas veterans."

Linda Russell, of Emporia, said she has had numerous health problems since returning from the Gulf and gave birth to a daughter with multiple birth defects.

Jim Bunker of Topeka served in the Gulf War with an artillery unit from Fort Riley and was medically discharged from the Army.

"I do not know what made me or thousands of other Gulf veterans sick," he said. "We were given untested and unproved drugs, exposed to petrochemicals for a very long time and many of us were even exposed to nerve and mustard gas."

Others supporting the bill included the American Legion, the Kansas Commission on Veterans Affairs, the Kansas Department of Health and Environment and the Association of the U.S. Army.

There were no opponents to the bill, said Rep. Garry Boston, R-Newton, the committee chairman.

TDM has goal to incorporate K-State engineering program

▶ TDM connects Manhattan to the world and the story is available in the second part of the series still available in the Electronic Collegian archives at (http://collegian.ksu.edu/issues/v101/sp/n092).

From the exterior of the Transportation Design Manufacturing plant, the shine of newly produced alternate-fuel vehicles dominates the parking lots.

Exactly 1,458 Ford Contours in a variety of colors lined the parking lot Monday.

However, it isn't until witnessing TDM's 25 employees at work inside the the air-conditioned plant that what TDM brought to Manhattan is appreciated.

With a file drawer crammed with reviewed job applications and an anxious brain trust of K-State students still awaiting a position in TDM's overall equation, the craftsmanship of production-line workers continues to sustain the plant's success.

Its employees, like Wendell Brooks and Bruce Battle, two of the first eight employes hired by TDM, after 9-1/2 months of work understand the laboring process that sends alternate-fuel vehicles into the world.

Brooks and Battle learned Monday morning that they were promoted to production-line leaders for the Ford F-250 trucks and Ford Taurus cars that are planned to begin production in March or April.

"TDM has a lot of benefits," Battle said. Battle formerly performed janitorial duties in Manhattan after retiring from 20 years in the Army. "The original eight have hung in there. It makes you take pride in your work, and you want Manhattan to be a place where things can be built by people who work here. Alternate fuel cars are the way of the future. Reality is coming now."

TDM enables Materials Control Supervisor Jerry Bishop to utilize the skills he acquired during his 21-year stint in the Army. Bishop receives all incoming materials used to convert the vehicles, while he also oversees the shipment of incoming and outgoing vehicles.

"I like that TDM is something new," Bishop said. "Just starting out from the ground level, I can sit back and watch it grow. It gives an individual a chance to put their knowledge to work."

Employment opportunities weren't a problem for TDM. More than 1,700 job applications were reviewed during its initial hiring phase a year ago. TDM General Manager Jim Hague said he receives, on average, two unsolicited job applications a day.

"We have had a tremendous response from the area," Hague said. "We have a 2-foot drawer full of applications. If there's anything (TDM owner) Bill Roberts has been impressed with, it's the high level of quality applications we have received."

One of TDM's goals is to incorporate K-State's College of Engineering program, a partnership Dean of the College of Engineering Don Rathbone views as being mutually beneficial to all involved.

"We're seeing a company that is doing well and has a lot of potential in the alternate-fuel arena and is looking to the College of Engineering that we have at Kansas State, where we have a lot of engineering talent that we can bring to play," Rathbone said. "There are many research areas where I feel we're going to be productive."

Steve Kelly, director of the business development division, said TDM is a good fit for Manhattan.

"The marriage between the research capabilities of a college with a company that is included with the front-edge of technology is a great asset to the company's success," Kelly said.

Ann Harts, acting economic development director for Manhattan, said with the unemployment level dipping lower than 4 percent, it is evident Manhattan and K-State are creating valuable commodities in students.

"Our hope is getting and keeping college students in Manhattan ... we'd like to foster those assets in local companies like TDM," she said.

Mayor Sydney Carlin said by providing a diverse base for employment opportunities, she hopes TDM will put Manhattan in a new light, where people will view Manhattan as a community that can attract new businesses.

Rathbone said he hopes companies like TDM can keep students in Manhattan beyond graduation.

"My hope is that Manhattan will continue to bring in these industries like TDM and provide an opportunity for our students," he said. "A lot of our students want to stay in Kansas. A lot of them like Manhattan. What I see is that TDM won't have a lot of trouble attracting our students if they offer a good job. I would anticipate good success there."

▶ NATION AND WORLD

• CUSTODY FIGHT MAY HAVE LED TO LOCAL MURDER-SUICIDE.

MANHATTAN — A man who killed his wife and himself left a note mentioning an apparent dispute about the couple's two young children, police said.

A witness to the shooting Friday told police Damian Mendoza shot his wife, Rebecca Mendoza, then shot himself in the head at the couple's mobile home just east of Manhattan in Pottawatomie County.

The witness, a friend of Rebecca Mendoza, said the husband had also tried to shoot her before turning the gun on himself.

Pottawatomie County Under Sheriff Bill Henry said Monday that Damian Mendoza left a note in Spanish that made reference to not being able to live without his kids.

"Apparently there was some consideration of the kids being given to someone else," Henry said.

The Mendozas' daughter, 4, and son, 2, were taken into protective police custody. Henry said both victims' relatives were expected to seek temporary custody, with both sets of grandparents — Damian Mendoza's parents from Chihuahua, Mexico, and Rebecca Mendoza's from Georgetown, Idaho — expected at a hearing Tuesday.

Henry said the couple's son was too young to comprehend what has happened. However, the girl was extremely upset, and understands that someone shot her mommy, Henry said.

Funerals were planned in Idaho for Rebecca Mendoza, who was 23, and in Mexico for her husband, who was 26.

• HEARING APPROACHES FOR BOMBING CASE EYEWITNESSES.

DENVER — As prosecutors prepared for Tuesday's hearing on eyewitness challenges, they reportedly dropped two people from the list, including the only person who said he might have seen Timothy McVeigh in Oklahoma City the day of the bombing.

William H. Dunlap III of Oklahoma City and David Ferris of Junction City were removed from the list last week, attorney Stephen Jones, who represents McVeigh, said.

The potential eyewitnesses will be the subject of a defense challenge during a two-day hearing that begins Tuesday.

Prosecutors have not identified which eyewitnesses they plan to call.

They include two employees of Elliott's Body Shop in Junction City, where the truck used in the bombing was rented, and a rancher who worked with co-defendant Terry Nichols in 1994.

• HOUSE ISSUES NEW SUBPOENAS TO PROBE CAMPAIGN FUNDING.

WASHINGTON — The chairman of the House committee investigating campaign fundraising said he has issued nearly two dozen new subpoenas and is looking into reports that the Chinese government wanted to contribute to the Democratic Party.

"The bottom line is, it's going to be a much more broad investigation than we thought it would be," said Rep. Dan Burton, R-Ind., chairman of the Government Reform and Oversight Committee, said Sunday on NBC's "Meet the Press."

Burton said he had issued five subpoenas and Saturday night sent out 20 more for documents his committee wants to see.

Democrats on both the House panel and the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee, which has launched a parallel probe, have complained that the Republicans are out to attack the Democratic Party rather than expose the fundraising excesses of both parties.

A report released today showed that Democratic and Republican parties raised an unprecedented $263.5 million in largely unregulated so-called soft money campaign donations during the two-years leading to the 1996 election — almost three times the amount in the 1991-92 campaign.

▶ CORRECTIONS AND CLARIFICATIONS

In the "Senate passes altered OSAS fee increase" story that ran Monday, the amendment to increase the salary for the Senate chair should have read $600.

In the same story, Arts and Sciences Senator Craig Korth was taken out of context in his quote. He was against the amendment that increased salaries of the Senate chair, vice chair, attorney general and student body vice president.

COLIN RAFFERTY, left, junior in English, and Trey Hock, right, senior in English, announce their candidacy for student body president and vice president in the free-speech zone Monday.

IN THE RACE

Different campaign tactics mean no more costumes

STORY BY JILL JARSULIC • PHOTO BY STEVE HEBERT

Calling on two of America's most famous presidents to help announce its candidacy, the Rafferty-Hock presidential ticket threw its hat in the ring Monday in the free-speech zone.

A bystander whistled "Hail to the Chief" as Colin Rafferty, junior in English, and Trey Hock, senior in English, marched from the steps of Seaton Hall to the Office of Student Activities and Services to file for the general election.

Dressed as Abraham Lincoln and George Washington to commemorate President's Day, Rafferty and Hock passed out patriotic coloring books to students on the way.

"We'll pass out coloring books for everyone," Rafferty said. "Or at least 50 people, whichever comes first."

Some might remember Rafferty as the vice-presidential half of the duo Horsefeathers and McCracken, who ran in 1996. While Horsefeathers and McCracken remained costumed throughout the election, Rafferty-Hock is using a different campaign tactic.

"We are serious candidates this year," Rafferty said. "The costumes come off after the announcement."

The candidates said they wanted people to know they were an honest choice.

"We want people to see that we aren't taking it too seriously, but we're taking it seriously enough," Hock said.

Rafferty and Hock said they believe that is an advantage over two of their opponents.

"We're not running for this because we are student politicians, and we're not doing this to build our résumés," Rafferty said. "I mean, we're English majors, so we aren't going to get jobs anyway."

Student fees, always a big part of elections, are on Rafferty-Hock's list of things to take care of.

"We plan on hopefully curbing the spending of the Student Governing Association right now," Rafferty said. "It's been a pretty high-spending year, so hopefully we are at least going to slow or stop the increase of fees."

However, they said they do have some ideas for better spending of student fees.

"Our philosophy is this is college, and it's time to have fun," Rafferty said. "So if we are going to be spending the money, let's spend it on something fun."

Hock agreed.

"Yes, but something University-wide that all the students can enjoy," he said.

Rafferty said he would like to see some things that might help students relax.

"For a week we'd like to get a giant ball pit in front of the Union," Rafferty said. "Just for everyone to come in and romp and take a load off."

Other ideas included taking all the oat pieces out of Lucky Charms, leaving only the marshmallows, hiring a full-time masseuse and keeping former sitcom stars away from campus.

"We would like to state that Tony Danza will not deliver a Landon Lecture if we are elected," Rafferty said. "No Tony Danza."

"But honestly, we've seen what Student Governing Association has done this year, which, under the current regime, is not a whole lot," Rafferty said.

Rafferty and Hock said they plan to be busy next year.

"Our guarantee is we will get something done next year," he said. "What that is, we're not sure, but we will get something done."

K-State plates raise $37,000

REBECCA AISTRUP
staff reporter

More than $37,000 has been raised for scholarships through the purchase of the new K-State license plates.

The program was made possible through the K-State Alumni Association and the Kansas Department of Motor Vehicles.

"I knew the revenue was going to scholarships for K-State students, and I could not think of a better way to help support the university," Pat Bosco, associate vice president of institutional advancement and dean of student life, said.

Eight hundred and twenty-three licenses plates were sold across the state of Kansas.

"Our main goal was to hit the minimum in sales of 500 plates," Karen Schafer, director of alumni communications, said. "This was set by the Department of Motor Vehicles. I believe that when the KSU plates expire, that more people will purchase these plates."

When the program was started, there was a lot of red tape to cut through.

The original plan was to have a plate with a picture of Anderson Hall printed in gold on the background with the Power Cat emblem on the left side. Kansas would be printed across the top, Kansas State University across the bottom and the person's registered numbers in the middle.

According to Bill Stallard, a K-State alumnus, the Kansas Department of Motor Vehicles said that the multi colors could not be done.

"The Motor Vehicle Department has made it difficult to get the plates, when the idea was to make it simple," Stallard said.

The bill that was proposed was the same bill that was proposed in Montana for Montana State University, Stallard said.

The other idea proposed was to only charge $25 dollars for the plates, not $50, but a legislator is working to make the cost lower.

"I believe the cost should be lower and people should have easier access to them," Stallard said.

The plates have been quite an attraction to some people.

"We are the only ones in Kansas that have a plate like this," Stallard said. "They are quite an attraction."

Word of mouth has helped promote the plates.

"I have had people call me that have seen the plates and say, 'How do I get one, what do I need to do?'" Schafer said.

School receives national award

CORY MORGAN
staff reporter

Woodrow Wilson Elementary School has received one of five national awards for model professional development in a competition sponsored by the U.S. Department of Education.

For the award, the Department of Education awarded Woodrow Wilson a plaque and $9,000.

"We never in 10 years expected to win this award," Kay Hoffman, first-grade teacher at Woodrow Wilson, said. "It makes us feel really good and validates everything that we have been working for."

This is the first year that this award has been presented, Leslie Rader, kindergarten teacher at Woodrow Wilson, said. The process was successful, and it will now be an annual award.

Derek Gaulding, senior in elementary education and student teacher at Woodrow Wilson, said offering a variety in teaching styles adds to the learning environment.

"It's an advantage for student teachers to work in such a quality environment because we had a chance to rotate from class to class and learn a variety of teaching styles from different teachers."

The national award for model professional development is an award that is given to the most outstanding school or district displaying professional development.

Five schools from 130 were selected for the award. Of those five schools or districts selected, two were from Kansas. The two from Kansas were Woodrow Wilson in Manhattan and the entire school district of Lawrence.

"We have thought that development has been important for years and now it is good to see others are also realizing it," Melisa Hancock, sixth-grade teacher at Woodrow Wilson, said.

The award process started with filling out a lengthy application.

"We didn't even know that we were applying for a scholarship," Hancock said. "We thought that we were applying for a grant."

The application was then sent to Washington in July for review and the Department of Education told Woodrow Wilson that it would reply by November.

When the school did not receive word back until December, Hoffman said that they thought they had not won the award. Then Woodrow Wilson received a phone call stating that they were selected as one of the 16 finalists. A site visit was then requested at each school.

After the site visit, Woodrow Wilson was chosen as one of the five recipients of the award.

COLUMNS are opinions expressed by the columnists. The opinions are not necessarily the opinions of the Collegian.

Future elections mean more effort, responsibility for voters, candidates

Student elections are quickly approaching, and there are several things that need to be done in preparation by both candidates and students.

There is a lot of responsibility resting on the shoulders of the elections committee. It needs to enforce the rules and make sure candidates meet all of their requirements.

One of the main requirements for candidates is to attend one of two mandatory meetings. The first meeting is from 8:30 to 9:30 tonight, and the second one is from 5 to 6 Wednesday night. Please attend one of these meetings or withdraw your name from the ballot.

Candidates should follow the rules of the elections or choose not to run at all.

The questionnaires for the Collegian voters' guide are due by 1 p.m. Friday in the newsroom, Kedzie 116, to Andrew Francis, city-government editor.

For those who are running for student body president and vice president, columns are due to opinion editor Kevin Klassen by 5 p.m. Monday, also in the Collegian newsroom, Kedzie 116.

When candidates have their photos taken at the mandatory meetings for the voters' guide, they need to consider wearing proper attire.

Candidates need to treat this election with respect and give some thought when answering the questions on the questionnaire.

Students also have responsibilities in this election.

You need to decide what matters to you in the elections and who you want to vote for.

The candidates will be campaigning in the residence halls, on campus and in the greek houses.

Decide what questions you want to ask them. Just because your issues aren't included in a candidate's platform doesn't mean that candidate doesn't have to answer to them.

The results of this election will affect all of us, so don't forget to vote March 10-12.

Unless you have been bound, gagged and forced to watch horrific farm animal films in some sociopath's garage for the last month, you couldn't have missed the fact that Friday was Valentine's Day.

With the card and flower industries bombarding us with a non-stop shelling of advertisements, I would wager you missed the other holiday. What holiday? National Condom Week, of course.

Hip hip hurrah. Let's all go out and purchase a box of Trojans and put on our condoms. Then we could all run around our living rooms in a mad-cap celebration.

Forgive me for the dose of sarcasm, but what could we possibility be celebrating?

That was the first question that flashed through my mind when I heard it was National Condom Week.

I could only come up with one reason to throw a bash. Humankind, in a round-about way, is acknowledging we are nothing more than prey to all the nasty little viruses swimming around out there.

We are sheep and the wolves are waiting in the forms of gonorrhea, syphilis, herpes and the big daddy of 'em all, AIDS.

Let's face it — AIDS is the perfect killer. Better than Jack the Ripper, better than the H-bomb, better than anything our tiny human brains could ever hope to conceive.

So I guess Condom Week provides us two things to celebrate. Abstinence and the rubber, whichever you may choose to use. Please, for the well being of the rest of us, use one or the other. I doubt you could use both. If you are then you're a sick little puppy.

Unlike abstinence, the condom has a long and interesting history. The word condom is thought to be derived from the Latin condus, which means receptacle.

In my research, I also uncovered two conflicting theories on where the birth of the condom actually was.

Some historians believe that Roman soldiers were the first people to use the condom. Get this — the soldiers used dried sheep intestines as sheaths for protecting themselves against diseases like the mythical Mount Vesuvius Rash.

And I thought the Romans were off their rockers for watching human gladiators murder one another. Maybe if we used sheep intestines today, people would abstain.

Actually, the outcome of implementing sheep intestines would be a rapid rise in the number of STDs. After all — who is going to strap sheep guts around their most private of parts? Those Romans were nuts.

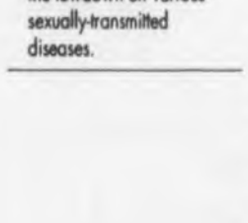
It is also believed that a form of the modern-day condom was used by the ancient Egyptians. Unfortunately, I wasn't able to find what material they used for protection.

It turns out the Japanese used two types of condoms. The Kawagata was made of a thin leather, and the Kabutogata was made from a tortoise shell or horn. Ouch! Those Japanese are pretty stoic after all.

The earliest evidence of people using condoms in Europe came from cave paintings found in France. They were dated around AD 100 to 200. We all should have known the French had to have been the first to use condoms.

The 1840s brought the world a sigh of relief. Vulcanized rubber was created, and the first rubber condom was developed shortly after.

The condom made a huge improvement in the 1930s when liquid latex manufacturing took a hold of the industry. It is still the basis for condom production today.



The Romans, Japanese and Egyptians may have been a tad bit off with their condom usage, but they did have the right idea. Granted, they used condoms to keep babies away. The fact is they still used them.

We all should take a step back and think about what National Condom Week means to us.

To me this week pertains to slowing down the out-of-control human population growth rate, it means keeping diseases at bay but most of all, it reminds me of how fragile we really are.

The act of reproducing can kill. It is the ultimate paradox.

Turnpike development should be carefully considered

VIEWPOINT
JONATHAN WINKLER

JONATHAN WINKLER is a senior in mathematics, physics and English. You can e-mail your comments to Jonathan at (winkler@phys.ksu.edu).

The Kansas Turnpike has come a long way since 1956, when it connected a small oat field just across the Oklahoma state line with the glittering lights of downtown Kansas City.

Yet in those 40 years, its planners have clung steadfastly to a sort of engineering hubris. This valuation of technical sophistication over good sense began with feasibility studies for a Wichita-to-Hays spur long before the main road was even built. Today shows itself in ambitious plans for a parallel route between Kansas City and Topeka.

When it opened, the Turnpike was the only superhighway in the country without a numerical speed limit. In spite of a published 75-mph design speed on most curves, motorists were urged to drive at a "reasonable and proper" speed, i.e., as fast as a bat out of hell in clear weather. Comfortable cruising speeds of 90 mph or faster were common.

Ironically, the Federal Bureau of Public Works soon afterwards developed better standards for interstate highways: wider lanes — 14 feet vs. 12 feet; shallower curves, better drainage and also actual speed limits — 65 mph east of the Appalachians, 70-75 mph west.

The Turnpike was also built long before the development of slipform concrete paving, now used on Interstate 70 through Junction City, which makes higher speeds both safer and more comfortable.

Every overpass along the route is painted with numbers giving to the nearest five feet the position of the bridge's centerline on the route, beginning with the bridge that straddles the Oklahoma state line (No. 0.000) right in front of the "Oklahoma: Discover the Excellence" sign.

Yet the Turnpike is so poorly drained that Masefield's "Road-Angels" desert it as soon as the first drop of rain falls.

The crowning is not steep enough to allow water to drain quickly to the shoulders. Pavement seams along the edge of each lane fill with water and grab the wheels of passing cars, pulling them into spin-outs.

Over time, the bituminous surfacing — about one foot thick in most places — compresses under the weight of traffic, so that each lane has double strips of compressed asphalt which fill with water and float rapidly rotating tires, according to the laws of hydrodynamics.

When approaching curves the road becomes perfectly flat for a few hundred feet, which removes the vestigial drainage benefit of its inadequate crowning and so exacerbates the other problems.

I-70 west of Topeka is so well drained that one can zip along at 70 mph in a 40-day rain, even if (this being Kansas) the rain all falls within an hour. To do the same east of Topeka under similar conditions is suicidal.

Why does the Turnpike Authority want to build a second road, rather than tacking on an additional two lanes to the existing one? Because it was designed right after the disastrous floods of 1950, which washed out a lot of state highways, and so is raised above its right-of-way on a causeway about 10 feet high and 84 feet wide at the top, and the foot of asphalt underneath the road surface overlays the concrete that was used in the original construction.

Hauling in the fill dirt just to widen the causeway while keeping the Turnpike open would in itself be fantastically expensive and require shoulder closure for a few years.

Moreover, concrete (or some other rigid paving material) would have to be laid in on top of the fill at the same level as the 1956 paving in order to prevent the added lanes from compressing unevenly and sinking below the original ones. Concrete has been hard to find for road paving ever since Fishing and Wildlife secured a moratorium on sand dredging in the Kaw River.

Right-of-way for a second road would be horribly expensive — $1000 per acre of condemned farmland — but construction would be simpler and less disruptive. The state could hand over to K.T.A. the right-of-way it has already purchased for the Kansas Highway 10 bypass around Lawrence. With this, it could widen the existing two-lane circumferential west of that city, which has just become accessible from the Turnpike via the new Lecompton exit.

Then a connecting link could be built to Highway 24, which is already an expressway east of Topeka and would need only a little bridgework for access control. All this would be much cheaper than 50 miles of new road.

The Turnpike Authority has many options to weigh — ranging from simply widening (now being done by the Pennsylvania Turnpike in the 30 miles west of Philadelphia) to adding local lanes and speed controls (now used on the New Jersey Turnpike just north of Trenton).

It becomes your responsibility as a taxpayer and a toll-road user to make sure the Turnpike Authority makes the responsible decision.

George Washington and Abraham Lincoln weren't the only presidents honored Monday. K-State students celebrated the presidency of Jon Wefald during a cake-and-punch reception in the Union Courtyard.

Tables decked with purple and white tablecloths and balloons lined the courtyard as Student Body President Chris Hansen and Vice President Aaron Otto presented a plaque to President Wefald.

Prior to the presentation, faculty and students had the opportunity to speak to Wefald and express their gratitude for his dedication to K-State.

"I wanted to come when I heard about it," said Jim Hague, a former K-State professor of engineering and current plant manager for Transportation Design Manufactures in Manhattan. "I am aware of President Wefald's capabilities, and I thought he deserved it."

Other faculty members in attendance agreed.

"I think this is an important thing," said Steve Harbstreit, associate professor of secondary education. "I like a lot of the things they've been doing at K-State, and I wanted to support our leadership, which includes President Wefald."

Chris Hansen, co-author of the Student Government Association's bill to commend Wefald Monday, said he was pleased with the turnout.

"I just wish there were more students here," Hansen said. "I guess there was a bit of a conflict because the best time for faculty is in the afternoon and the best time for the students is usually around lunch. We invited as many students as we could and made the best out of it."

Many students said they believed the reception was a good opportunity to meet Wefald and to express their gratitude for his successes.

Before inviting Wefald onstage, Otto read the resolution that gave Wefald a commendation and was passed unanimously by SGA in October. The resolution mentioned Wefald's accomplishments at K-State, which included raising enrollment to more than 20,000 students, construction of the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art and helping to build K-State's football program.

Bob Krause, vice president of institutional advancement, said Wefald's excellency stems from many things that aren't visible. He said he believes Wefald's respect for the accomplishments of students and faculty are an inspiration.

"That's the mark of a leader who understands the true definition of leadership," Krause said.

Dean plans retirement after years at K-State

MATT SPURGIN
staff writer

The College of Engineering will lose a faculty member who has spent most of the past 47 years at K-State.

Ken Gowdy, associate dean of engineering, has announced that he will retire in mid-June.

Gowdy first came to K-State in 1950 as an undergraduate student where he studied engineering until 1955.

During that time Gowdy also earned a varsity letter as a starting center for the Wildcats football team from 1951 to 1953. He was named to the All Big 7 second team in 1953.

Gowdy returned to K-State in 1957 after a two-year stint in the Air Force to work on his master's degree.

He left K-State for two years to get his doctorate at Oklahoma State University, but he returned to K-State in 1965.

Gowdy went to Texas A&M to serve as head of the engineering technology department from 1979 to 1984 before returning to K-State.

Gowdy has several plans to keep himself busy after his retirement.

"My wife and I plan to do some traveling, and I've got an interest in nature photography that I want to pursue," Gowdy said. "I also have an interest in writing poetry, and I'd like to try to get some of them published."

Cats' defense not enough

▸ K-State shows lack of offense in 30-percent shooting against the Cyclones.

SUN DEE MILLS
staff reporter

Sometimes defense isn't enough.

The K-State women's basketball team lost on the road at Ames to Iowa State, 54-40.

The loss put a speed bump on the team's road to the top of the Big 12, with the Cats falling to 14-8 overall and 7-5 in the conference.

"Tonight, we played at one end, the defensive end, and did nothing, nothing offensively," Coach Deb Patterson said.

The Cats as a whole shot 29.8 percent from the field and were forced to put up numerous three-point attempts.

Guard Missy Decker went one of seven from the three-point line and center Kayla Hester sunk two treys out of 13 attempts.

For the game, K-State shot a dismal 6-29 from behind the arc and a total of 17 of 57 from the field.

Furthermore, Iowa State didn't allow the Cats to draw numerous shooting fouls as K-State shot just four free throws for the game and didn't hit any of them.

Yet, the Cyclones managed to win, even though they only posted 34.7-percent shooting from the field.

Forward Jayme Olson sunk five of 15, four of which were three-pointers. Olson contributed 19 total points and eight rebounds to the game.

"We held a team to 34-percent shooting, but every basket they made was magnified when we didn't score," Patterson said.

Forward Andria Jones again gave another solid effort for the Cats, providing an offensive spark for a offense struggling Cat team. Patterson attributed the Cats' offensive efforts to Jones.

"Andria again stepped up for us and did everything she could on the offensive end of the floor," Patterson said.

Jones, in another tremendous offensive effort, led the Cats with 25 points, nine points from behind the three-point line and pulled down 10 rebounds.

"She hit 11 of 19, she hit the threes and she scored inside," Patterson said. "I thought her play tonight was excellent."

Jones' fifth double-double of the season was not enough to secure a Cat win.

Tied at 25 at the half, the Cyclones went on a 9-2 run to open the second half.

The Cats only scored 15 points in the second half, 13 by Jones alone.

The Cats come home to Bramlage Coliseum Wednesday to attempt to knock off Big 12 No. 3 Colorado, wishing to continue their 11-game home winning streak.

This streak is the longest since Bramlage's opening in 1988.

GATOR OF THE LANES

Freshman bowler brings back interest, helps build K-State's bowling team

JEREMY KELLEY
sports editor

They call him Gator.

This kingpin of the lanes was just that at last week's bowling tournament in Wichita.

Michael Allingham, freshman in pre-law, competed in the Flight Across Midnight Tournament last weekend against some of the tougher bowlers in the region.

"I was really pleased with my performance," Allingham said. "I was able to read the lanes very well and felt I bowled pretty good."

Allingham finished 11th out of 68 players, surpassing two of the state's top bowlers from Wichita State, and he took home a $250 purse.

"That's a pretty big jump against a natural powerhouse," Allingham said of Wichita State.

It was Allingham's third tournament of the year, but just a minute detail in his list of accolades.

Allingham started bowling with his mentor, his uncle Donovan Reynolds in Atlanta, seven years ago while attending North Rock High School.

"He co-owned a bowling alley back home in Georgia, and I asked him 'what do I need to do to get involved,'" he said. "He put me in a league and got me some experience, and from there it took off."

Indeed it did.

Allingham enlisted in the U.S. Army in 1992 where he made the all-Army bowling team. For the next 2-1/2 years he traveled around the world knocking pins down.

Allingham and the Army team first toured around the United States competing in tournaments in Atlanta, San Antonio and Army posts around the country. Then they took their show on the road overseas to places such as Bonn, Germany, and Madrid, Spain.

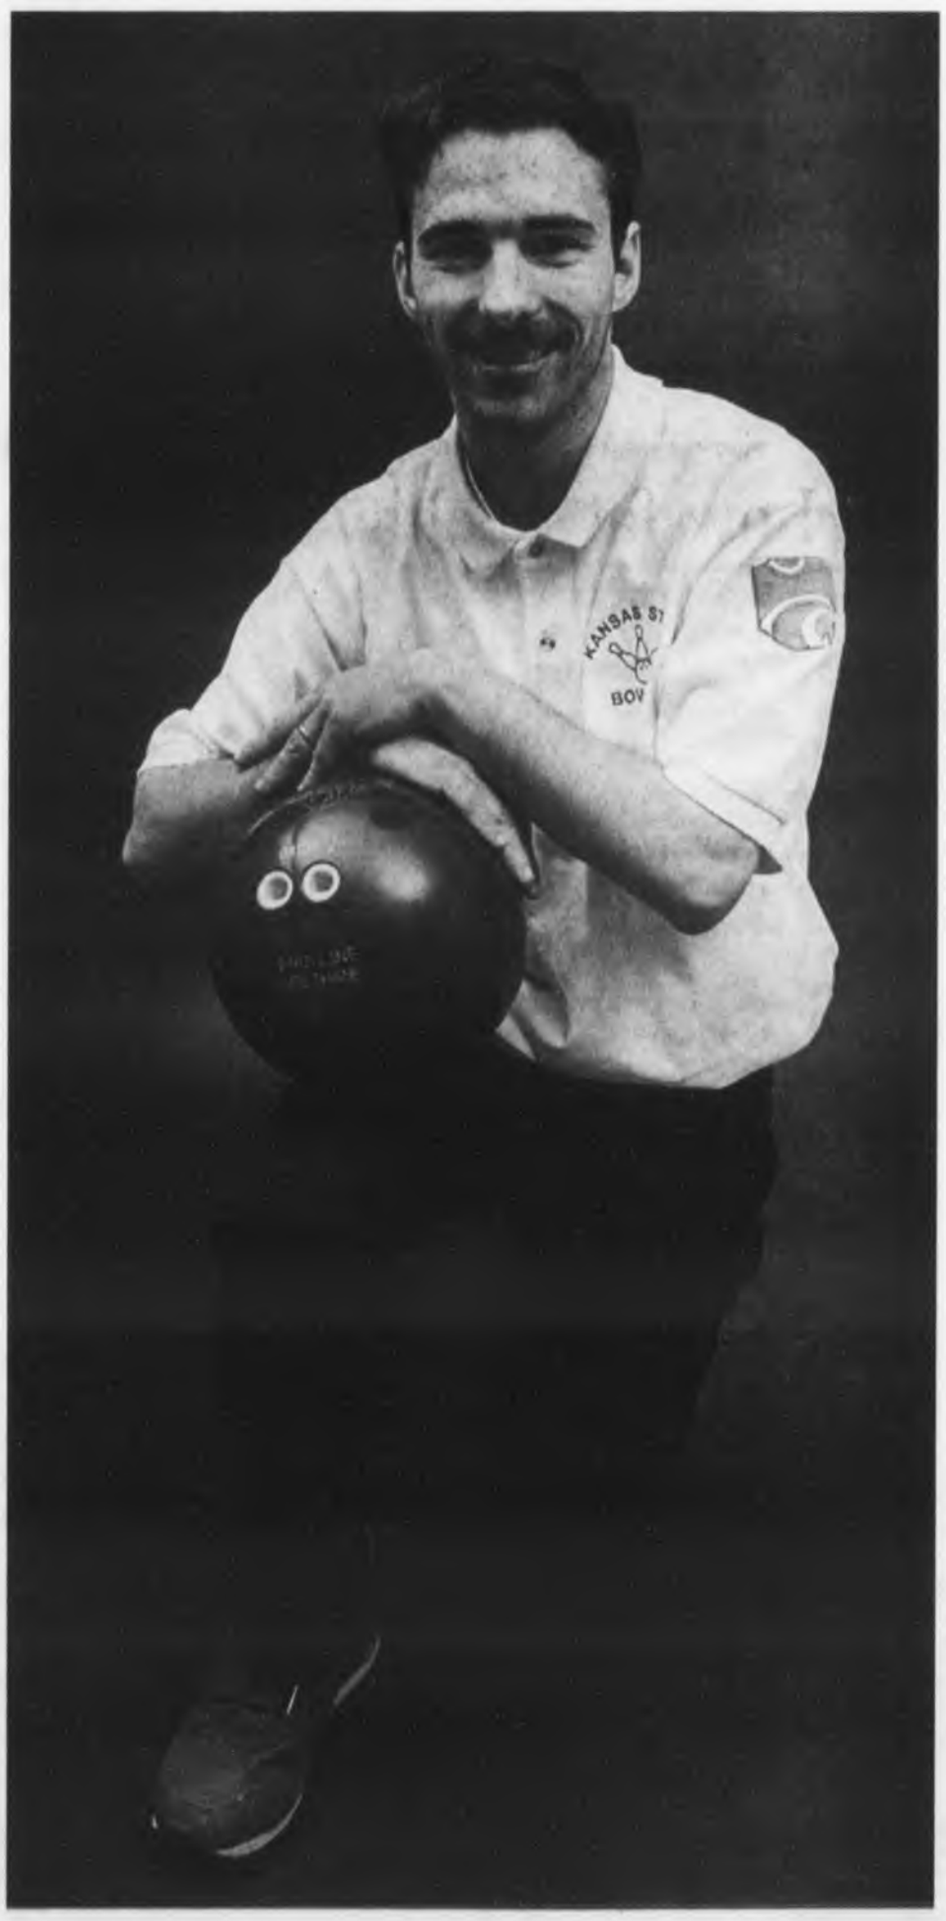
"Everybody who knew me when I was in the Army said, 'you've got sham job,'" he said. "No, I just was fortunate enough to get selected to be on the team and travel around the world meeting new people and seeing new people."

After attending Brown Mackie College for a year, Allingham came to K-State in April 1996 in hopes of fulfilling a new mission: starting a bowling team at K-State.

K-State once had both a men's and a women's bowling team until 1990. Back then, the men were ranked seventh and the women were ranked third in the country. It was the last time K-State would have a bowling team for a long while.

"When their funding got cut off, they just fell off the face of the Earth," Allingham said. "They couldn't hold varsity status anymore, and they couldn't keep enough people interested to be supported by the University."

Allingham sparked a bowling interest along with a few other students at K-State. When he got here, the team didn't have club status. Next fall it will obtain that title.



"The Union Governing Board approved us and categorized us as a club sport," Allingham said.

Right now, the K-State bowling team is sponsored by two Manhattan businesses: Midas Muffler Shop and Subway. Allingham said the sponsors provide the team with enough sponsorship that it is able to buy equipment such as shoes, towels and bowling balls, and it even provides the team with money to travel.

"We started off really slow, and now we are building a team again," Allingham said. "We just want to get the word out there for anyone who wants to bowl."

There are six members on the team. The members meet three to five times a week, but mainly they just focus on having fun.

"It's like my uncle said, if you don't bowl for anything else, bowl to have fun. That's pretty much what we stick to as a team. We just want to have fun," he said.

MICHAEL ALLINGHAM, freshman in pre-law, finished 11th out of 68 bowlers in last weekend's Flight Across Midnight Tournament in Wichita. Allingham took home a $250 purse.

Strong pitching staff anchors first game at home

JEREMY KELLEY
staff writer

After claiming two victories over stiff opponents at the Arlington Morning News Invitational last weekend, the Wildcats knock off their baseball season today at Frank Myers Field against Missouri Western.

The Cats slipped past Arkansas and Iowa to claim their first wins of the season, after losing their first game to the host school, 4-3.

"First of all, we played really hard under some difficult circumstances," Coach Mike Clark said. "We really showed a lot of character playing that early in the season."

Clark said he was especially pleased with his pitching staff, who started the season off with a bang.

Freshman Casey Cook picked up his first win of the season, pitching three innings against Iowa.

Cook gave up two runs in the sixth but recorded two strikes.

Clark said he was excited for some of his new pitchers, especially Cook, who pitched about 80 miles-per-hour in his first collegiate baseball game.

"It was nice to see him take that confidence out to the mound and turn it loose and throw 88 mph. He slammed the door, and you have to be pleased with his performance because this is his first time," Clark said.

Junior David Johnson, who picked up two saves at the tournament, said the team's chemistry was great to start the year.

"We threw really well down there," he said. "We threw the heat in the strike zone and made some good pitches. You always ask the question, 'Are you going to be in the strike zone?' and we got it in there," Johnson said.

All in all, Clark used 10 pitchers in three games and was happy that he got some new guys the experience.

"It was the first time that we were on dirt, and the first time we had on spikes, and the guys really responded well and made good adjustments with the breaking pitches," Clark said.

Sophomore Mickey Blount gets the start in K-State's first home game of the season.

Yes, K-State, there is a chance the Cats will be at the Big Dance

VIEWPOINT

SHANE McCORMICK

SHANE McCORMICK is a senior in print journalism. You can e-mail comments to Shane at (shanem@ksu.edu).

There is a good chance that K-State will make an appearance in the NCAA Tournament. In fact, I really believe that you will see the Cats in this year's Big Dance.

Now before many of you fall out of your rockers, let me specify something.

I am talking about the K-State women's basketball team making it to the NCAA Tournament. Yes, there is a chance that the men's team could make it also, but don't go making any plane reservations.

I'm not trying to jinx the team with this much time left before the tournament. But the fact is that this team has a great chance of making the tournament for the first time since 1987.

The question is: how many teams will the NCAA committee take from the Big 12?

"I would be very optimistic right now with the committee taking five teams from our conference," Cat coach Deb Patterson said. "We are certainly deserving of five teams making it and six would be fair."

So what does "fair" mean?

"I think six would be fair because I feel that the sixth team has a legitimate shot at winning in the first two rounds of the tournament."

Right now, the Cats are standing at 14-8 overall and 7-5 in conference play. This leaves the Cats positioned fifth in the Big 12 standings. Nebraska is ahead of them at 7-4 in the conference while Iowa State sits behind the Cats at 6-6.

Even though the Cats still have four big games left, the committee cannot ignore what they have done already in the season.

Going into the season, expectations were not high for the Cats. They were coming off a 14-16 overall and 5-8 record in the Big 8. Coming into a season with a new head coach and a new system, the Cats were picked to finish around 10th in the Big 12.

It didn't take long for the Cats to start proving the critics wrong. In their first game, they upset a top-25 team in Memphis, 68-60. Later in the season, they upset then-No. 12 Texas.

The Cats have been on a roll lately, another factor that the committee looks at. They have won four of their last five games. They have four games remaining on their schedule, two against top-25 teams. If the Cats split those games, that will leave them at 9-7 in the conference.

With five games remaining, Nebraska should finish the stretch at 3-2, with losses to Texas and Kansas. This would leave them at 10-6. With four games remaining, the Cyclones should finish 1-3, with losses to Texas, Nebraska and Colorado. This would leave them at 7-9.

So, the point is that the Cats should have a legitimate shot of locking the No. 5 spot down in the Big 12. There will probably be a couple more things that will be factored in to seeing whether the Cats make it to the Dance.

For example, the committee will probably want to see the Cats win a game or two in the Big 12 Tournament. But if the Cats were to upset either Colorado or Kansas, one first-round win may be sufficient. Of course, if the Cyclones were to make a run in the Big 12 Tournament, upsetting one of the top three teams, the committee may choose them over the Cats.

One of the keys to the Cats' success is that they have taken to heart the term 'home-court advantage.' Nobody in the Big 12 has a better home record, not Kansas, Texas or Colorado.

It is really kind of amazing how well the Cats have done at home this year, when you consider the attendance at Bramlage. The Cats have been averaging just over 2,000 fans at home games this season.

Now don't get me wrong, the fans that have been there have been great. They really seem to give the team a lift when they need it. But there is always room for improvement. Taking a look at most homes games, the reserved side seems to be filled all of the time.

The student section, on the other hand, is lacking. The reserved section is kicking your butts, students. You guys get in free, what a shame.

Students, here is your challenge:

Wednesday night, the Cats have a huge game with NCAA implications against Colorado. I challenge you to put as many fans on your side as the reserved section, if not more.

In fact, I challenge all Cat fans to make a difference Wednesday night. I challenge you to put at least 4,000 people in the stands. The largest crowd for a game this season has been 3,124. That was for a Saturday afternoon game against Missouri.

There it is, that's your challenge Cat fans, if you choose to accept it. I hope you do. It could be just what the team needs to carry them into the NCAA Tournament.

ATTACK OF THE FAST FOOD

Low-fat, healthy fast food alternatives exist

STORY BY KARA LOWE • ILLUSTRATION BY MATT HAWKINS

With the holidays gone and spring break right around the corner, some students are watching what they eat.

More restaurants are adding low-fat items to their menus to attract calorie-conscious customers.

"I always try to order off of the low-fat menus. Not only do I want to know that I'm eating healthy, but I'm also a vegetarian," Bethany Peterson, junior in interior architecture, said.

Peterson said Applebee's Grill & Bar has one of the best low-fat menus in town. The restaurant offers three entrees on its low-fat menu in addition to a dessert that has only two grams of fat and features no-fat yogurt and hot fudge. Carlos O'Kelly's includes a light enchilada dinner on its menu.

"In addition to this entree, low-fat cheese and sour cream can be substituted to any item on our menu to lighten up the meal," Jamie Williamson, hospitality manager at Carlos O'Kelly's, said.

Other restaurants offering meals on the lighter side are Country Kitchen and Harry's Uptown Supper Club. Country Kitchen has five low-fat menu items including three salads, a grilled chicken dinner and a stir fry meal. In addition to these meals, any item on its breakfast menu can be substituted with cholesterol-free eggs.

Harry's includes two low-fat entrees on its dinner menu and a low-fat sherbet dessert.

"Our two low-fat meals are really popular, and our steaks are lower-fat than some restaurants since we hand-cut each of them," Valerie Sage, waitress at Harry's, said.

In addition to its low-fat menu, Harry's also offers to alter many of its items with low-fat dressings. Other restaurants in Manhattan are also willing to alter their items to make their meals more nutritious.

Adam Gaines, owner of Greek's Pizzeria, said many customers request items without cheese and bread sticks without butter.

"We are willing to adapt to people's eating habits and offer items that are more low-fat," he said.

Many customers at International Pasta also request no cheese on their meals. In addition, the restaurant has many low-fat sauces including tomato, marinara, and hot and spicy sauces.

Rock-A-Belly Bar & Deli offers a pick-your-own toppings sandwich for health-conscious customers.

Restaurant	Item	Calories	Fat
Taco Bell	Light Chicken Burrito	310	8g

ELECTRIC PERSONALITY

Laurènce Baker, a convicted murderer who was sentenced to the death penalty, was granted a reprieve to serve a life sentence in a state prison in Pennsylvania. On Jan. 1, he was electrocuted by homemade earphones while he was sitting on a metal toilet watching a small television.

HAVE PATIENTS

Actors can get paid between $12 and $35 an hour for playing a patient for medical students to practice on at the University of Toronto. One actor, Bob LeRoy, is paid top dollar because he plays a rectal exam patient. "I always hope the student with the biggest finger goes first," LeRoy said.

Ticketers often face on-the-job hazards

BRIAN SMOLLER
staff reporter

Editor's Note: Due to the personal safety of the parking control officers, they requested that their last names not be used in the story.

Writing tickets for parking services is in many ways just like any other part-time, minimum wage job. That is, except for the possibility that an upset driver could try running over you.

"It's just like flipping hamburgers at McDonald's," Scott, a parking control officer, said. "It's not fun, but it's a job."

Some harrowing tales apparently go along with this job.

"I remember one time when I gave this guy a ticket over by Vet Med. He pulled out and stopped in the middle of the street to yell at me," Scott said.

"You have to deal with people being upset, but most people are cool," Cliff, another PCO, said.

Cliff described an incident that occurred his first day on the job.

"We were about to put a wheel lock on this guy who was a vendor and didn't have a permit. He kept stalling us while we got ready to put it on."

The man showed us his driver's license and then tried to leave, Cliff said.

"We had managed to halfway lock the wheel lock into place when he tried to back up. The van bucked up and he flung open the door, hitting the car next to him. Then he took off."

The man eventually had to pay the original fine. He was also made to pay for the damage to the van and the door of the car which he had hit.

Tim, a supervisor, had a favorite story that was a bit more extreme.

"There was this photographer outside McCain who had parked in a 15-minute loading zone," he said.

"I was writing the ticket when he came up to me and said there was no way that he had been there longer than 15 minutes."

"I told him that I had chalked his tires 15 minutes ago, and he asked if I was getting smart with him," Tim said. "I told him that if he wanted to complain he could call my supervisor and take it up with him, and he said 'No, I'll just take it up with you.'"

The photographer then allegedly began to issue threats. Tim said he informed the man that with a push of a button on his radio the campus police would be notified.

"I told him that he would have more cops here than he'd know what to do with," he said. "Then he tried to run me over with his car."

Despite the occasional problem with people who are infuriated at the idea of being ticketed, the PCOs call the job an easy way to make money.

"It's a great on-campus job," Cliff said. "I'm usually done by five and then I can go out and do whatever."

The parking control officer positions also have work schedules which allow them to both work and attend classes, Scott said.

"The best thing about this job is the flexibility of our supervisors," he said. "They work around your schedule."

Cliff and Scott's supervisor, Tim, called this crew of PCOs the best he's ever had.

"These guys are better than I was," he said.

Political play displays Vaclav Havel's work

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

It's hard to watch K-State Theatre's production of Vaclav Havel's "The Memorandum" without constantly remembering the play was written by a now internationally-known president.

A revolutionary intellectual in office seems so foreign to us Americans, but in this context, it is with a strange interest that one experiences this play.

Havel's contribution to his country's revolution to overcome communism began with his play writing in the 1960s and continued with his attacks on communism in the 1970s, but it never becomes a specific focus of this play.

Theater Review

"The Memorandum" is entirely non-specific. Its provoking ideas and wacky plots can almost be construed to the viewer's own purposes.

The play follows poor Josef Gross (Paige Smith), the managing director of what is assumed to be a large corporation. He is manipulated by his deputy director, Jan Ballas (Jennifer Grace), and her silent sidekick Mr. Pillarr, or Mr. P (Chuck Wipplinger), into permitting the company to begin using a new bureaucratic language, Ptydepe, meant to enhance office communication.

Of course, no one knows how to speak or read Ptydepe except the teachers and the translators. This leads poor Gross on a wild goose chase of sorts, to find the root of the Ptydepe problem that is plaguing the company.

Gross discovers a variety of unexplainable corporate traps and dead ends and eventually discovers himself giving his job to Ballas, who seems to be the only person who really knows what's happening.

The focus on Gross as an individual who loses control of himself — tossed and turned in an endless cycle of babble by a new regime overtaking his company — is at the heart of the highly absurd play.

In a 1996 Associated Press interview, Havel said his eternal wish is that people have a good time together without needless quarrels or tension. In this light, "The Memorandum" could be viewed as a cautionary tale against power struggles pitting person against person. The rise of Ptydepe need not exclusively refer to communism, but on a more universal level, power.

As director Kate Anderson writes in the program, it is Havel's interest in the personal responsibility, the infallibility of the state and how one can become a pawn of bureaucracy not through coercion but through cowardice that is brought to glorious light in "The Memorandum."

Illuminating the sheer absurdity of the spectacle is a fine cast, a choice mix of new and familiar faces.

Smith somehow maintains a reasonable level of stability, which says a lot when compared to the delicious cruelty of Grace's Ballas. Grace gives the most determined, and convincing, performance of the play and to see her twist and plot around Smith is pure fun.

Although he has three lines at the most, Wipplinger as Ballas' sidekick (and part-time lover) Mr. P has a wacky innocence slightly evocative of Harpo Marx.

The production owes some stylistic influences to early Hollywood, what with the witty, backward, rag-tag costumes and circular spectacles. One expects to see Charlie Chaplin emerge from the set's wily revolving doors.

Other notable performances are the two secretaries, Helena (Misty Harris) and Maria (Vanessa Vaughn). The blonde-coiffed Harris has a delightful Jennifer Tilly voice that crackles every time she asks to "get the milk." Vaughn brings a human touch to the play, as she's the only person who really feels anything for Gross' plight.

Brad Good, as the Ptydepe teacher, appears on stage once, but is beamed to the audience in a loony video classroom presentation, which will give a good laugh to any students who have suffered through technologically-enhanced teaching.

David Centers' upside-down set, with its bouncy-ball chairs and oversized file cabinet, is the perfect subtle prop with which the characters interact.

Havel has recently complained about not having enough time to write, which is a pity. He's given his country a fresh start — perhaps he will choose not to run for re-election in 1998 and instead rediscover his voice in theater.

from student recipients that reached either Student Senate or SHAC. The complaints were for slow payment on the claims, she said, and G-M handled the complaints promptly.

"I don't deny that other complaints might exist," she said, "but these are the only ones I know of."

Wichita State University, Pittsburg State, Emporia State and Fort Hays State all have similar policies from the same underwriter — Northwestern National Life.

Their annual premiums are about half of K-State's Basic premiums, but offer only $10,000 in maximum benefits.

Why isn't there a cheaper plan available for K-State?

Zweimiller said G-M offered three different plans three years ago. The third, Lafene Only plan, was substantially cheaper, but only covered treatment from Lafene, he said.

"No one wanted it," he said. "Or not very many. Student Senate decided to drop the plan the next year."

Donahy said Student Senate might drop the Basic plan entirely.

"Last year, senators were concerned by students purchasing the Basic plan," she said. "Some of those students might have chosen the plan without realizing the limitations. They might think they had enough coverage, when they really didn't."

Donahy said she knew of one couple who signed up for the Basic plan, only to find out soon after that the woman was pregnant.

Dianne Urban, University student attorney, said making the plan or plans available depends on the philosophy.

"You could decide that you could handle the minor costs without insurance," she said. "Serious injuries can go up to a million dollars without much trouble. We've had claims for premature babies, and it's possible to reach $500,000 for that."

Kim Edwards, senior in geology and student health insurance representative for G-M, said that there might be interest in principle for cheaper plans, but in practice, people don't want them.

"For cheaper plans, you have to put in some kind of maximum," she said. "That's when people get dissatisfied." Policy holders might find out their plan will only go so far for the expenses they need the most, she said.

Urban said that last year about the same number of premiums were paid for both plans. Mandatory insurance could be helpful, she said, but she didn't foresee that happening soon.

Donahy said SHAC is looking at multiple plans that have different deductibles, or amounts policy holders have to pay before the insurance picks up the costs.

"The plan with the higher deductible would have a lower premium," she said, "but we're not sure how much yet."

"Customers can definitely find something to eat at our restaurant if they are counting their calories," Julie Haynes, co-owner of Rock-A-Belly's, said.

Fast food restaurants such as Arby's and Taco Bell also offer low-fat selections. McDonald's recently added a Grilled Chicken Deluxe Sandwich to its menu for dieters on-the-run.

Subway now offers seven sandwiches that are 97 percent fat-free and have less than 350 calories. Customers can also request low-fat, low-calorie mayonnaise on their sandwiches to lighten them up.

I Can't Believe Its Yogurt offers non-fat yogurt with Nutrasweet. The menu also includes non-fat fudge with nutrasweet for sundaes and other yogurt treats.

Dairy Queen also offers non-fat yogurt.

Jason Ward, a graduate student in psychology, said he goes to Dairy Queen at least once a week to buy a Breeze.

"I like Breezes because they taste the same as a Blizzard, and they are healthy," he said.

KSU KANSAS STATE UNIVERSITY

Principal-Counselor-Student CONFERENCE

The Office of Admissions cordially invites former students of these high schools to attend the 1997 Principal-Counselor-Student Conference. High school principals and counselors will be on campus to visit with you about your preparation for and experiences in KSU Academic programs. Your participation will help the University build a stronger relationship with your former high school faculty.

You are welcome to drop by between 10:45 a.m. and 12:15 p.m. on Thursday, February 20. This is an excellent opportunity for you to renew old friendships with former classmates. The Provost has asked that your instructors excuse you from these class periods.

Oklahoma City bombing pre-trial hits crucial snag

▶ Witness in Oklahoma bombing trial says he was mistaken about John Doe 2.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DENVER — The mechanic who says he rented Timothy McVeigh the Ryder truck used in the Oklahoma bombing testified Tuesday he mistakenly told the FBI that McVeigh was accompanied by the burly, heavy-browed man who came to be known as John Doe No. 2.

Tom Kessinger admitted that the man he described was actually a soldier who came into the shop the day after McVeigh.

McVeigh

Kessinger said he realized in November, after looking at photographs, that he had described Todd Bunting. An FBI sketch of Bunting was circulated around the world. The FBI has since cleared Bunting of any role in the bombing.

"I think I made a mistake," Kessinger testified. "My memory was in error."

The testimony came as McVeigh's attorneys sought to have the testimony of some witnesses thrown out, contending their stories were colored by the intense publicity surrounding the case.

"That and the $2 million reward and the 17 to 19 meetings with prosecutors might have had an influence," McVeigh's attorney, Stephen Jones, said outside court.

Kessinger insisted he was sure there was a man with McVeigh when McVeigh rented the truck at Elliott's Body Shop in Junction City.

He said he couldn't describe that man, though a feature of McVeigh's stuck out in his mind: "He had beady eyes."

Jones pounced on Kessinger's memory lapses. "How could you be so wrong 60 hours after the event, and so right a year and a half later?" he demanded.

Kessinger did not answer.

McVeigh and Terry Nichols are charged with murder and conspiracy in the April 19, 1995, truck bombing of the Oklahoma City federal building that killed 168 people and injured more than 500.

McVeigh's trial is to start March 31. Nichols' trial will follow, but no date has been set.

Kessinger is one of several witnesses the prosecution plans to call during McVeigh's trial. Prosecutors recently dropped two people from that list, including the only person who said he might have seen McVeigh in Oklahoma City the day of the bombing.

That witness said he saw someone resembling McVeigh get out of a Ryder truck in front of the federal building about 40 minutes before the bombing but could not be certain it was McVeigh.

Another witness, Eldon Elliott, who owned the shop where the truck was rented, said he also saw a man with McVeigh but couldn't describe him.

Elliott said he made a mistake when he printed up 50 T-shirts after the bombing with the slogan "We remember our customers," but denied trying to capitalize on the bombing.

Committee gives Union art gallery OK to stay put

For now, the Union Art Gallery will remain in its present location.

The K-State Student Union Enhancement Committee reached that consensus in its Tuesday-morning meeting, although several members expressed concern about the decision.

Patrick Carney, committee member and Union Governing Board chairman, said although it would cost money to renovate the gallery for commercial use, in the long run he worries that by not using the space for a revenue-generating operation it may affect the overall sales in the Union.

"If push comes to shove, I can live with the art gallery where it is," Carney said.

With a few exceptions, other committee members agreed.

Mike Hodgson, Union Program Council representative to the committee, said the high-traffic-area space would be good for the art gallery or something else.

Hodgson said the committee should consider a revenue-generating facility for the prime location.

Jack Connaughton, associate director of the Union, said the project would save money if it didn't have to renovate the gallery space for commercial use.

"It (the gallery) seems to work," Connaughton said. "We haven't offended any artists with the arrangement there is now."

Some members, after consenting to keep the gallery in its present location, expressed an intention to leave the fate of the gallery in the future up in the air.

"The bottom line is, maybe we have students hurl pies to raise money to feed families

STORY AND PHOTOS BY JILL JARSULIC

Styrofoam plates and runny whipped cream careened across Derby 134 Tuesday night, but it was all for a good cause.

Van Zile Hall sponsored "Throw-A-Pie, Feed-A-Family" to raise money for the Manhattan Emergency Shelter.

For two cans of food or 50 cents, anyone could grab a pie and throw it in the face of whomever they chose.

Residents of the halls and some hall directors were victims of the whipped ammo.

Chad Weinand, senior in landscape architecture, was in charge of the event. The last time the group sponsored "Throw-A-Pie, Feed-A-Family," it raised $60.

"We did it two years ago," he said,"but without the big-name celebrities like Todd and the women's basketball team."

With the addition of Collegian sports columnist Todd Stewart, the women's basketball team and football player Dave McIntyre, Weinand said the group raised $110.

Weinand said they were happy with the publicity the event received.

"It was on three or four radio stations this morning, so we were pretty excited for that," he said.

Members of the women's basketball team, upset with a column that ran in the Collegian two weeks ago, had the chance to get some revenge.

"It was just a fun way for us to take out our aggression on him," center Kayla Hester said.

Stewart said he was nervous about the event, but figured he had to have fun with it.

"I knew they weren't happy with a column I wrote a couple of weeks ago," he said. "So I was hoping they would have fun with it like I did."

The women personally invited Stewart to their game tonight, and completed the invite by showering him with whipped cream.

"I just want to know if I get to sit on the bench. If I get to sit on the bench, I'd be the happiest man in the world."

JENNY COALSON AND SUNNY JACOBSON attack sports columnist Todd Stewart with whipped cream pies Tuesday night. The women's basketball team invited Stewart to their game tonight.

ACCOSTING ONE OF THEIR OWN, the women's basketball team smears guard Brit Jacobson with whipped cream Tuesday night in Derby 134. Jacobson was not prepared for the attack, which occurred after she was picked up and carried to the team by football player Jonathan Beasley.

CNS limits number of print outs in labs

▶ Need help? Students who have problems with the printers should call lab support at 532-4924 for guidance in fixing the problem.

▶ Excessive use results in campus printer restrictions.

PHIL KELLUM
staff writer

Computing and Network Services has instituted a printing limit of one copy per document in campus computer labs because of the increased use of the labs.

Charles Gould, support services manager at CNS, said, "One of the problems in the labs is keeping the printers functional, and the usage of the printers has been excessive."

The limits were necessary, Gould said, to reduce the load on the printers in order to keep them running.

"We cut the maintenance and repair cycles in half the first semester after implementing the limits," Gould said.

Rob Satterlee, administrator at CNS, said there were literally thousands of multiple printouts per semester before the limit.

The limits are controlled by a centralized unit that monitors all print jobs in the labs, Satterlee said.

"The program determines the application, what workstation it came from and the size of the print job," Gould said.

The goal of the print limit is to change the usage pattern of students in the labs, Gould said.

Fort Riley troops deployed to offer support to Bosnia

Troops from Fort Riley are preparing to be deployed to Europe.

"Troops will be deployed throughout the month of March, and they could be going anywhere," Deb Skidmore, Fort Riley public information officer, said.

Troops from the First Battalion, 41st Infantry and the 977th Military Police Co., are being deployed to the European Theater, which is anywhere in Europe, Skidmore said.

"It doesn't necessarily mean they will be going to Bosnia," she said.

These troops are being deployed to support the U.S. Forces participating in Operation Joint Guard, which is in support of Bosnia.

"They will be back-filling positions," Skidmore said.

Back filling means they will be taking the places of other U.S. troops.

The authorized strength of the 41st Infantry is 762 troops and the 977th Military Police Co. authorized strength is 177 troops.

The purpose of the mission and the area of operations were not released at press time.

Student Senate allocates funding to 4 organizations during meeting

BENJAMIN YODER
staff reporter

Student Senate allocated money to four campus groups at a special meeting Tuesday.

Zairian Students of America, Students Advocating Valid Education, Indian Student Association and International Coordinating Council had money set aside to be used to pay for speakers, educational films and special events.

All the groups except the ICC were budgeted money for fall 1997.

The ICC was allocated money for this semester because its original proposal was lost in the Student Governing Association office.

Senate Allocations Chair Bret Glendening said the proposal drafted in the fall was never given to the committee.

"It was lost and committee never saw it," Glendening said.

In other business, Senate voted to revert surplus group funds into the SGA Reserves for Contingencies Account.

The groups involved did not spend more than $12,000 allocated for special projects.

Glendening said the bill was needed so the allocations committee knows how much money it has left to distribute.

Senate also passed a bill that allows University Activities Board registered groups to advertise educational films as well as speakers.

The previous guidelines only allowed advertising for speakers.

Glendening said the bill will increase the effectiveness of the students' dollars. He also said groups that bring in speakers and films will be represented better.

"This bill puts groups that bring in speakers and films on the same playing field," Glendening said.

• CLINTON RETURNS TO POLITICAL FUNDRAISING CIRCUIT.

NEW YORK — President Clinton returned to the political money circuit Tuesday, helping raise $1.2 million for a Democratic group that is ignoring his call for voluntary curbs on large donations. The White House shrugged off criticism.

Clinton was the star attraction at a fundraiser in a private home to benefit the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee.

The Senate committee and its counterpart in the House say they will not adopt Clinton's voluntary restraints unless Republicans follow suit. The GOP, outdistancing Democrats by better than a 2-to-1 margin in fundraising, has brushed off Clinton's proposal.

• STARR SAYS WHITEWATER PROBE TO CONTINUE AFTER HE'S GONE.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — Whitewater prosecutor Kenneth Starr today cautioned against reading too much into his decision to step down from the investigation this summer, saying the probe will run on for some time.

President Clinton's supporters privately cheered the announcement Monday that Starr will leave to become dean of a law school, seeing it as a favorable sign for the president and first lady.

But the development means the Clintons likely will be faced with yet another Whitewater prosecutor. The new prosecutor will be a court-appointed successor to Starr.

• ASTRONAUTS FINISH TUNEUP OF HUBBLE SPACE TELESCOPE.

SPACE CENTER, Houston — After 33 weary hours of spacewalking, astronauts completed their tuneup of the Hubble Space Telescope along with some last-minute repairs to its sun-blistered skin Tuesday.

All that remained was Hubble's release from space shuttle Discovery early Wednesday for three more years of uninterrupted viewing of the cosmos.

The telescope had been anchored to the shuttle's cargo bay since Thursday.

"Externally, I have to say it's not quite as beautiful as we left it three years ago," Mission Control's Jeffrey Hoffman told the crew of space shuttle Discovery.

• BASKETBALL PLAYERS SAY THEY MISUSED CALLING CARDS.

EL DORADO — Two Butler County Community College basketball players have admitted using another student's calling card and promised to pay for the calls made without the student's knowledge.

Cedric McGinnis and Delvin Washington, both sophomores, told the Wichita Eagle on Saturday that their calls were among 322 unauthorized calls billed to freshman April Calaway between Dec. 11 and Jan. 10.

The card also was used by other students not involved in athletics, William Rinkenbaugh, the vice president of student services, said Tuesday.

Although no punishment has been determined, those found to have misused the card will pay for their calls, he said.

Final round scheduled for Truman nominees

Ameenuddin

KIM BRUNA

One step closer.

That is the case for three K-State students who were nominated for the $30,000 Harry S. Truman scholarships.

Justin Kastner, senior in food science; Nusheen Ameenuddin, senior in pre-health professions and biology; and Vickie Choitz, senior in political science, secondary education and women's studies, were selected to advance to the interview stage of the competition on March 14 in Kansas City, Mo.

The interviews will be conducted by the Kansas City selection panel, which will interview finalists from Arkansas, Missouri and Kansas. The panel consists of seven people, including past Truman recipients. There will be between 75 and 85 Truman Scholars chosen throughout the country.

Each nominee interview will last 20 minutes. Even though they do not know what questions the panel will ask, the nominees are preparing themselves.

"I'm keeping up on the news," Choitz said. "I'm reading all I can get my hands on."

In late January, four K-State nominees sent in their applications for the scholarship. Three of the four were selected to participate in the interview portion of the scholarship process. The winners will be announced March 28.

With the final stage of the scholarship process in motion, Choitz said she has learned from the experience and created relationships with the other K-State nominees.

"I think all three of us are all genuinely supportive of each other," Choitz said.

Beth Powers, scholar adviser, said all three K-State nominees have a chance of being selected.

"It's always possible, but it's not super likely," Powers said.

Truman scholarships can be used for the recipients' senior year and graduate studies. The scholarship is focused toward students who plan to go into public service.

K-State, with 19 recipients and one alternate, ranks first in the nation among public universities in Truman Scholars.

First lady visits Kansas City

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — First lady Hillary Rodham Clinton will visit a children's hospital and attend two fundraisers in Kansas City on Wednesday, including one featuring comedian Bill Cosby.

Clinton will visit Children's Mercy Hospital to emphasize the importance of reading to young children, her office said.

She also will attend a fundraiser at the Hyatt Regency Crown Center hotel sponsored by the Women's Employment Network. The private agency provides employment services to low-income women, including many on welfare.

Clinton is to give a keynote address for a rally, "Giving Our Hearts to Our Children," at the University of Missouri-Kansas City. The invitation-only event is a sequel to the national Stand for Children rally last June in Washington. It kicks off a yearlong crusade to help children in Kansas City.

Clinton ends the day by attending Cosby's performance at "Kids Night Out," a fundraiser for the Boys and Girls Club of Greater Kansas City.

Riemann, Neufeld add names to ballot

SANDY DAVIS

Tim Riemann and Jennafer Neufeld said they see a real need for sincere leadership for K-State students, and they want to fulfill that need.

Riemann, junior in agricultural economics, pre-law and French, and Neufeld, junior in agricultural economics, announced their candidacy for student body president and vice president respectively Tuesday afternoon by the sundial between Waters and Willard halls.

Riemann and Neufeld stressed three main goals in their announcement speech.

They said they will actively lobby for state legislation to create a state Pell Grant system to help students pay for college.

"It's very difficult to keep tuition from increasing," Riemann said.

Riemann said college students already borrow money at the rate of $8 million a day, and they want to help students get college money.

Riemann and Neufeld also said they want to implement the Plus System on campus, which is already used at 6 percent of colleges in the nation, including the University of Nebraska.

The Plus System would give professors the option of giving a B+ or C+ to students they feel have earned the grade. The system would reward high percent averages for the extra effort.

Riemann gave the example of a student getting an 81 percent in a class and another student getting an 89 percent. The professor could give the student with the 89 percent a B+ instead of a B, to reward the higher average.

"It would give students motivation to succeed a little further," Neufeld said.

The system would also help students be competitive by giving a little boost in grade point average for the higher percentage.

The candidates' third proposal is to create a Student Advisory Committee on Teacher Excellence to discuss the publication of teacher evaluations.

Each committee would be made up of students and faculty, and there would be committees in each college.

Students and teachers would each have the opportunity to tell their thoughts about what they expected from the class and why they liked or disliked the class.

The objective committee would then summarize all the information into two to three paragraphs that would tactfully state the positive and negative aspects of the course.

"It's a plus for teachers and students," Neufeld said. "It's a lot more than just a critique."

Riemann and Neufeld said they felt these were real issues that are important to K-State students. Their campaign motto is "Leadership with a Vision" because they want to implement their visions.

"Our platform is about ambition, about the students," Riemann said. "Students don't vote because they don't see their elected officials working for them. Jennafer and I want to turn that around."

"We want students to take note of the issues," Neufeld said. "We want students to be awakened and get involved."

Riemann and Neufeld said they're excited about representing the students, and they consider themselves fresh faces in student government. They said they have a different way of looking at things, based on the other college activities they've been involved with.

Riemann is the president of the Student Alumni Board and the external vice president of the Interfraternity Council. He also served as a student senator last year.

Neufeld is a student senator, and has served as an ag ambassador.

Union art gallery receives stay of execution, but news isn't as good as it appears

The Union art gallery will survive.

The K-State Student Union Enhancement Committee agreed in its Tuesday meeting to keep the gallery in its present location instead of replacing it with a bank.

But all is not good in K-State's art world.

Although the committee consented to leaving the gallery alone, the members also decided to reserve the right to reconsider commercially developing the site in the future.

One of the main reasons the committee didn't agree to develop the site now is because of the high cost of renovating the space for commercial leasing. The Union project is already suffering from lack of funding. Further development would only drain money needed for other areas of improvement.

Never did committee members argue that the art gallery affects the campus in a positive way and should be supported.

So, the committee's public pledge to the gallery is only half-true.

Supporters and patrons of the gallery might feel more comfortable with a concrete assurance by committee members that they are supportive of the gallery and its operations.

This is a great issue for the Fine Arts Council, the Department of Art, Union Program Council and other arts organizations to support. These campus arts entities should consider forming a support alliance for the gallery.

Student Senate should consider passing a resolution stating its support of the gallery and the continuance of its services into perpetuity.

Tuesday's decision to keep the gallery was not a brave step on the part of the committee in any way, but thankfully for K-State students, it was the right step.

The seven students and two faculty members who woke up early for the 7:30 a.m. meeting should be commended for their efforts on the part of all students and faculty.

But the members should also be encouraged to further commit themselves to the gallery's perseverance for other generations of K-State students and faculty.

Our View, an editorial selected and debated by a majority of the editorial board, is written by the editorial board after a concensus opinion is reached. The editorial board consists of Collegian editors and other students. For details on how you can become involved with the editorial board, contact Kevin Klassen, opinion editor.

DOUBLE DIPPING

Student government fund allocation practice leads to stagnant leadership

VIEWPOINT

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

RUSSELL FORTMEYER is a senior in architectural engineering. You can e-mail comments to Russell at (rmf@ksu.edu).

Double dipping.

That is a term our precious Student Senate uses when referring to student groups trying to get money from more than two student-funding entities (such as Fine Arts Council or any college council). Theoretically, it is strictly forbidden.

Enter hypocrisy.

Several of our senators serve on more than one student funding entity, which sets up the opportunity for them to vote twice on the same funding request.

For example, a senator serving on the Board of Student Publications votes twice on the same bill: once as a board member and once again as a senator. (For concerns of conflict of interest, I should also take the time to state that I am a Collegian representative to the Board of Student Publications.) This has happened before, and the senator usually gives up his or her vote as a conflict of interest on the floor of senate.

How effective is this? What kind of service is that senator giving either entity?

Serving two masters in student leadership is not only dangerous, it limits the variety of voices speaking for students. I won't pound out another anti-elitist column, but the problem is similar.

Students who wish to serve as senators should not only voluntarily give up other responsibilities that could be possible conflicts of interest; they should work to change the current Student Government Association constitution and by-laws to limit the number of elected positions a student can serve.

This may sound a bit undemocratic, but I ask if one could imagine a U.S. senator serving as city council person. The very idea sounds ludicrous.

Perhaps the only reason students can manage to involve themselves in so many different elected positions is because an SGA senator's responsibilities are relatively a joke when compared to a U.S. senator's — not to suggest our senators don't work hard for us.

And it wouldn't be a problem if these double dippers could actually rise to the occasion, but student attendance at several important councils and committees is outrageously low this year. Several members of the Board of Student Publications have attended less than half of the academic year's meetings.

This situation hasn't been a problem in the past, but the students filling leadership positions in SGA this year have been fueled more by the lure of power than a desire to change the political state on campus.

One could argue SGA has been unnecessarily politicized this year, especially when our student body president and vice president publicly deride Manhattan's elected officials. Some might say it sounds silly, but I thought we elected SGA leaders to work with our state representatives, not against them.

The ramifications of these actions will be felt for years as our representatives will now look with suspicion on the SGA office and wonder what sort of partisan agenda will be pushed that year.

The effects of limited representation, conflicts of interest and the politicization of the office of president collectively sustain a suffocating umbrella over campus student leadership.

If we students should keep one thing in mind as we approach the circus that is student elections, it should be to look for a visionary, unconventional candidate in all races.

Not a familiar name.

Not someone pushing issues that are popular in Anderson Hall. Not someone capitalizing on administrative gaffes that were overlooked or ignored.

We've seen all these before and it has gotten us nowhere.

Run effective candidates get elected for simple name recognition, you're and you can't blame us for voting those qualities. There are students who have had meaningful ideas, but they don't have the popularity or charisma to move on.

This behavior goes against the very foundation of student leadership. Is SGA an elected body of free-minded students or a power-grubbing club of conformists?

We can all answer that question in the voting booth March 10.

JESSICA CULLISON

I have always been an optimist, usually to the point of naiveté.

The past year, however, has taken a bit of the tint out of my rose-colored glasses. Many of you may find this immature and cheesy, but not too long ago I believed with all my heart that all people were good. Ignorant, maybe. Didn't have the same opportunities as me, possibly. Weren't taught to make decisions with consequences in mind, definitely.

But that anyone would hurt another person intentionally? Never.

As you can imagine, when I finally realized that there are actually people in the world who care only for themselves, I was, to say the least, devastated.

Since then, I have struggled to regain hope that the world is not going to fall apart and that humankind will somehow crawl out of the depths it has sunk to.

It has been a slow process, with little progress.

A few weeks ago, however, some people managed a miracle. I am not sure who they are, but there are a few individuals who deserve thanks for what they did for me.

I was in class until 4:45 p.m. After class, I ran into an old friend from the residence halls who works for K-State Parking Services. He gave me a ride to my car in the van he was driving because he was headed for the same parking lot. After he dropped me off, I opened my back pack to get my keys. I opened all three pockets. I dumped my books out. I emptied my jacket. No keys.

I won't bore you with the details of the panic that followed. Let's skip to the punch. After running all over campus retracing my steps and checking the lost and found at the K-State Student Union, my keys still had not turned up. So, there I was at 5:30 on a Friday evening waiting for my roommate to come and pick me up.

I called Parking Services. No answer. I called the K-State Police. They really didn't have to bend over backwards, but the dispatcher was so helpful and managed to get a hold of Parking Services for me. They searched every van. No keys. These people stayed late to search for some keys that a scatter-brained woman had managed to misplace.

Well, I was distraught. No license, no apartment keys, no car keys, no student ID, no cash, Friday night. UGH.

At 7:30 p.m., the woman working at the Information Booth at the Union called. She had my keys. No one knew who turned them in.

Thank you. Thank you. Thank you.

Everyone could learn from this. I certainly did.

I cannot explain just how much all of this meant to me, but the dispatcher, Parking Services, the woman at the information booth and whoever turned in my keys affected my life in a big way.

They reminded me that there are a lot of people who care about others — even some woman who can't stay organized enough to keep track of her personal belongings.

Life is a crazy scene involving a lot of humans stumbling around trying to find their way. Often, hopelessness is an unavoidable feeling as one searches for meaning and some kind of purpose or direction.

I haven't found the meaning of life, but thanks to the individuals who helped me that Friday, I realize how important all the littlest things we do are.

Never hesitate to participate in a random act of kindness, the difference you make can be larger than you imagine.

You may even help a scatter brained guest columnist regain a bit of her optimism.

•STUDENT PUBLICATION FEE ANOTHER WASTED EXPENSE

Editor,

Student Senate raises taxes! would have been a more appropriate headline for last Thursday evening's approval to raise the publication fee for the Collegian. Obviously, one couldn't expect the paper, with a vested interest in the outcome of the fee increase, to make such a proclamation.

However, you can quite fairly substitute the word tax for the word fee wherever it appears in your K-State catalog, for that is essentially what it is.

Call it what you will, but anytime a governing body is allowed to collect revenues from its constituents, in my estimation it is a tax. Certainly, taxes are used by governments to invest in the future, and a four color printing press may be a valid necessity for the 21st century at K-State.

However, I would issue this challenge — start letting the free market work as it does in the real world by eliminating the student publication fee and begin charging 25 cents a copy for the Collegian. You will quickly discover how much of a necessity the college newspaper really is, even if it features full-color photos every day.

The paper is here as a service to the students, and many enjoy it each day, but the real beneficiaries are those gaining valuable experience in its day-to-day production. Put in this light, a four-color press becomes an expensive luxury rather than a necessity.

Whoever said that college life doesn't really offer real-world experiences? At least for our budding politicians, they are right on track learning the old tax-and-spend mentality.

Unfortunately for them, the current political trend is toward lowering taxes and finding ways to do more with less.

The senator who claimed that the increase is equivalent to the cost of a movie and a hot dog is using an old political tactic. This tactic is designed to fool the unwary into believing that each subtle increase is affordable, until the whole amount paid is discovered.

It is my hot dog and my movie, and in my humble opinion, $227 a semester is enough to cover all of the campus privileges and then some.

When student senate elections come around, the only candidate who will get my vote is the one who will dedicate themselves to finding ways of reducing the cost of my education, not increasing it.

•SASS CALLS FOR STUDENT FEEDBACK ABOUT PARKING GARAGE

Editor,

This letter is regarding the recent discussions over the proposed parking garage. We, as members of the Student Affairs and Social Services Committee of Student Senate, are asking for student input on this issue.

The Parking Council has been discussing solutions for the perceived parking problem on campus for some time. The most widely discussed solution has been to build a parking garage.

Some of the locations offered have included the lot south of the K-State Student Union, the grassy area south of Memorial Stadium, the lot north of Waters Hall and the Ramada Inn parking lot.

The parking garage has been estimated to cost somewhere around $10 million, which is the amount Gov. Bill Graves has budgeted for the structure. However, it is estimated that the cost of a student parking permit would increase drastically to help pay for the construction.

Our committee has been discussing different alternatives, including an expanded shuttle bus system, which would run throughout Manhattan.

This is where student input is needed. The Parking Council will be meeting at 3:30 p.m. Feb. 20 in Edwards Hall. We would like to be able to present some of the student comments when the council meets.

It is our belief that the student body has not been heard on this issue, therefore we are asking for students to give their opinions. One method is to call the Office of Student Activities and Services at 532-6541. Another way to express your opinion is to e-mail us at (emilynn@ksu.edu).

We welcome any comments or questions you may have on the issue.

Funding, input allow expansion to begin in May

HEATHER PERKINS
staff reporter

The International Student Center is going to be expanded.

"It is an exciting time, now that we're so close," Jim Endrizzi, a program coordinator for the International Student Center, said.

The first phase of the expansion will cost about $175,000 and will consist of building additional office space, upgrading the multipurpose area and creating formal display space.

The funding for the expansion was obtained through private sources. The center has raised about $300,000 for the expansion and is planning to expand in phases so as not to exceed the budget.

Architects from Rafael Architects met Thursday and Friday to gain input from faculty, administration and students wishing to share ideas concerning the expansion.

A list of needs for the expansion was created and then faculty and students ranked the ones they felt were most important.

A multipurpose room upgrade, lounge upgrade, media center/library area, recreation room and an outdoor cafe topped the list of possible expansion projects.

"Now that we have raised the money, there is a lot more focus on how to spend it," Endrizzi said.

The architects said they are hoping to make the new facilities inviting and warm, yet keep the existing subtleties of the building.

"We want to add on to the building and keep things in the same vein. It is a well-thought-out building, it has just outgrown its facilities," Ron Grotenhuis, architect from Rafael Architects, said.

The architects are also looking for ways to better link the building to campus.

"People are seeing a possibility to reach into the international community. The designers are looking for ways to link the center to the rest of campus. We are seeing how we are going to draw the students in," Endrizzi said.

The architects drew up several preliminary plans and asked for input from faculty and students. The final plans should be completed sometime in March, and ground breaking is set for May.

Aggieville improvements attributed to leadership, spirit of businesswoman

STORY BY D. SCOTT FRITCHEN

CHERYL SIEBEN, executive director of the Aggieville Business Association, works for business owners to promote the area and plan events. The ABA, which began in 1915 with 23 members, now has more than 60 members.

In order to appreciate the beauty of long-term change, close your eyes for a moment next time you exit an Aggieville business.

The sidewalk crumbles in a mere path of footprints on a dirt road. The string of existing brick buildings expands into square wheat fields. The only standing structure, a single two-story house, blocks your view of Anderson Hall.

Only then can you fathom the challenge facing Aggieville forefathers some 108 years ago when creating a business district.

Only then can you fully appreciate the prosperity of Aggieville.

If you want to see change within the past eight years, go no farther than Cheryl Sieben.

As executive director of the Aggieville Business Association for the past eight years, she orchestrates change that maintains Aggieville's success.

"I thought I'd give it a year," Sieben said. "I'm still here."

Sieben doesn't own a business. She worked for Aggieville Pizza Hut during college and then for the Pizza Hut office. She performed bookkeeping for Dark Horse and Bushwacker's, two Aggieville businesses, and later opened up her own business, Basket Works.

"One day I see this ad — this was supposed to be a part-time job — and I thought, 'Great, I can do both of these.' But it isn't a part-time job," Sieben said. "I sold my business.

"I sort of had this affection for Aggieville and working with the people here."

Today, call her the ring-leader. Call her the referee, pacifier, coach, or candy-cane distributor as Varney's Book Store Textbook Manager Dan Walter refers to her.

Or, perhaps you can call her a saint, like ABA president Kathi Haynes. Haynes is owner of Haynes Salon and Supply.

Walter and Haynes said Aggieville wouldn't be the same without Sieben's involvement.

Sieben sits in her office surrounded by piles of Aggieville files from the past. Little did any of the original 23 members of Aggieville Club realize in 1915 that their legacy dedicated toward the improvement of Aggieville would span to 62 ABA members in 1997.

Little did they know Aggieville would even have 62 businesses.

"I work for all the business owners and try to promote Aggieville," Sieben said. "I'm the contact person between all the merchants and the police, fire department, University and the city. I try to get membership up. I plan promotions. I plan networking events that raise money and get us to meet each other and have fun. All that happens in here."

The change doesn't necessarily occur within her office inside the Aggieville Pizza Hut office.

Aggieville merchants often see Sieben walking door to door with endless projects and fundraising drives. ABA sponsors annual events including Oktoberfest, St. Patrick's Day Road Race and Celebration, and Aggieville Trick-or-Treating.

Sieben said the road race attracts contestants from several states.

"We've had up to almost 1,000 people involved with our races," she said. "I had a guy call me today from Montana to find out about the races."

ABA donates coupon books to the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce for visitors and sponsors the shuttle bus service to K-State football games.

Colorado's Chauncey Billups makes the Buffaloes an upper-echelon ballclub.

And to ensure that the K-State men's basketball team can pick up its first Big 12 road game of the season Wednesday night, it must keep Billups from making the other four Buffaloes on the floor great.

"He'll hurt you in so many areas, and he'll make all the other players on the team better by distributing the ball," K-State coach Tom Asbury said. "There's no secrets this time of year — you have to contain their key players and hope you can execute offensively."

Colorado assistant coach Terry Dunn reiterated that statement.

"Chauncey draws a lot of attention. He has the ability to get different players the ball because he does draw a lot of attention."

In particular, Dunn said he makes forward Fred Edmonds a better basketball player while on the floor.

"He gets him the ball in transition, in open spots," Dunn said. "He gets Freddy the ball in on the fast-break and allows him to get that easy basket."

Asbury said the only way to crumble the success of this all-America candidate was to keep a fresh defender on him throughout the entire game.

"When we had success against him last year, we made a consistent effort to keep a fresh body on him. That's what we'll have to do Wednesday night," he said.

Dunn also said Billups' play strengthens the play of forward Martice Moore.

"He has really stepped his game up to the table," Dunn said. "He knows his senior year

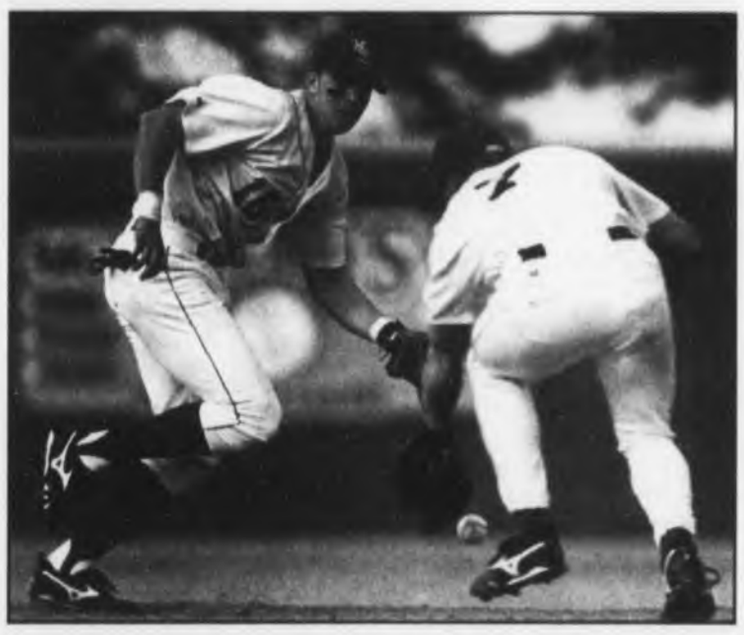
While preparing for what seems to be a big week for the women's basketball team, Coach Deb Patterson still wants to take things one day at a time.

"I am encouraged by the fact that we still have two weeks left to step up and assert ourselves in this league," Patterson said.

The Wildcats will begin by facing the Colorado Buffaloes, 15-7 overall and 9-3 in the Big 12, at 7 tonight at Bramlage Coliseum. Colorado, ranked No. 3 in the Big 12, is the first of two top Big 12 teams the Cats meet this week, with the next being Kansas on Saturday.

"When we play the No. 1 team, the No. 2 team and the No. 3 team, people don't expect us to win," Patterson said. "This week, we have the opportunity to get a significant win against a great opponent."

In their meeting with the Iowa State Cyclones on Saturday, the Cats only scored 40 points, with senior forward Andria Jones posting 25 alone. But they kept the Cyclones to 34-percent shooting with their defensive efforts.



"We play great defense," Patterson said. "But

IN THE CATS' SEASON HOME-OPENER, A 17-6 ROUT CAN ONLY BE CONSIDERED

TOTAL DOMINATION

STORY BY BRIAN SMOLLER • PHOTOS BY CRAIG HACKER

HEATH SCHESSER moves in to back up second baseman Todd Fereday as he fields a grounder in K-State's 17-6 victory over Missouri Western Tuesday afternoon at Frank Myers Field.

Easy win offers hope for Cats in 4th regular-season contest

Domination. Total domination.

That's what the K-State baseball team exercised on the visiting Griffons from Missouri Western Tuesday afternoon.

In just their fourth game of the season, the Cats destroyed their opponent, 17-6.

On a day where the wind was howling toward left field, the Cat offense pounded out 17 hits, including four home runs. Senior shortstop Heath Schesser crushed two home runs, going 3-4 with seven RBIs and three runs scored.

Schesser's grand slam in the second inning put the cap on a nine-run outburst through the first two innings of play.

"It was a three-one fastball, up and in," Schesser said. "That's where I like it."

Schesser's teammates also aided in the onslaught. Big 12 player of the week, Scott Poepard, got the scoring going in the first inning with a two-run double and Eric Sommerhauser and Paul Cranford hit home runs.

"We didn't try to do too much," Schesser said about his team's strategy. "We just tried to hit line drives."

The line drives off of the Wildcats' bats sprayed all over Frank Myers Field like water from a sprinkler gone haywire. The 17 hits by the Cats represent a good start for the team this season, Coach Mike Clark said.

"We got on them early," Clark said. "It was a pretty successful day."

Clark used seven pitchers to keep Missouri Western to six runs on 10 hits. Mickey Blount got the victory for the Wildcats.

"It's kind of like spring training," Clark said. "We just wanted to get them some innings."

Blount started for the Cats throwing two innings allowing one unearned run on one hit, while striking out four.

Chris Traylor came on in the third and threw two innings allowing one run on four hits, while also striking out four.

Tim Hertzel, Pat Hertzel, Brandon Peck, Brian Thompson and David Johnson each threw an inning. Clark took special note of Tim Hertzel's performance in the fifth, striking out the side.

"He pitched extremely well," he said. "It's a tough adjustment for those guys who normally throw a couple innings, to come in and throw one."

Jeff Crist took the loss for the Griffons, pitching only the first two innings, allowing nine runs, eight of them earned, on eight hits, while striking out and walking three.

The Griffons' lone highlight came on a monstrous blast by Eric Sivertson in the fourth inning off of Traylor. The wind carried it over the trees in left field and into the parking lot.

The Cats stay at home for their next games against the Air Force. K-State plays a doubleheader on Saturday beginning at noon, before wrapping the series up with a game at noon on Sunday.

Track team led by female stars gives columnist a sense of pride

So, I'm not a big track fan but I'll have to change my mind after enduring last week's lengthy KSU Coors Invitational meet.

I was pretty impressed, to say the least.

It would appear by the standings at the end of the meet that the Cats obviously had some of the better athletes. The competition wasn't all that grand, but still most of the competitors earned some high-quality marks.

VIEWPOINT

JEREMY KELLEY is a sophomore in print journalism. You can e-mail your comments to Jeremy at (weasal1@ksu.edu)

When one thinks of track stars, I'm sure mostly male names come to mind. Carl Lewis, Steve Fritz and Michael Johnson just to name a few.

Of course, who could forget Canada's best, Ben Johnson?

I rarely think of women, but there are a certain few who rise above the dust.

I was truly astonished to find the opposite to be true of the K-State track team. To my surprise the K-State track team is overwhelmed with female stars, and they are definitely stars.

What dropped my jaw the most was the female throwers the team boasts, especially Renetta Seiler, who can chuck a 20-pound weight probably further than most can shoot a basketball.

That may be a tidbit of an exaggeration, but you get the idea.

Seiler just steps into the pocket and twirls around this lump of lead in a bag, and then heaves it like a rock out of a slingshot. It is absolutely amazing how much trajectory she hurls that thing with, and every time it goes at least 56 feet.

And Seiler broke a meet record with a throw of 58'3-3/4". It's utterly astonishing what she can do with that weight. Seiler has already qualified for the NCAA tournament, but the even more amazing thing is that she is throwing with two blistered fingers, which may deter her from throwing the weight even further.

She isn't the only one.

Kirsten Schultz and Anna Whitham sling the weight almost as far Seiler does. Whitham is small, but she gets that thing moving. I thought Schultz really shined in the shot put posting a mark of almost 44 feet, just three feet behind USA heptathlon champion Ricky Barker, who mustered a toss of nearly 47 feet at Ahearn Field House Saturday.

The track team also vaunts some fast Cats.

Television doesn't quite give sprinters accurate play. I remember watching. The runners on television at the Olympics last summer and really couldn't get a feel of how fast they were actually running, but again seeing it in person was a whole new story.

Karissa Stewart and Darrylette Bass filled the top two spots in the women's 60-meter dash with times of 7.46 and 7.5 seconds respectively. That's almost twice as fast as my 1985 Nissan 200SX can accelerate from zero to 60.

The only disappointment on the day was not being able to see Vanitta Kinard do the triple jump. She didn't compete in the event but rather went the safe route in preparation for Friday's Big 12 Indoor Championships.

Apparently Kinard is unreal. She is the second best triple jumper in the nation. She broke a K-State record a few weeks ago in Nebraska, yet still feels she can jump a lot farther. Kinard has also qualified for the NCAA Tournament in early March.

I think it's apparent everywhere. Female athletes are making a step up at K-State. Look at the women's basketball team, which is on the bubble for the NCAA tourney.

If you ever get a chance to go watch these Cats, make the very best effort. Coach Cliff Rovelto is doing a heck of a job with these women. It will be a new experience and will probably knock your socks off.

STDs plague sexual relations

STORY BY KARA LOWE • ILLUSTRATION BY MATT HAWKINS

Protection from sexually transmitted diseases are a topic of worldwide interest, due to the rise in STDs.

According to information distributed by Planned Parenthood, every 13 minutes someone contracts an STD. Sexually active people, regardless of sexual preference, are at risk to contract an STD. This risk increases with the number of partners.

STDs can cause problems to those infected, including sterility, cancer and death.

"If someone is diagnosed with an STD they need to talk to a medical practitioner and get treatment right away. Following the treatment directions is very important, as well as stopping sex with their partner until the partner is also tested and treated," Reita Currie, registered nurse at Lafene Student Health Center, said.

Many STDs can be treated with medication. Among these are gonorrhea, chlamydia, syphilis, pubic lice, trichomoniasis and scabies.

Currie said people who have been diagnosed with an STD and treated need to look at the positive aspect: the treatment helps get the disease under control.

Herpes, genital warts, AIDS and the HIV virus do not have curable treatments. However, many of the diseases can be managed.

"Those who have been diagnosed with one of these diseases need to follow their doctor's recommendations. There are types of treatment that can help them feel more comfortable and decrease the number of outbreaks of the disease," Currie said.

Many people who have an STD do not have any symptoms. Eighty to 90 percent of all female gonorrhea cases do not have symptoms of the disease, according to "For Your Good Health," a brochure about STDs published by Lafene. The brochure also states individuals with latent syphilis can show no signs of the disease for years. Many cases of AIDS show no symptoms for one to 10 years.

"A high percent of STD cases show no symptoms. Therefore, many people may not know they have an STD at all. If your partner has tested positive for an STD, go get tested, even if you do not have any symptoms. Also, don't assume the disease is gone if the symptoms are gone," Currie said.

Currie said there are many ways to reduce the risk of contracting an STD. Practicing safer sex is one method. Abstinence is another. She said using latex condoms helps prevent the transmission of an STD.

"Check the expiration date on the condom package and make sure that the condom is not damaged before use," Currie said.

Another method of reducing the chance of an STD is drinking in moderation. The American College Health Association encourages sexually active people to control the use of alcohol and

Don't Cry for Me, Belgium

Bulgarian actress Anya Pencheva said she would have a plaster cast made of her breasts to divert the country from its financial worries. The cast will be displayed at the National Theater in Sofia. "It is a pity to focus everything on (budget cuts) when there are such beautiful breasts around," Pencheva said.

Nonprofit organization highlights Manhattan's acoustic music scene

Tickets for Birdhouse performances are available in advance from the Dusty Bookshelf and the Manhattan Center for the Arts. Ticket prices are $8 for general admission and $6 for senior citizens and students.

YVONNE PEARSON
staff reporter

Students who appreciate and enjoy listening to quality music do not have to drive to Kansas City or Lawrence to hear it.

The Birdhouse, a nonprofit organization, has brought live acoustic music to Manhattan for three years.

"It's like a concert, but we only have 150 seats," Steve Martini, board member of the Birdhouse, said. "Every seat is great where you can actually watch.

"You can see them, hear them, and you can see the chords they're playing. You'll be amazed by all of that."

The Birdhouse has more characteristics of a small concert hall than that of a bar, he said.

"You don't have a bunch of drunk people taking away from the music," Michael Niemann, fifth-year senior in mechanical engineering, said.

"It's more like a place where people go to appreciate music and artists come to play to be respected."

The artists who come to the Birdhouse are selected carefully by board members David Kamerer, Martini and Gretchen Holden.

"We all go to music festivals in the summer," Kamerer said. "We all go to as many shows as we can to see how people are live.

"A lot of people are different live than on record, so it's important to see them. We then choose the best."

The artists they choose are at the top of their field in acoustic music and internationally known.

"These are artists that are deep into their craft," Kamerer said. "They present their songs directly and openly."

Martini said all the artists that have performed have been great people.

"Not only do they play their music, but they interact with the audience," Martini said.

"We've had some really special moments in there."

Plans for the Birdhouse series are being made for spring 1998.

"We want to be here in the long haul," Kamerer said. "We want to grow our audience. If the audience grows, we'll branch out, and we'll try to do other kinds of music.

"We'll let the audience tell us where to go."

Artists coming this semester include Kristina Olsen, Cheryl Wheeler and Brooks Williams.

Tom Kimmel and Tom Prasada-Rao will perform along with Michael Lille for the Birdhouse's third anniversary.

Al Petteway will close the spring season.

Olsen will perform at 8 p.m Feb. 21 at the Manhattan Center for the Arts.

She has three albums, with the most recent "Hurry on Home." She plays guitar, slide guitar, concertina, dulcimer and saxophone.

Tickets are available in advance from the Dusty Bookshelf and the Manhattan Center for the Arts.

Admission is $8 for general admission and $6 for senior citizens and students.

reached a balance on the lease area on this floor," Aaron Otto, committee member and student body vice president, said.

Toward the end of the meeting, Otto said that although the space could remain a gallery, the Union should reserve the right to develop the space in the future.

The committee also discussed the addition of a bank.

Current committee plans call for the bank, which was at one time considered as a replacement for the gallery, to move to the southern end of the second floor. It would replace a planned lounge area that was to replace part of the current second-story bookstore area.

"I believe by moving the bank to the southern end, we'll be placing it on second-tier status," Carney said. "I don't think a bank will draw students down to the southern end."

Connaughton said other student unions have had success with banks even when they are located in out-of-the-way places.

"People might seek out banking services more so, because it's something you need," Connaughton said.

Other agenda items included the discussion of a memo from Union project architect Ken Ebert of the Ken Ebert Design Group.

In the memo, Ebert expressed design points relating mostly to the retail spaces in the Union.

Among the food tenants expected to lease are an express burger joint such as McDonald's, Amigos, Freshens (ice cream), Manchu Wok, Classic Cutters (traditional fare/carvery), Slicer's Deli, Roosters/Coops (chicken), and Magnificent Mealery (salad bar/soups).

If the budget allows, an International Reflections ethnic food concept could be included in the food court.

A Sbarro's Italian restaurant is planned for the Union Station space.

The committee attendance was nearly half, with all but one of the eight-person student delegation in attendance and only two staff/faculty members present out of nine positions.

AGGIEVILLE

for a donation of canned food and the past two years collected donations for the Boys and Girls Club outside the Denning Construction Playhouse in Triangle Park. The playhouse is given away each December as a holiday present for a generous family.

"Aggieville is in her heart," Haynes said. "She works so hard for us. She has a huge job."

"Well, just like last year being president, she makes it easy because she does a majority of the work and she'd consult me with the big decisions," former ABA President Bryan Taylor said.

Taylor owns the Palace.

"She's more or less the resident CEO of Aggieville," he said.

Although it isn't difficult to find the ABA white diamond-shaped membership sticker outside the door of many Aggieville businesses, Sieben's goal is to have participation from all 115 Aggieville businesses.

Sieben said some Aggieville businesses don't understand that whether or not they join, she still works for them.

"I promote Aggieville. Some of them just don't get that. They don't realize that anything we do, like when we had 500 people here on St. Pat's Day, gets people into the Aggieville business district," Sieben said.

"They're independent business people, whether they're part of the organization or not, and I have no control over them," Sieben said. "I may have to answer for them, but I don't control what goes on in their business."

ABA memberships are $175 a year or $14 a month. With the loss of city funding due to budget cuts, ABA survives solely on membership. The money funds Aggieville-sponsored events and contributes to Sieben's salary.

ABA publishes a monthly newsletter and meets the first Tuesday of each month at Aggieville Pizza Hut. The public is welcome to attend.

With the large number of members, each with their own business and opinions, ABA generally doesn't take a stand on political issues. But, Sieben said, "ABA has always worked hard for bars and their issues."

Aggieville underwent a streetscape remodeling project for its 100th birthday in 1989. Street lights were installed, pillars now stand on the fresh grass of Triangle Park, and granite squares are now embedded in the sidewalks.

But change is inevitable and just eight years later, with road-expansion issues constantly facing Manhattan, Sieben expects Aggieville to encounter a few changes in the near future.

Although she said she wouldn't involve specifics until she knew more information, Sieben said, "Anderson is an issue I face all the time."

Sieben said she remains an optimist when she imagines the rate of growth that will occur in only a few years.

"Just like when they were redoing the sidewalks and merchants had boards leading up to their doors," Sieben said. "It was sort of inconvenient at the time, but it'll be just like Anderson. Once it's completed, it's going to be nice."

you've got to come down to the other end of the floor and score."

When the Cats traveled to Boulder Jan. 29, they encountered excellent shooting from outside the arc by Buffs Erin Scholz and Alexis Felts.

"We defended very well inside against Colorado," Patterson said. "We must defend the perimeter better. We also need our players to step up and score."

Cat guard Missy Decker was five of six from the arc in Boulder, and Patterson said with guard Brit Jacobson not expected to play, the team would emphasize its offense.

"We're getting shots," Patterson said. "We're just not dropping them."

There are significant size advantages against Colorado, Patterson said.

"Colorado has players at 6' 3", 6'4" inside," Patterson said. "Just about all the teams we line up against have a significant size advantage. It's not about size, necessarily, but about how aggressive and how smart you play."

The Cats recognize that a win against Colorado or Kansas could send a message to the NCAA Tournament selection committee, and Patterson said every game becomes more important down this stretch.

"We're going to have to fight, claw and scratch to get to where we want to be," Patterson said. "I've said it before, but getting a win against a team like Colorado or Kansas would be monumental.

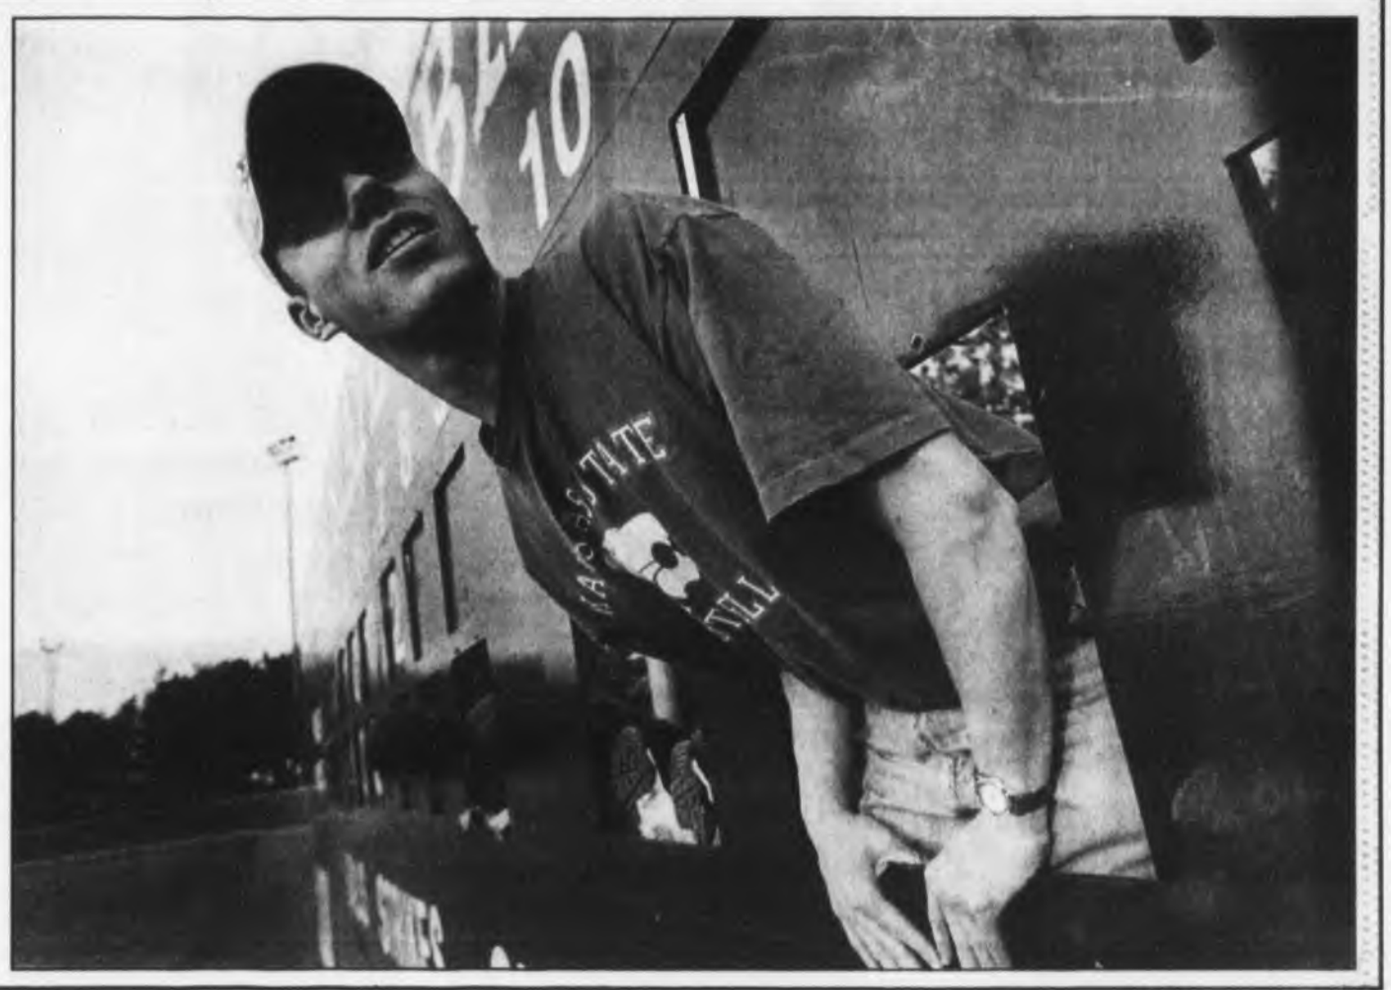
is about to come to a close, and he knows he has a lot of potential."

Billups is averaging 19.6 points per game while dishing out on average 5.1 assists. Edmonds is chipping in 12.8 points each contest.



The Buffaloes (17-7, 8-4) are coming off two losses, which include a 25-point loss at Oklahoma and a 40-point shellacking via the hands of No. 1 KU. K-State (9-13, 2-10), on the other hand, lost to Iowa State Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum.

Asbury said he thought Colorado would be readily prepared after getting clocked for the last two games.

"When you coach out of fear, I don't want to play them with two losses," he said. "They'll make a great effort Wednesday night and we'll need to match their intensity."

As Big 12 tournament time draws near, Asbury said his last concern is pulling the team from the depths of the conference cellar, but rather just make a strong finish at the end of the season.

"The only thing I am concerned about is building momentum for the tournament," Asbury said "There's a special push to win every single game and we just have to go out and try to do just that."

MARC LARSEN, junior in biology, checks for the correct score on the K-State baseball scoreboard during the team's home opener Tuesday afternoon against Missouri Western at Frank Myers Field. With a 17-6 victory Tuesday, the Cats are off to a 3-1 start and will host a three game series against Air Force this weekend.

tion, but to change usage patterns," he said.

"A good way to get around it is to print your paper from two different computers," Damon Osipik, senior in German, said,

Many times, students print out a paper only to find out that the printer has malfunctioned, and they are unable to print another copy.

Gould said students could call lab support at 532-4924 for guidance in fixing the problem. Students should also call so CNS could be made aware of the problem and address the specific needs of the student.

"Each application responds differently," Gould said. "We're learning as we go."

Gould and Satterlee said they have received both positive and negative responses about the print limits.

"We've gotten a few complaints and some compliments, but once we explain why they're there, the user understands," Satterlee said.

"We had several complaints about large print jobs, and that caused us to investigate and implement," Gould said. "We've had far fewer complaints about the limits as opposed to those about inaccessibility."

Osipik said he disagrees.

"The limits are bad, because the printers on campus are so unreliable that one must print a second copy," he said.

Gould's recommendation to students is to make a final copy and then go to a copy center to make multiple copies if needed.

"It is also encouraged that students make use of print preview features before submitting a final print job," Gould said.

other mood-altering drugs. These can cloud the ability to make safe decisions about sex.

The ACHA encourages people to take care of their bodies by eating right, getting enough sleep and exercising regularly.

"As with any virus, individuals are less susceptible to infection when in good health. And, if someone has an STD, a strong immune system is important to bring the disease under control," Currie said.

If someone thinks they may have an STD, they need to get tested, Currie said. Lafene offers testing, treatment and counseling for STD patients.

"The earlier the patient gets treated for the STD, the much better quality of life and length of life they will have," Currie said.

Stovall discloses proposals to increase campus safety

▶ Look it up on the World Wide Web. The underage drinking bill, the parole-probation bill, the university police bill, the violent offender registration bill and the records bill can be found on the Kansas government Web site at (www.ink.org/public/legislative/fulltext-bill.html).

▶ 10-STEP PLAN PROPOSES to reduce underage drinking, strengthen sex offender laws

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Attorney General Carla Stovall is pushing proposals she and members of a task force believe will make university and community-college campuses safer.

Stovall outlined 10 initiatives during a news conference Wednesday. Present were members of a task force she led, which spent nine months studying campus safety issues, then drafted the proposals.

The initiatives include proposals to strengthen laws against underage drinking and expand a law that requires sex offenders to register with law enforcement officials when they leave prison.

"So many students go away to college right out of high school with some pretty wide-eyed ideas," Stovall told reporters. "We certainly hope a lot of what we're doing is pro-active, so we don't wait for another tragedy."

Stovall formed the task force after the off-campus murder in March 1996 of Carrie Williams, a 20-year-old Pittsburg State University student. The accused killer, Gary Kleypas, was on parole from a second-degree murder conviction in Missouri and was a nursing student at Pittsburg State.

In July 1993, Stephanie Schmidt, a 19-year-old Pittsburg State student, was murdered by Donald Ray Gideon, who had been released from prison after serving time for rape and sodomy.

"This particular group is thrust into a trusting environment," Gene Schmidt, Stephanie Schmidt's father, said of college students.

Five proposals have been introduced as Senate bills. They would do these things.

- Make it a felony to use false identification to purchase liquor illegally and increase the penalties for supplying alcohol to underage drinkers.
- Allow judges and the parole board to prevent criminals from attending universities or community colleges as a condition of probation or parole.
- Expand the jurisdiction of state university police and the Washburn University of Topeka police, so they can respond to calls off campus.
- Expand the state's sex offender registration act so that it also requires people convicted of murder or manslaughter to register with local law enforcement officials after they are released from prison.
- Clarify the Open Records Act so that the Department of Corrections can make more information public about criminals.

These are the task force's other proposals.

- Support efforts to add money to university budgets for improvements that will make campuses safer.
- Have state professional licensing boards be stricter in deciding whether to allow ex-felons to obtain licenses.
- Encourage news organizations to publish or broadcast information about the release of violent offenders from prison.
- Have the attorney general's office serve as a clearinghouse for information about safety programs.

TOPEKA — James Brady brought his crusade against the proliferation of handguns to Kansas today, urging Senate and House committees in separate hearings not to approve legislation that would permit licensed individuals to carry concealed pistols.

"There is no need to put more guns on our streets just to please the special interest gun lobby and those who profit from making guns," Brady said in reading a prepared statement to the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee Wednesday morning.

Brady, who was wounded in the 1981 assassination attempt on President Ronald Reagan by John Hinckley in Washington and remains confined to a wheelchair, also planned to testify before the House Federal and State Affairs Committee later today.

"The gun lobby wants more guns on our streets, and allowing virtually unrestricted carrying of loaded, concealed weapons will do just that," said Brady, who with his wife,

FUTURE TAKE OFF

Erik Anton has always wanted to fly for the U.S. Air Force.

His vision will become a reality after his graduation in May. Anton, senior in electrical engineering, was one of 500 ROTC pilot candidates across the country selected for pilot training.

Once selected, Anton applied for the Euro-NATO Joint Jet Pilot Training program. ENJJPT, as it is referred to, is an elite group of candidates chosen to train with pilot trainees as well as instructors from foreign countries involved in NATO.

Anton was one of 46 individuals chosen for a slot out of 151 nominees.

"Ninety-five percent of ENJJPT grads fly fighter when they graduate, normal pilot-training statistics for grads aren't nearly that high," Anton said.

If candidates fail to complete the ENJJPT training, they cannot go back to complete regular pilot training.

Anton said pilot candidates are selected based on their scores on the Air Force Officer Qualifying Tests, their college grade point average, their rank among their ROTC class and flying experience.

Anton has a private pilot's license, but said pilot slots usually go to a candidate with an average of 133 hours of flying experience.

Anton has only around 50 hours of experience, but did well on the tests, which he said are like SATs or ACTs with specialized sections applying to military skills and knowledge.

Pilot candidate's scores in the pilot and navigator sections are especially important, he said.

Anton hails from Satanta, a small town in the southwestern corner of the state. When he was 2, 3 and 4 years old, his father was taking flying lessons. Anton went up with him each time his father flew.

"I knew from then on, that is what I wanted to do," Anton said. "I couldn't ever read enough or learn enough about it."

Anton attended a small high school and came to K-State on a four-year ROTC scholarship in fall 1993.

His training for ENJJPT will begin in Wichita Falls, Texas, after graduation.

Anton expects one year of training in Texas and said ENJJPT graduates are more likely to be stationed in other countries than regular pilots. The training will require intensive study and flight time.

He said that he is looking forward to flying Air Force Jets, and his future is bright.

Fort Riley soldiers deployed to Bosnia

The U.S. Army has announced the two units from Fort Riley that have been chosen for deployment are going to Bosnia.

"They did specify it as Bosnia," Deb Skidmore, Fort Riley public information officer, said.

The troops are being deployed to support the U.S. Forces participating in Operation Joint Guard, which is in support of Bosnia.

The authorized strength of the 41st Infantry is 762 troops and the 977th Military Police Co. authorized strength is 177 troops.

The purpose of the mission and the area of operations were not released at press time.

On Tuesday, it was reported that the troops would be going to the European Theater.

Chinese senior leader dies from Parkinson's disease

▶ DENG XIAOPING'S ILLNESS worsened after treatment

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — Deng Xiaoping, the veteran Communist revolutionary who guided China from political chaos and economic ruin toward prosperity, died Wednesday. The government said he was 93.

Deng suffered from the advanced stage of Parkinson's disease, complicated by lung infections, and died from respiratory failure after emergency treatment, the Xinhua News Agency said.

It said Deng died at 7:08 a.m. and an announcement was issued to all Communist Party, government and military offices.

Four armed guards with AK-47s stood outside the alley to Deng's home, near the palace China's emperors used for 500 years.

City Commission amends development plans

DAVID FAIRBANKS
staff reporter

The City Commission met Tuesday night to amend the final development plan for the Ramada Inn Planned Unit Development. This amendment includes the construction of the Gold Fork, a new restaurant with an outdoor patio, at the Ramada Inn at 17th Street and Anderson Avenue.

Ken Alexander, architect of the Gold Fork, presented the new layout to the commission.

"The restaurant will contain new materials, a new color scheme, different light fixtures, and so on. It's a whole new design concept," Alexander said.

With the restaurant comes a new outdoor seating area on the south-west side of the hotel. The new patio will add to the whole dining experience, Alexander said.

This Gold Fork restaurant will be the first of its kind to be constructed, with a nationwide chain to follow. The chain will not only be built in hotels, but as free-standing restaurants as well, Alexander said.

The restaurant will have a staff of up to 130 workers and is slated to open by the end of March, Alexander said.

Also included in the amended plan is the widening of the service drive on Laramie Street and the reduction of Ramada parking spaces from 254 to 239. Director of Community Development, Karen Davis, said by widening the drive and eliminating 15 spaces, service vehicles will be able to maneuver more easily.

Additional discussion Tuesday night included the paving of Woodland Hills, a housing development in Manhattan. Ten new petitions were up for commission's approval after the original six were voted down by the commission two weeks ago.

Out of the 10, only one was submitted by the neighborhood in question. The rest were submitted by the developer.

A crowd of 47 people was in attendance to witness the commission's decision. The main issues dealt with having more than one access road to the development and whether to use city-at-large funds to help pay for the project.

After much deliberation, one of the developer's petitions was accepted. This petition paves Juniper Street in phase one, Brierwood Drive in phase two and Stonewood Street in phase three. The petition also uses no city-at-large funds.

Mike Hill, representative of ULD Inc., said completion of these three phases depends on how smoothly the project goes.

"We hope to have phase two began by next year and phase three in three to four years," he said.

Also included in the petition is the paving of sidewalks and a per month lot assessment of $79. For unplotted lots, $16,000 will be assessed to the developer ULD Inc.

Tuesday's meeting also included the renewal of Mid-America Commercialization Corporation's contract with the city of Manhattan at $99,000 and the naming of Eisenhower Middle School's baseball field. The name was changed to the Eisenhower Baseball Complex with the playing field named after the late Wayne Norvell.

- FBI AGENTS TO DEFEND INTERVIEW PROCESS AT BOMBING HEARING.

DENVER — An FBI agent testified today a Kansas mechanic was confident in his description of a man who rented a Ryder rental truck that was used in the Oklahoma City bombing.

FBI artist Raymond Rozycki said Tom Kessinger took his time when he described the man later identified as Timothy McVeigh. "He was very clear on his selections," Rozycki said, referring to facial features that Kessinger selected from a catalog.

Rozycki drew the composite sketches of John Doe 1 and John Doe 2, the people Kessinger said rented the truck from Elliott's Body Shop in Junction City, Kan. Rozycki said he believed the sketch of John Doe 1 resembled the photographs of McVeigh. He said the facial shape, eyebrows, eyes, nose structure and chin were similar in the sketch and the photograph of McVeigh.

FBI agents are being asked to defend their interview techniques during the hearing on eyewitness testimony in the case.

During the pretrial hearing Tuesday, several eyewitnesses indicated they changed their descriptions after meeting with prosecutors and FBI agents investigating the bombing of the federal building nearly two years ago.

- HOUSE TENATIVELY APPROVES 'RIGHT TO KNOW' ABORTION BILL.

TOPEKA — The House tentatively approved a measure that would require physicians to inform women who want to have abortions about the procedure.

The bill, a proposed "woman's right to know" law is similar to one that was vetoed last year by Gov. Bill Graves.

Rep. Susan Wagle, R-Wichita, the principal sponsor, noted that the measure sent to the governor's desk last year required women to wait 24 hours before undergoing an abortion. This year's bill keeps that waiting period to the present eight hours.

A final vote is expected Thursday.

DEAD

But there were no other signs of troop movements in the capital.

Deng was last seen in public three years ago. His death is expected to sharpen political maneuvering for power that has been intensifying behind the scenes for several years as Deng's health has waned.

Confirmation of Deng's death came after days of rumors that his health had worsened had swarmed through the capital.

Chinese sources and diplomats in Beijing said Deng's health worsened in the past week. The sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity, differed on what happened and when.

Even the Chinese government, which tried to shrug off initial rumors and foreign reports about Deng, seemed to be at a loss to explain his condition.

"I have no new specific news to report on Deng," Li Xingwen, spokeswoman for the State Council, or Cabinet, said earlier today. The office said much the same Tuesday, a departure from its long-used formulation that Deng was in good shape for a man of his age.

Before Deng's death was announced, major state-run Chinese newspapers ran front-page stories today of a high-level seminar on Deng's economic policies. Many Chinese expected a flurry of such commemorative activities to be staged in the weeks before the nonagenarian's death to prepare the public.

Deng, who weathered three political purges during his seven decades as a Communist Party member, rose to the pinnacle of power in 1978, two years after the death of his revolutionary mentor Mao Tse-tung.

He inherited a country paralyzed by fear and poverty after the decade-long Cultural Revolution, one of the ugliest periods in modern Chinese history, in which millions were persecuted or killed for political reasons.

Deng immediately set about putting China on the road to a market economy, opening the nation to the outside world and encouraging the world's most populated country to set about making money.

"It doesn't matter if a cat is black or white, as long as it catches mice," was his most famous saying.

In China, he became a guerrilla leader and party officer. Purged briefly in the 1930s for backing Mao's unorthodox guerrilla tactics, he joined the revolutionary leader on the 1934-35 "Long March" flight from Chiang Kai-shek's Nationalists.

He is believed to have given final orders for the military suppression of the 1989 Tiananmen Square pro-democracy protests which claimed hundreds, perhaps thousands of lives.

He retired in 1990.

Egg drop sets goals of Engineering Week

STORY BY ERICA DUNCAN • PHOTO BY IVAN KOZAR

One hundred twenty area junior high school students were walking on eggshells Wednesday afternoon in Durland Hall after 30 egg-carrying capsules were dropped from the third-floor balcony.

"The goal of Engineering Week is to get to people who don't know what it is about and get them to start thinking about it, design it, and then build it," Boyd Ferris, senior in electrical engineering, said.

Students were required to build a project that would protect an egg from a third-floor drop.

Students had one hour to complete their projects. They were given one piece of 22 inch by 28 inch poster board, 4 ounces of glue and one paper clip. The students were allowed to bring a pair of scissors to cut the poster board.

Sweatshirts, ball caps and keychains were given as prizes. A certificate was also given to the group who created the biggest mess in the shortest amount of time.

In order to be considered successful, the egg could not be cracked at all. If more than one egg survived, the capsules would be weighed and the one weighing the least would be deemed the winner, Rob Zienkewicz, senior in electrical engineering, said.

Cailidumus, a group from South Junior High in Lawrence, and the Yolk Heads from Wamego, designed parachute type capsules which survived.

The Yolk Heads stumbled upon the parachute idea by accident.

"We had a bunch of extra poster board left over," Casey Johnson, Yolk Head member, said.

Cailidumus and the Egg Heads of Wamego tied for first place while the Force from South Junior High placed second.

The Yolk Heads took third place and "Egg"actly from Susan B. Anthony Middle School won the prize for the biggest mess.

MIDDLE SCHOOL STUDENTS stand in the atrium of Durland Hall watching as eggs are dropped from the third-story balcony to the ground. The egg-drop competition included students from five different middle schools.

With elections coming up, students need to get informed and flex their voting abilities

On Feb. 25, the City of Manhattan will have a primary election for the City Commission.

Chances are, even if you aren't from Riley County, you might have registered here for the elections last November. If you are registered here, it would behoove you to bone up on the issues and candidates in this election.

If you are under the impression that the commission doesn't affect your life, think about whether bike trails, campus safety, libraries, traffic signals and streets affect your life. These are all issues that the commission deals with in conjunction with the City/University Projects Fund.

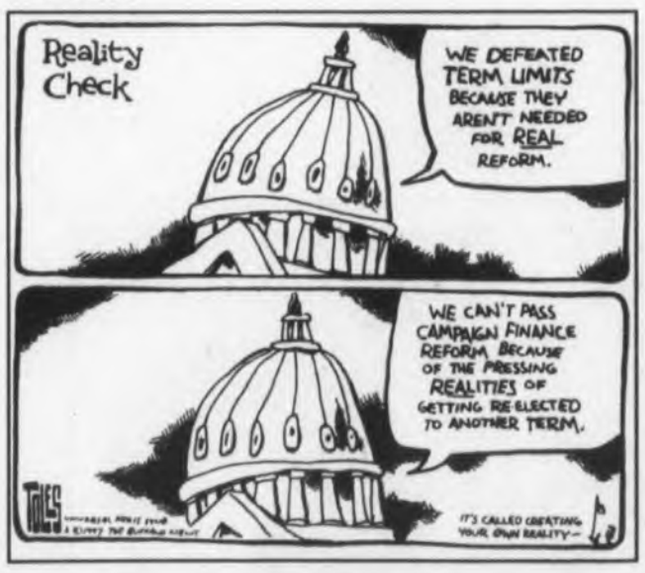
The commission also has a say in your utility rates and depending on where you live, the taxes they levy on your landlord may affect your rent.

So even if you are a temporary resident of Manhattan, the decisions of the city's public officials have a direct effect on your daily life.

Do you know who Edith Stunkel is? Ralph Wasem? Breta Bloomberg-Ellis? They're all among the field of candidates who are running for seats on the commission. The Collegian is covering their campaigns and the issues they stand for, so check out the newspaper.

While you're in the voting spirit, be watching for our coverage on the Student Governing Association election and get to know those candidates as well. Their effect on your life and your pocket book is even more tangible than the City Commission's.

In the end, voting is your civic duty. If you want to complain, know what you're complaining about and do your part to help.



And after all, if City Commissioner Justin Kastner, senior in food science, cares enough to actually serve on the commission, the least you can do is vote.

Our View, an editorial selected and debated by a majority of the editorial board, is written by the editorial board after a concensus opinion is reached. The editorial board consists of Collegian editors and other students. For details on how you can become involved with the editorial board, contact Kevin Klassen, opinion editor.

Knee-jerk decisions about marijuana typify ignorance

VIEWPOINT

JUSTIN WILD

JUSTIN WILD is a senior in English and education. You can e-mail your comments to Justin at (justone@ksu.edu).

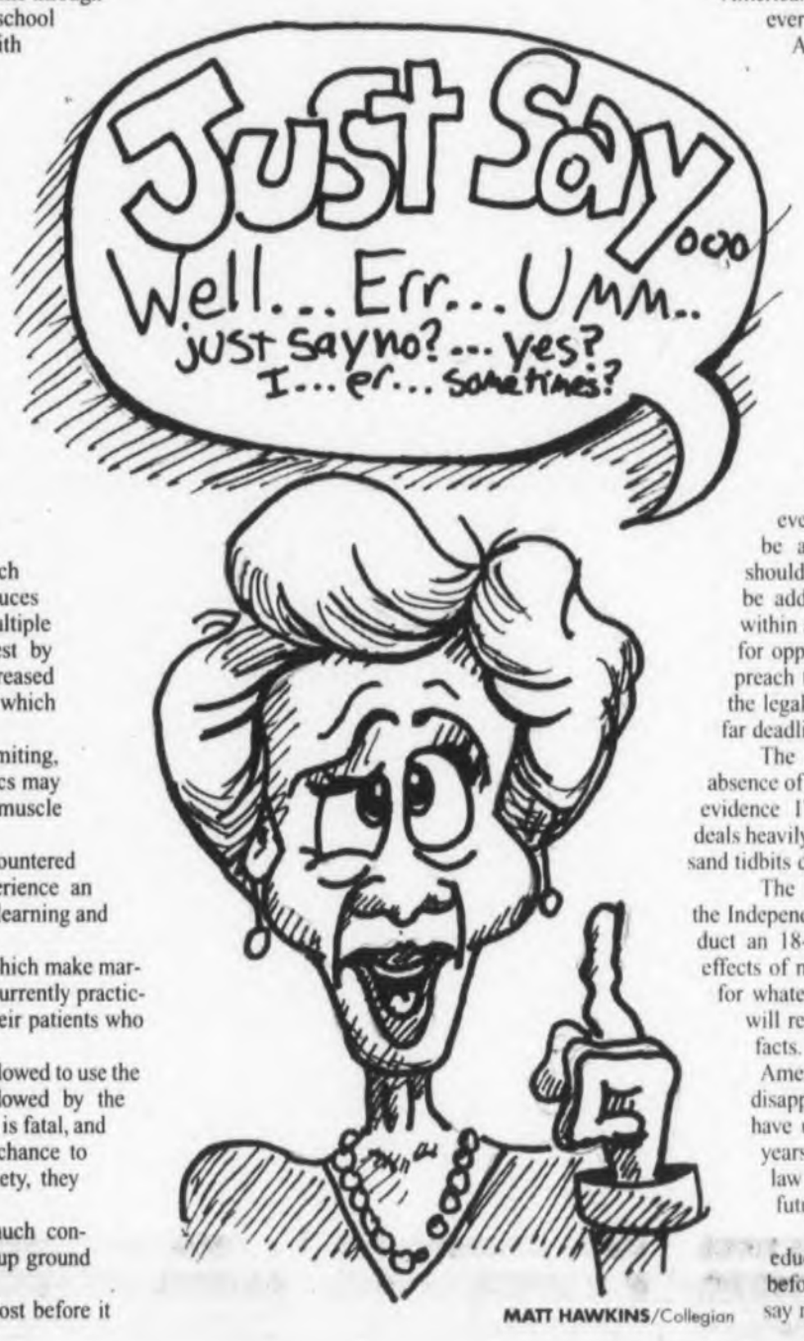
We are the "Just Say No" Generation. I can remember those words trailing me through the latter half of elementary school into early middle school, with Nancy Reagan's face emblazoned on posters in every hallway.

Drugs harm people, we were told. Whether they were cigarettes, alcohol, marijuana or cocaine, there was a high price to be paid for even dabbling with substances. Not only could one have legal troubles, but health complications as well.

In a relatively new debate, two sides are vying for control of the country's conscience regarding marijuana. One side seeks to alleviate the pain of various diseases with THC, marijuana's active ingredient, and another side wishes to keep pot the way it has been for years — illegal.

Proponents of bills in California and Arizona, which legalize marijuana for medical purposes, claim THC reduces the suffering of individuals living with cancer, AIDS, multiple sclerosis, epilepsy and glaucoma. Some doctors contest by smoking marijuana those with AIDS will have an increased appetite and a chance to forestall the loss of muscle mass which is a result of AIDS-related diseases.

Those undergoing chemotherapy will have reduced vomiting, nausea and anxiety. By smoking marijuana, some epileptics may have reduced seizures. People with M.S. will have less muscle pain, fewer tremors and more control over their bladder.



Of course, the conservative side of the argument has countered such claims by stating that marijuana users will experience an increased heart rate, loss of coordination, impairments in learning and memory and damaged lungs.

The federal government continues to uphold its laws which make marijuana completely illegal, making it difficult for doctors currently practicing in Arizona and California to prescribe the drug for their patients who suffer from some of the aforementioned diseases.

I believe that patients in need of marijuana should be allowed to use the drug. Negative effects of marijuana use are overshadowed by the immense pain of diseases such as cancer and AIDS. AIDS is fatal, and cancer has a sizable mortality rate. If patients have a chance to reduce vomiting, loss of muscle mass, nausea and anxiety, they should have access to marijuana.

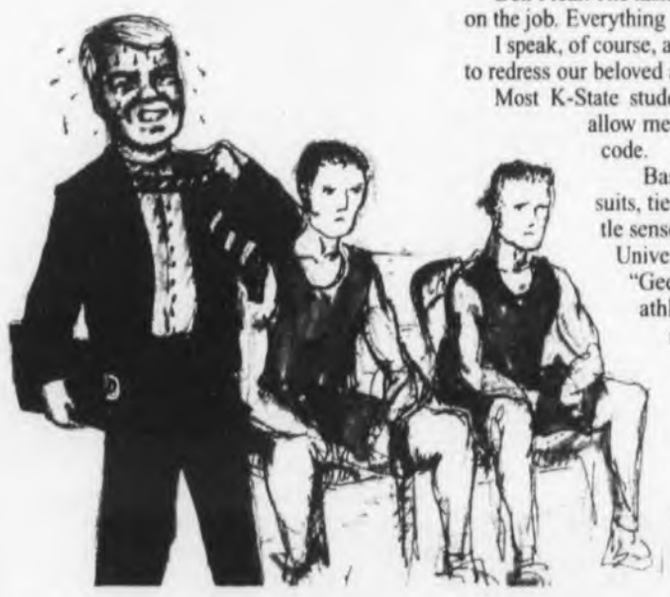
Individuals against medical marijuana are not so much concerned with negative side effects as they are with giving up ground in their drug war.

I have news for them: America's War on Drugs was lost before it even began. Look at the level of substance abuse in America. Even if we were able to eliminate every illegal drug from our country, Americans would still continue to abuse nicotine and alcohol.

MATT HAWKINS/Collegian

The fact is, legalizing marijuana for medical purposes is not going to increase drug rates among teens, or anyone else. Drug abuse increases when parents do not talk to their kids about drugs, or people are not educated about drugs. Peer pressure and ignorance have a greater effect on drug abuse than a person living with AIDS or cancer who smokes pot to diminish their suffering.

Doctors prescribe drugs every day that have the potential to be addictive, and sometimes fatal, should an overdose occur. Marijuana can be addictive, but not fatal if overused within a period of time. It is hypocritical for opponents of medical legalization to preach the dangers of pot when some of the legal drugs currently available can be far deadlier.



The problem with this debate is the absence of pure, objective facts. Much of the evidence I've read concerning both sides deals heavily with anecdotal tidbits. One thousand tidbits do not equal a pure medical fact.

The White House has commissioned the Independent Institute of Medicine to conduct an 18-month, $1-million study on the effects of marijuana on those who smoke it, for whatever reason. Hopefully, that study will replace a few anecdotes with some facts.

America's drug problem is not going to disappear with any law. Human beings have used substances for thousands of years, and no state or congressional law will change the past, present or future of drug use.

Understanding cultivates education. In this period of history, before we say no to drugs, we must say no to ignorance.

Getting the LOOK

BILL KRAAI/Collegian

Don't fear. The fashion police have been called, and they are on the job. Everything will be taken care of immediately.

I speak, of course, about a nation-wide movement underway to redress our beloved athletic coaches.

Most K-State students don't attend basketball games, so allow me to inform you about the coaches' dress code.

Basketball coaches wear nothing short of suits, ties and dress shoes. To me, this makes little sense. The first basketball coach, probably a University of Kansas graduate, must have said, "Gee, I'm going to a hot gym to be part of an athletic team. I will be spending time in a smelly locker room with sweaty athletes and partake in physical activity. Therefore I should wear a suit."

Hmm ... seems reasonable.

Come on, coaches. Get in the game.

Basketball coaches look more like they are going to a merger meeting in an 18-story office complex rather than a sporting event. If only they would carry briefcases to replace their clipboards.

Don't get me wrong, basketball coaches aren't the only ones who need a fashion overhaul.

Those lovable little baseball coaches have been screaming for a make-over since the early years of the game.

Have you ever been to a little game only to see a middle-aged man prancing around in a uniform that matches his son's?

Grow up, Dad. Act your age.

I have never understood why baseball coaches voluntarily subject themselves to these less-than-flattering uniforms. Do us all a favor and let the players wear the stirrups.

Maybe this seems trivial and meaningless, but, let's be honest, at the college level these guys are visible structures of our universities. Appearance has an impact on respect.

Being a coach means being part of a team and coaches should look the part. There needs to be a happy medium between the stuffy-looking basketball coaches and the goofy-looking baseball coaches.

This is the easy part.

Please direct your attention to the football coaching staff. These guys have it going on. They dress for success.

Take Bill Snyder and his coaching staff, for example. They wear those sharp looking wind suits and when they walk on the field they are respected, identified as authority figures and dressed for athletics. They look prepared and comfortable, not to mention they wear the school colors.

Don't be fooled into believing that all football coaches are fashion-faux pas-free. Who could forget the KU football fiasco? Those blue and white shirts with the big ol' KU splashed across the front made my dog howl in agony.

Not to mention Colorado's Rick Neuheisel. He's a great coach, but looks like a high-school aged, golf-playing yupster. Really, he looks like a mimbo.

This fall, I happened to catch the basketball scrimmage and you'll never guess what I saw. Asbury left his stuffy button-covered suit at home and wore a black and purple warm-up suit. He looked great — like a coach.

Coaches, I dare you to break the silly little traditions of lost years and step into the age of self-respect and dignity.

• WOMEN'S STUDIES INSTRUCTOR PROUD OF GETZ'S COLUMN

Editor,

There are times when a teacher can truly feel proud of her students. Upon reading Page Getz's column in the Feb. 17 Collegian, I felt that way.

Having twice had Getz as a student, I am aware of her academic acumen and ability to contribute to classroom dialogue with meaningful comments and ideas. But Monday, she taught me something about feminism and courage.

Page revealed her reality, as it is, to the campus community. She told of a decision she made and explained it to us. She gave us a glimpse, not into what some of us need or want to believe, but into the way it really is in the lives of some women.

In doing so, she compelled the careful reader to really think about women's lives, women's realities and women's choices in patriarchy and capitalism. She invited us to go deep in understanding, not only into the world of exotic dancing, but more importantly, ourselves.

I wonder not so much about the women who choose this type of work as I do about the cultural values that make such work so lucrative, and the men, students and professors, who grease the wheels of that culture by the dollars they tuck into G-strings and garters.

Mostly, I want to publicly acknowledge Getz for her courage and thank her for teaching me something about my own feminism. The core of feminism is women's lives, and the choices women make as we negotiate the tidal waves of patriarchy in our lives.

But again and again, a feminist has to ask herself, what does an issue or event mean for women, which women, and why?

What does it mean that in Manhattan, for instance, one of the best places for women students to earn money for school is at a strip joint frequented by male students and professors, athletes and scholars, farm hands and business men, bankers and janitors, administrators and mechanics?

What do the women risk losing in the process? And who is responsible for those losses?

Courage is not revealing one's achievements, but revealing one's struggles, being open about the difficult spaces in one's life. Getz gave this campus community a lesson in courage on Monday. She did so with grace, no chip on her shoulder, no excuses, no pleas for understanding.

As her teacher, I am troubled by her choices. This keeps me honest. At the same time, I am impressed with her analysis and deeply moved by her courage. It is always a joy to learn from one's students. Monday, I learned so much.

• SAVE THANKS STUDENTS FOR FORUM ASSISTANCE

Editor,

Students Advocating Valid Education (SAVE) would like to thank those involved with the forum on student-teacher evaluations last Wednesday, Feb. 12.

A panel composed of two professors and two students helped spark the informal discussion. Professor George Keiser, English; Professor James Hamilton, head of philosophy; Jay Goodwin, senior in political science; and Colin Rafferty, junior in English/Literature all contributed thoughtful discussion to the issues surrounding student-teacher evaluations.

SAVE would like to thank the Collegian for reporting on the forum and recognizing the importance of the subject.

However, SAVE would like to clarify some honest misrepresentations in the article written about the event, and highlight some of the main points.

SAVE sponsored the forum because the group felt a need to improve the quality of student-teacher evaluations as they exist on campus, and as a result, wished to contribute to the constructive criticism on this subject.

The student attendance at the forum was low, but we hope that is not representational of the concern students have about these issues. SAVE hopes the University listens to the concerns of both faculty and students in their attempt to improve the quality of the education at this school.

Cats scratch Buffaloes, 68-62

▶ K-STATE STAVES OFF COMEBACK to keep 11-game home winning streak.

SUN DEE MILLS
staff reporter

If Mitch Holthus had been at the women's basketball game last night, his "bigs" regarding the 68-62 win over the Colorado Buffaloes would have been in the double digits.

"This is bigger than the Texas win," said Coach Deb Patterson. "Relative to where we're at, the Texas win positioned us where we're at today and then this Colorado win is so significant at this point in the season."

Colorado wasn't nationally ranked, but it was one that could have NCAA Tournament implications.

"The win enhances our power rating by the committee," Patterson said. "It definitely draws attention to the program."

With Colorado claiming the height advantage, the Cats had to step up their defensive pressure.

"I thought we did an OK job on Erin," Patterson said. "Every time Raegan (Scott) had her hands in the air, there was an element of fear in my mind that she was going to get it and score. She was their strongest offensive threat."

On the Cats' first possession, guard Jenny Coalson stepped up and sank a 22-foot jumper to tie the game at three. It was the first of four ties during the first half.

The Cats gained their first lead with a jumper in the lane by forward Andria Jones. The lead disappeared when Scott posted her first score of the game at the 16:27 mark. By the first TV time-out, three Cat fouls gave the Buffs four points at the charity stripe.

Down by three, guard Missy Decker stepped up behind the arc and hit her first of four three-point shots, doing the same thing she had done to Colorado when they met in Boulder. Decker said aside from making threes themselves, they were also concentrating on keeping the Buffs from having that opportunity.

"That was what really turned the game out there for them," Decker said. "We were doing some really good things out there, but we were giving up threes, and you can't win giving up threes."

The Buffs gave up seven treys — four by Decker, and one a piece by Jones, Coalson and senior guard Kjersten Larson — and only managed to hit four in 17 attempts.

At the 12:47 mark, guard Brit Jacobson came into the game for the first time in two games.

"I was the most nervous I have ever been before a game," Jacobson said. "We were doing some new things, and I wasn't always sure of where I was going. I felt really rusty."

Jacobson hadn't seen action on the court for more than two weeks due to a stress fracture in her foot, but contributed seven points and two boards to the win.

"We didn't decide to play Brit until the final buzzer before the game started," Patterson said. "I don't know if we had to have her, but I'm sure glad we did. She put the ball on the floor and defended well."

Coming out strong in the second half was Cat center Nicky Ramage. Within one minute, Ramage sank two baskets and pulled down one defensive board to put the Cats up by nine.

"The freshmen stepping up was something we needed," Patterson said. "They didn't do that at Iowa State (last Saturday), but they understood how important this game was for us and executed."

At the 12:57 mark, the Buffs had only scored three points to the Cats' 13, and the Cats had pulled ahead by 12.

The Buffs began to chip away at the lead, and with 4:39 left in the game, they were only down by three. Decker stepped up again to sink a critical trey and pushed the Cats upward.

"During that possession, we were out of sync," Decker said. "At that point, we needed to make something happen."

Jacobson's free throws with just a few seconds on the clock sealed the win for the Cats.

The win over the Buffs was the first time the seniors had beaten Colorado during their entire career, Jones said.

"Even when we were ahead by 12, we never knew what to expect from them," Jones said. "They're a great team. This win means a lot to us personally."

JACOBSON SURPRISES FOLLOWING INJURY

Surprises come in many sizes. The biggest surprise Wednesday night came in the size of 5'7" guard Brit Jacobson.

In her first action since Feb. 2, Jacobson aided K-State in a 68-62 win over Colorado at Bramlage Coliseum.

After the Missouri game on Feb. 2, Jacobson suffered a stress fracture in her right foot. Then last week, she suffered an ankle sprain in practice that was supposed to sideline her for two weeks.

It didn't take long for Jacobson to make her appearance, checking into the game at the 12:47 mark.

Although she didn't make an immediate effect offensively, Cat coach Deb Patterson said her presence was felt on the defensive end.

"She really makes a difference out there on defense," Patterson said. "She is really quick, and she plays some great, aggressive defense."

At the 3:41 mark of the first half, Jacobson nailed a 12-foot jumper from the right base line. The shot stretched the Cat lead to 31-27.

Jacobson's basket was her only one of the half as she finished with two assists in over 12 minutes of play.

"I felt very rusty out there tonight," Jacobson said. "It was also probably the most nervous I've been for a game."

Jacobson said her ankle felt good at times and pretty bad at times. It must have felt good at the 15:07 mark, because she streaked down the court on a two-on-one break.

Taking the pass from forward Andria Jones, Jacobson drew the foul and made the layup. She made the free throw to complete the three-point play that gave the Cats their biggest lead of the game.

Jacobson iced the game for the Cats with two points from the charity line with just 19 seconds remaining. The two free throws gave the Cats a 68-59 lead.

"She really made a difference out there tonight," Patterson said. "She has the ability to put the ball on the floor and penetrate and break down their defense."

Jacobson finished the game with seven points in over 26 minutes of action.

So, when did Patterson know Jacobson would play that many minutes?

"At the sound of the buzzer," Patterson said. "I had no idea. I thought we might have her for bits and parts of tonight's game."

"I just kept asking her if she was OK, I just had to trust her judgment, she said. "We had to spell her at times because her ankle was getting a little bit stiff."

Although she was not expected to play, Jacobson said she wanted to make a contribution to the team.

"I was probably only at about 70 percent tonight," she said. "I was just prepared to do anything I had to do to help this team get a victory tonight."

STORY BY SHANE McCORMICK

Columnist looks at a smorgasbord of sports things that make him wonder

With the seductive cries of weekend wonderland now reaching the top of the decibel charts, here's a couple of ditties that might conjure up some interest and insight during the blessed two-day hiatus:

• Now that Frank Myers Field is getting the $800,000 face-lift it has so desperately needed, there is a chance to really make the stadium a high-profile Division I facility. However, aside from the obvious renovations, K-State officials need to remember no stadium is complete without a personality. What would Wrigley Field be without the brick wall and ivy, or Kauffman Stadium and its accompanying fountains? In order to set the school apart from its Big 12 brethren, K-State needs to add a dash of stadium spice that will carve an identity.

VIEWPOINT

JON BALMER

JON BALMER is a freshman in pre-journalism and mass communications. You can e-mail your comments to Jon at (jkb2004@ksu.edu).

One possible item that could put the refurbished Myers Field on the map is the addition of a giant wildcat perched over the center field wall. Before you come to a unanimous decision that I've spent a little too much time at the neighborhood crack house, hear me out. Any baseball fan whose seen the diamond epic "Bull Durham" remembers the oversized, smoke-spewing bull that dwelled in center, guarding the stadium. In a similar fashion, Myers Field could sit under the watchful eye of a giant, fire-breathing Willie. After a K-State home run, nothing could disrupt a visiting pitcher better than the sight of a flame-spitting hellcat in deep center.

• While many Cats may wish to ignore it, the second round of the Sunflower Showdown takes place Saturday in Lawrence. Although the Jayhawks look more and more destructive with each contest, Missouri's victory proved KU is far from invincible. If victory is even to be within sniffing range for the Cats, Coach Tom Asbury needs to seriously think about adopting the "Tiger Claw" approach that Mizzou used to topple the Hawks. MU's plan consisted of four key components: First and foremost, do not key in on Raef LaFrentz. The Tigers let Raef do his damage (26 points, 18 rebounds), but they latched onto his teammates and kept them in check.

Outside of this, Mizzou kept bodies banging inside (MU limited KU to 13 offensive rebounds, far less than their normal glass job), spread the offensive output around (Jason Sutherland, Derek Grimm and Kelly Thames each notched 18 or more points), and drew contact all night. The Tigers shot more free throws than the Hawks, a major accomplishment.

Asbury needs to study this formula and utilize it in Allen Fieldhouse if a king-size upset is to be nabbed. If all else fails, pray that Scot Pollard is a descendant of Sampson and take a razor to those massive muttonchops.

• On the topic of roundball, March Madness continues to creep up on campuses across the land. With this said, let me wax the crystal ball and add my predictions on who to watch and who to wave good-bye to:

Don't be deceived, it has been an off year for NCAA basketball. This year's list of hardwood heavyweights is shorter than the career of Young MC. The current Associated Press Top 10 contains such cameos as Minnesota (No. 2) and Iowa State (No. 7). Minnesota has been living by a thread all season narrowly escaping Big 10 Conference bottom feeders. As for ISU, every big opponent the Cyclones have faced has added to their loss column. KU twice contributed, and Colorado gave the 'Clones a major facial when they visited Boulder. These squads will vanish quicker than Casper come tourney time.

If you're looking for possible Davids that could dethrone big conference Goliaths, don't pass over Princeton and the College of Charleston. Princeton has continued its tradition of patient offense and smothering defense after the retirement of legendary coach Pete Carril. This combo has led the Tigers to a 19-3 record, and first place in the Ivy League. With last year's upset of UCLA still looming, the Tigers know they possess upset ingredients.

The College of Charleston has a similar scenario. The Cougars currently stand at 23-2, a record that includes victories over Arizona State and Stanford. With a tough schedule and seasoned experience in their pocket, the Cougars should turn some heads in the Big Dance.

The word on Chris Canty's NFL draft destination is Pittsburgh. The Steelers have the 24th pick, and with their three top cornerbacks serving as free agents, would love

All kinds of free and inexpensive entertainment are lurking out there.

Bored, broke and looking for something to do? Never fear — help is here.

Lectures, art exhibits, music and comedy are some examples of the types of free and cheap entertainment students can find by keeping their eyes and ears open.

For art buffs, the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art will have a special exhibition titled "Georgia O'Keefe: Canyon Suite" March 1-April 27.

Museum hours are 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Tuesday through Friday and from 1 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. Saturday and Sunday. Admission is free.

Live music is offered by Union Program Council Eclectic Entertainment committee. UPC will sponsor live rock and pop music by Dark Side at 8 p.m. Thursday in Union Station.

For stand-up comedy, check out the improv comedy troupe Comedy Sportz March 6 in Union Station. Admission is $2 with a K-State ID.

Other activities on campus are available everyday, and most are inexpensive.

The Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex is open everyday. With a K-State ID, students can participate in a fitness class, work out on the fitness machines, or check out sporting equipment and play basketball, tennis or racquetball. The Rec Complex has lots of other equipment available to check out, so students can find the equipment that fulfills their interests.

All Faiths Chapel offers concerts and student, faculty and guest artist recitals. Also, the music department has concerts every semester, so students can hear what the K-State bands have been up to.

The K-State Student Union has bowling, billiards, movies and lectures almost every night of the week. There's always something going on in the Union, so pay attention to the signs and posters on campus.

Opportunities abound off-campus for entertainment, as well. There are more than the few listed here, so do not be afraid to call a restaurant or video store to see if they have any weekly or daily specials.

Bombers features local music and local bands weekly. Sufferbus and TV Fifty will play on Friday.

Videos Etc. on Anderson Avenue has $1.49 new releases and all other titles are priced less than a dollar daily. They also have free membership.

At Pyramid Pizza, Tuesday is 99-cents-per slice day until 8 p.m.

Manhattan Town Center will play host to area musicians as they compete for cash and other prizes. Check it out 5:30-7:30 tonight or 5:30-7:30 p.m. Feb. 27. Students can shop while they listen to the free live music.

The Campus Theater in Aggieville has inexpensive movies. All shows are 99 cents. They might be a few months old, but it's a chance to see that movie you missed or a summer favorite on the big screen before it's only available on video.

There are many opportunities to find things to do that are inexpensive and fun, so don't despair about money. Check out the signs in the Union or other buildings on campus and look at all the advertisements in the paper. Call local hangouts and see if they offer any specials. Most of all, be aware and don't be afraid to try new

Criminal minds

At the British Psychological Society's annual conference in September, David Cook of Caledonian University, in Glasgow, Scotland, reported the findings of his 3-year study on criminal psychopaths. Cook said he found significant correlations in the behavior patterns of politicians and criminal psychopaths. Psychopaths were relatively easy to analyze, but he didn't have as much information on politicians, Cook said, because they didn't like to be studied.

Poor Excuse

In September, an auction house in Vermont sold close to $2 million worth of automobiles that belonged to an elderly couple who had passed away. The couple left millions of dollars in gold, silver and valuables, but they lived like paupers. Reports said that the couple sometimes ate dog food and bread made out of flour that they had swept off the floor to save money.

Still Going

In China, a mortuary worker was tying a tag on a 93-year-old Chinese woman when he noticed she was still breathing. The woman had fallen into a coma, and her family, noticing her body was stiff, called the mortuary to pick up the body. Medical workers discovered the woman was still alive and moved her to a hospital.

Sarah, founded the anti-gun organization Handgun Control Inc.

"This is not anti-crime, but it is anti-common sense. More concealed weapons on our streets means more violent crime, not less," Brady added.

Bills before both houses of the Legislature would permit citizens who pass approved gun courses and have no criminal or mental problems in their backgrounds to be licensed by the Kansas Bureau of Investigation to carry concealed handguns.

In response to questions from the committee, Brady said research being circulated by the gun lobby is suspect, and in his view there is no way allowing more people to carry guns can make society any safer.

He said a background check would not likely have kept Hinckley from purchasing the handgun he bought in Dallas and used to wound Reagan, Brady and two security officers 16 years ago.

Brady said Hinckley used an out-of-date identification card to purchase his weapon, and had moved from the address listed on it. He also said Hinckley's history of mental problems would not have likely surfaced in a background check, either, because of patient-physician confidentiality.

KSU KANSAS STATE UNIVERSITY
Principal-Counselor-Student CONFERENCE

The Office of Admissions cordially invites former students of these high schools to attend the 1997 Principal-Counselor-Student Conference. High school principals and counselors will be on campus to visit with you about your preparation for and experiences in KSU Academic programs. Your participation will help the University build a stronger relationship with your former high school faculty.

You are welcome to drop by between 10:45 a.m. and 12:15 p.m. on Thursday, February 20. This is an excellent opportunity for you to renew old friendships with former classmates. The Provost has asked that your instructors excuse you from these class periods.

▶ATTORNEYS QUESTION witnesses' descriptions of McVeigh, Nichols in court.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DENVER — A co-op manager who told FBI agents he thought Terry Nichols purchased two tons of fertilizer from his store said Thursday he told the grand jury in the Oklahoma City bombing case that he could not identify the individual.

Frederick Schlender's testimony came on the third day of a hearing on defense challenges to witnesses in the trials of Timothy McVeigh and Nichols.

McVeigh

He told the FBI shortly after the bombing that he was more than 50-percent certain the fertilizer was purchased by Nichols, who's accused in the bombing. But Schlender, manager of MidKansas Co-op, said Thursday he could not identify the person for the grand jury.

Schlender said the fertilizer was purchased on Sept. 30, 1994, and Oct. 18, 1994, by someone named Mike Havens for about $228.

Officials said the bomb that destroyed the federal building in Oklahoma City had a fertilizer base.

He said that was the only time he could recall doing business with Havens.

On Wednesday, FBI agents testified that Schlender told them he thought Havens could be Nichols.

Also on Wednesday, prosecutors produced a photograph of a bearded McVeigh and a new height measurement to back up eyewitness descriptions of him. McVeigh's attorneys have challenged six prosecution witnesses, who said their descriptions were influenced by intense publicity about the case.

All six witnesses testified Tuesday that they met McVeigh at various places before the bombing, including at a shop where the Ryder truck used in the bombing was rented. They all placed his height at 5 feet 10 inches or 5 feet 11 inches. Defense attorneys countered that their client is 6 feet 2 inches.

Prosecutors last week obtained a court order to measure McVeigh in jail, and found out he was actually 6 feet 1/2-inch.

"That cuts in half the discrepancy," prosecutor Scott Mendeloff said.

Another witness, Glynn Tipton, had testified earlier that a man with a scraggly beard resembling McVeigh had asked him about buying barrels of rocket and racing fuel at a Kansas race track in 1994.

The photograph prosecutors introduced Wednesday shows McVeigh with a three- or four-day beard, standing outside Nichols' home in Marion. Authorities seized the photograph during a search of Nichols' home.

In another development, U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch said in a summons sent to 700 prospective jurors that they would likely have to serve for several months but would not be sequestered. McVeigh's trial is set to begin March 31.

"Jurors will be free to be with their families and friends overnight and on weekends," Matsch said.

Senate passes business college trip allocation

▶ More coverage?
Because Student Senate continued past press time, the Collegian will have complete coverage of allocations in Monday's edition.

BENJAMIN YODER
staff reporter

Student Senate passed a special allocation to fund the College of Business Case Competition Team's trip to Las Vegas this spring.

The competition team will prepare a case study of a company and analyze ways to improve it. The national competition will take place during spring break.

The bill allocated $2,000 to the group for the national event.

"I believe this is well-deserved funds for a well-deserving group," Senate Allocations Chair Bret Glendening said.

But passage of the bill did not come without debate. An amendment to the original bill would have lowered the funding to $660.

Graduate Senator David Hasemann said he opposed allocating $2,000 to the team because other academic competition teams were allocated 12 percent of their special-projects budget.

"I think we need to be fair and equitable," Hasemann said.

The overall budget for the team's Las Vegas competition was $5,500.

Hasemann said the Case Competition team should not get a higher percentage of money than the Agriculture Competition Team Council and Speech Unlimited.

All three teams are classified as academic

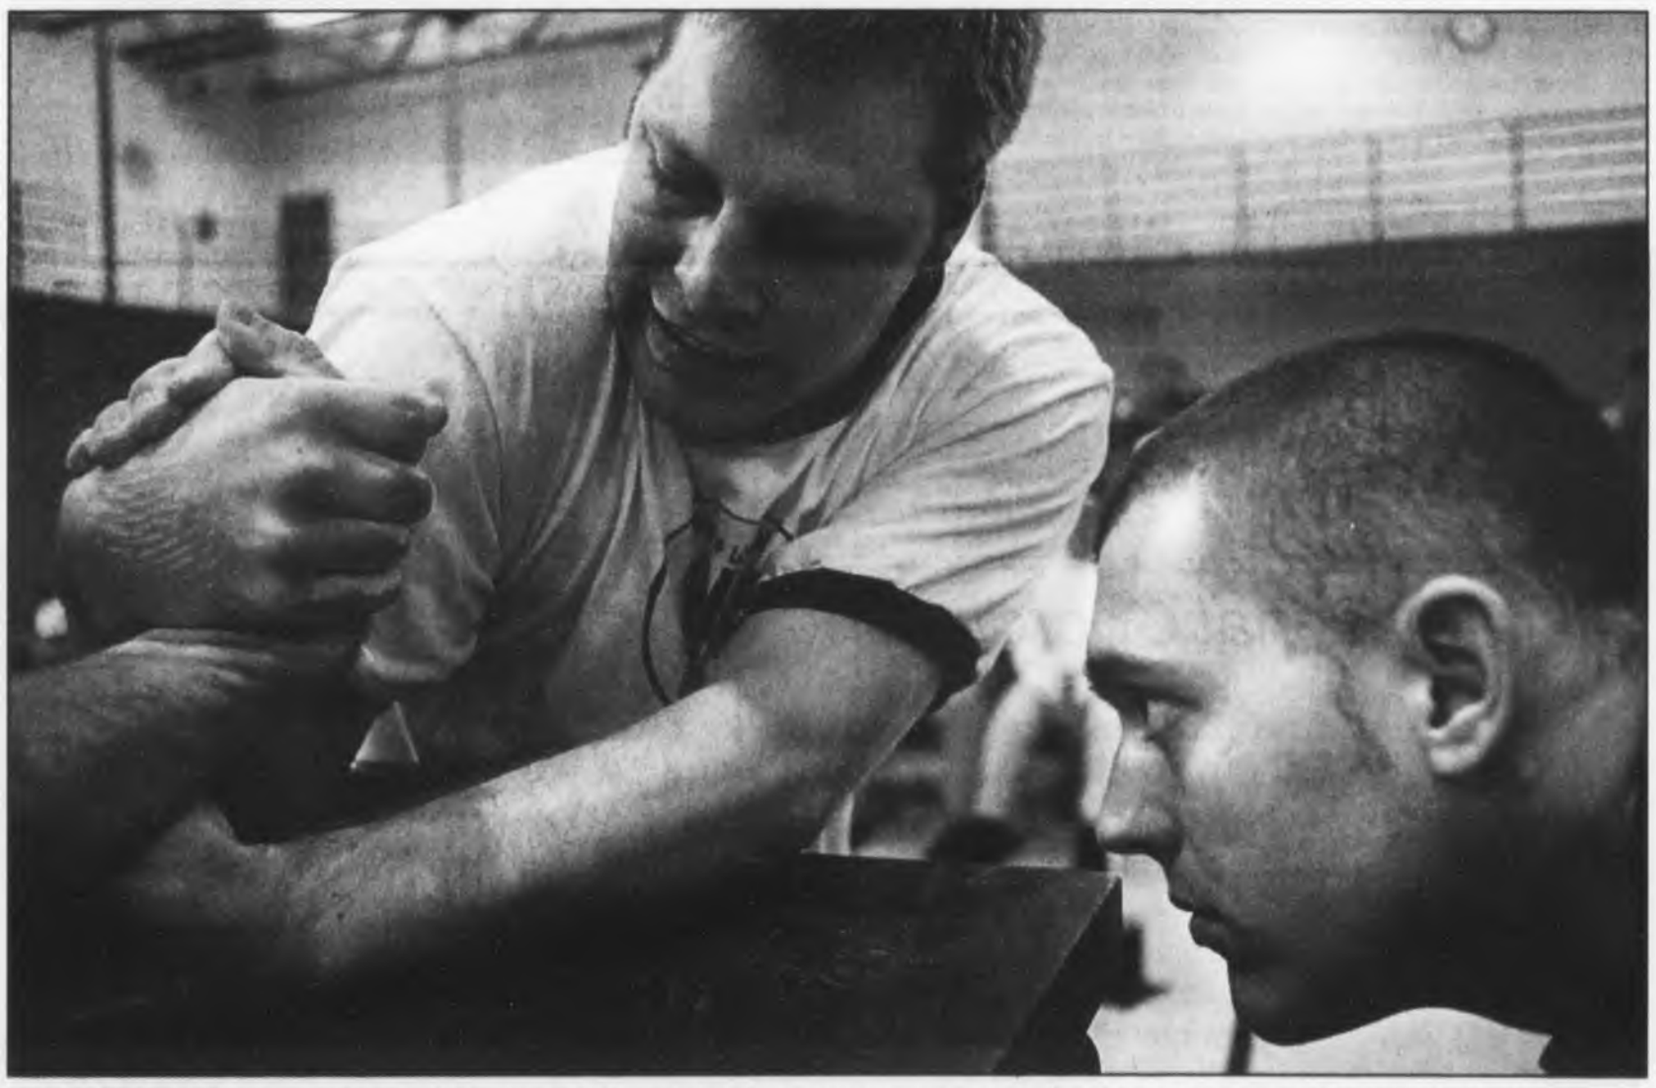
Festivities celebrating 50 years of rodeo tradition will begin tonight with a bang as fireworks kick off three days of rodeo action.

K-State rodeo team members will compete against 500 men and women from across the Midwest at the K-State Rodeo this weekend at Weber Arena. Prize money, belt buckles and all-around titles are up for grabs.

"The pressure is on the club to maintain last year's performance on Saturday evening," Justin Lynn, rodeo club president, said. "Anyone who was there can remember that people in the audience didn't leave their seat till the last bull was bucked. It was electricity."

This year's highlights will include a bounty bull in the bull-riding competition. If a cowboy rides the bounty bull, he will win extra money for just riding him for eight seconds, even if he does not have the highest marked score.

Also, Jim McClain, bull fighter, will make a return appearance to entertain the crowd between events.



Kindra Dunham, 1996-97 K-State Rodeo Queen, will make her final queen's run Saturday evening. The coronation for the next queen will begin at 7 p.m. Seven women are competing for the title of K-State Rodeo Queen 1997-98.

R.B. Warren from Scottsdale, Ariz., who was the first K-State rodeo club president in 1947, will participate in Saturday evening's performance. More than 100 alumni rodeo club members plan to attend the performances and the reunion.

grip OF competition

CHRIS ECKLAND, left, senior in biology, psychology and pre-med, tries to beat his opponent, as wrist-wrestling official Bill Jacob, right, junior in food science and industry, keeps a watchful eye on the match during a wrist-wrestling competition Thursday night at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

The competitors sit across the table from each other, with their right wrists over the center of the playing surface. Grasping the base of their opponents' thumbs, with their left hands clasped and resting on the table, each maneuvers for the victory.

Nearly 150 spectators viewed the wrist-wrestling competition in the small gym at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex Thursday night.

"The turnout was about the same as normal," Steve Martini, associate director of recreation services, said. "This is a very fun event, and it is only for one night, so the emotions were running high."

This year, wrist wrestling became a part of intramural competition at the Rec Complex. .

"Since we made the wrist-wrestling event count for points, people have become more involved and very excited," Martini said.

JODI PAPE, right, sophomore in nutrition and exercise science, responds to being defeated by Adrienne Tijerina, left, junior in elementary education.

The competition consisted of four weight categories for men and two categories for women. The men's divisions were flyweight, lightweight, middleweight and heavyweight. The women's divisions were from 135 pounds and less and 135 and more.

The men competed in three divisions: fraternity, independent and residence halls. The winners of the divisions then wrestled for the all-University title. The women's division was open to all participants.

Some competitors said they were surprised at the effort that was needed to wrist wrestle.

"It was really harder than it actually looked," Adrienne Tijerina, junior in elementary education, said. "It was a lot more competitive than I thought it would be."

Sweaty palms were combated with chalk as competitors waited for their matches to begin.

"I didn't know what to expect going into the first match," Danny Bolen, sophomore in agronomy, said. "But it really felt good to win my first match and gain some confidence."

In the women's division, Traci Beckman, sophomore in finance and accounting, won the title for 135 pounds and less.

"It felt pretty good to win the title since my body frame is so small," Beckman said. "Not too many people thought I could win because of my size."

In the 135 pound and more weight class, Erin Thomas, sophomore in elementary education, was crowned the champion.

In the men's division, Zac Sundgren, sophomore in business, of Alpha Tau Omega fraternity, won the fraternity flyweight title, and then went on to win the all-University title. Sundgren took second last year in the fraternity division.

"It feels good to win the all-University title," Sundgren said. "Last year I came up a bit short, so this year I was determined to win."

In the men's lightweight division, the winner was Rob Rhoney, junior in business administration, of Pi Kappa Alpha. He defeated Kelly Hutson, sophomore in life sciences, in the all-University title, after sweeping through the fraternity division. Rhoney finished second in the fraternity division for the past two years.

In the men's middleweight division, Aaron Brantley of Kappa Sigma won the all-University title, after knocking off the defending champion, Jason Foltz, senior in animal sciences and industry. Last year, Brantley, sophomore in mechanical engineering, won the fraternity division, but came up short in the final of the all-University match.

In the men's heavyweight division, Brian Nabours, of Alpha Tau Omega, won the all-University title. He repeated the same feat he did last year. He won both the fraternity title and the all-University title this year and last year.

• VIDEOTAPE SHOWS MOTORIST BEATEN AT POLICE STATION.

HARTFORD, Conn. — A police camera videotaped 10 seconds of officers beating an unarmed motorist — an encounter that a witness said went on for three or four minutes as onlookers pleaded with them to stop.

Three Hartford police officers involved in the encounter have been taken off patrol while authorities investigate their treatment of James Wilson outside a suburban police station. Wilson had led police on a three-mile chase that began in Hartford when he refused an order to pull over.

• FORMER KLANSMEN SENTENCED TO PRISON FOR BURNINGS.

CHARLESTON, S.C. — Two former Ku Klux Klansmen were sentenced to nearly 20 years in prison Thursday for burning two black churches.

U.S. District Judge David Norton sentenced Gary Christopher Cox, 23, to 19-1/2 years and Timothy Adron Welch, 24, to 18 years. They had pleaded guilty to civil rights violations in the June 1995 fires.

• RAPIST ARRESTED IN SLAYING OF 31-YEAR-OLD WOMAN.

TAMPA, Fla. — A woman found slain in the home of a man who years ago chopped off the arms of a teen-age hitchhiker was identified today as a 31-year-old with a history of prostitution arrests.

Lawrence Singleton, 69, was charged with murder Wednesday night, 10 years after his parole in the 1978 California rape-mutilation angered prosecutors and struck fear into residents.

The woman found in Singleton's home, identified as Roxanne Hayes, died of multiple stab wounds in her upper body, Hillsborough sheriff's Lt. David Gee said. Records show she had at least two dozen arrests on prostitution and related charges dating back to 1986.

• RAY ATTORNEY ASKS FOR TESTS ON RIFLE THAT KILLED KING.

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Federal investigators never matched the bullet that killed the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. with the rifle that bears James Earl Ray's fingerprints, a firearms expert said today.

Ray, who admitted killing King in 1968 but later recanted, is seeking a trial.

His attorney asked Criminal Court Judge Joe Brown to authorize tests on the rifle.

The rifle was identified as the weapon that killed the civil rights leader in 1968.

Robert Hathaway, an assistant forensics examiner for Rhode Island, said new technology could be used to prove that a rifle other than Ray's fired the shot that killed King.

King was killed on the balcony of the Lorraine Motel in April 1968.

That technology is a scanning electron microscope, which Hathaway said was not available until the mid 1980s.

Class project provides 9 towns with Web sites

STEVE WARE
staff reporter

While Kansas might not provide the best water for avid surfers, the Department of Hotel, Restaurant, Institution Management and Dietetics is providing plenty of native waves for those who prefer to hang 10 on the Internet.

A new 16-week project called Joint Ventures Between the Classroom and Rural Communities is combining the typical classroom setting and Internet technology to develop homepages and marketing plans for nine rural communities in Kansas.

Professors Carl Boger and Rebecca Gould have developed the program to give students in their marketing and tourism classes the opportunity to implement the skills they are learning in a practical method.

"We're trying to move beyond the lecture to give students live experience in the field," Gould said.

The project's objective is to develop the attributes of small rural towns into a marketable plan that can then be advertised on the World Wide Web. Development began in August 1996.

"We've selected sites based on recommendations from county extension agents, their tourism opportunities and their interest in the project," Gould said.

The project received additional funding when it was awarded a $57,000 USDA Challenge Grant. The grant, one of three awarded nationally, is being partially used to provide students with up-to-date computer hardware to design their projects on.

"It has allowed us to add a computer lab, staff for it, a 35 mm scanner. We couldn't even attempt this without it," Boger said.

Students in the classes have been organized into teams for each site. Each team has members from the marketing and tourism classes to cover both facets of the project.

"We get the information from the towns and then pick out landmarks, points of interest, monuments and scope out the local economy to work out a strategy," Jason Brentano, junior in hotel and restaurant management, said.

"Then we give it to the tourism class, and they develop homepages. It's a cooperation kind of thing," he said.

Students in the classes are also required to learn HyperText Markup Language, the computer language that makes up a Web page, to develop their site's page from start to finish.

"When they leave my class, I want them to have more than just knowledge. They have to be able to use that knowledge on the job," he said.

To assist students in their work, two international experts in rural tourism visited campus on Feb. 13.

Alastair Morrison, professor of marketing and tourism at Purdue University, and Christine Clements, professor in the department of hospitality and tourism at the University of Wisconsin-Stout, spoke to students about encouraging community partnerships and developing sustainable tourism in rural areas.

"We start by working towards a sense of community pride," Clements said. "Tourism can help generate that. Then we can build from there."

While Gould and Boger have spent countless hours designing the K-State end of the project, they attribute its rapid development to support it has received from other sources.

"We're working a lot with K-State Research and Extension," Gould said. "We've got help from the Kansas Sampler Foundation, the Tourism Association of Kansas and, of course, the USDA. There is no way we could do any of this without their help. They're a big, big part of this."

While the students' participation in the project will conclude at the end of the semester, support for the communities' interests will be available from the project in the future.

"One thing we don't want to do is get these towns all excited and then leave them hanging when their pages are complete," Gould said. "They will have to update their pages sometime down the road, and we will be there to help them."

The project's pilot site in Wamego can be found on the Web at www.oznet.ksu.edu/kansastourWeb.

Greek show raises funds for terminally ill

CHRISTINA SMITH
staff reporter

It was a night of comedy and laughter at the Wildcat Variety Showdown Thursday night at McCain Auditorium when 11 greek houses joined to raise money for charity.

All the proceeds went to Dream Makers, an organization that grants the wishes of terminally ill children.

The event was sponsored by Alpha Tau Omega and Pi Beta Phi. The Wildcat Variety Showdown is a variation of the Rock Chalk Variety Show that the University of Kansas sponsors every year during homecoming.

Next year there should be a competition between the two schools to determine who has the most creative and talented students.

Most of the skits centered around the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics.

Sigma Nu's skit attacked the KU sports program. Members of the skit pretended to hypnotize all of KU's significant sports figures. With the hypnotism, KU's football players were

INJURY MARS NIGHT OF COMEDY FUNDRAISER

Aaron Cross, sophomore in architectural engineering, was injured during the last scene of Lambda Chi Alpha's skit.

The accident happened when he was thrown through the air, Thad O'Connor, sophomore in business administration, said.

Cross was taken to Mercy Health Center on College Avenue with an arm injury.

His condition is stable, Peggy Owings, nurse at Mercy, said.

"All we have heard is he broke the bone in the upper part of his arm and will have to have surgery," O'Connor said.

Stovall needs support for ideas regarding her campus safety plan

Kansas Attorney General Carla Stovall is on the right track.

The 10 initiatives Stovall described in a press conference Wednesday to increase safety on university and community college campuses added up to a commendable effort.

What is really great to see is some state-wide action being taken with a proactive attitude that has been in action here at K-State for a while.

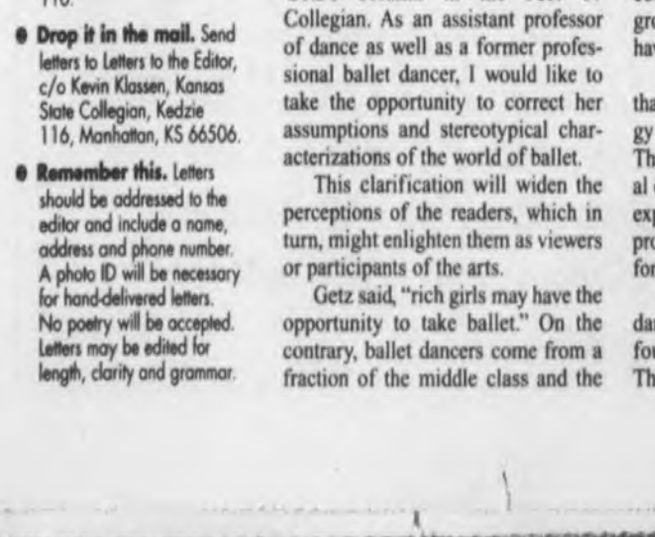
It's not surprising that Stovall is working so hard to make Kansas campuses as safe as they can be. She has visited K-State and met with a special task force from Student Governing Association to discuss problems of campus safety.

While there might be some potential problems with some of Stovall's points, the entire package targets some specific areas of student concern. Security in student housing and making information about safety programs more available to the public through the attorney general's office were some of the points.

What is needed now is student support to make sure the bright future of our safety is ensured.

Students should contact their student senators and request that they lobby the Kansas Board of Regents to support Stovall in her efforts.

Students might also contact the Statehouse switchboard at (913) 296-0111 and ask their representatives and senators to give Stovall their support.



More information about the bills Stovall is pushing can be found on the Internet at (www.ink.org/public/legislative/fulltext-bill.html).

Serving the public with a big heart makes a big difference

Are you a member of the service industry?

Is it your lot in life to stand patiently waiting hand-and-foot on someone who is invariably unpleasant, testy, demanding and whom you still have to placate in order to receive a nice juicy tip? If so, you have my condolences.

It hit me at the beginning of the year that I should pay careful attention to the people in such situations, especially those who aren't privileged enough to receive gratuities. These people, I reasoned, would be less likely to be polite just for politeness's sake.

ADRIAN FLEMING/Collegian

I wanted to keep track of just how many of us, when placed in service situations like these, would be able to keep smiling, keep grinning, stay sane and cool even during the worst moments of work.

Plus, this gave me rationale to actually sample fast food from all over the state.

Almost two months and a gallon of cholesterol later, I'm mildly shocked. Not at the reaction of the employees, rather the people they have to put up with.

I've never had the experience of working in food service. Food and I just don't get along. Still, even when you strip a person of their dignity by slapping a colorful corporate jumpsuit on them and make them wear a paper hat, you can see the determination in their eyes, "This is my job, I'm doing it to the best of my ability. It may not be the best job in the world, but it's mine."

Still, some customers get the idea that when mistakes are made — and they are made, of course, when you have a mile-long line of people demanding their processed, greased animal or vegetable remnants — that the employees make these mistakes deliberately to slow down people who have more important things to do than wait in line at Long John McWendy's.

The customers' eyes, glazed from that fast-lane lifestyle, can't see the person wearing the uniform and instead fix, immovably, on the corporate logo. Somehow they think by snapping back at the server, they're spitting a red-wigged clown in the face.

And still they stand there and take it with a nod and a smile, "Thank you, come again." They're better people than I.

Only once, through this experiment, did I get service that was not quite with a smile, and that was from a drive through a few days ago. Good thing I had my window rolled down, as that bag came out faster than a Steve Bono fumble. Still, this is the exception that proves the rule.

Everywhere else, from fast-food restaurants to big-name supermarkets to department stores, has been more than cordial. And I'm obviously not aware of all the stresses that service employees have to put up with during the day.

But when you hit the checkout line, or when you have a question about something, it's a big boost to see the face and the smile and know that there's a human soul in that corporate shell.

The ability to push back the weight of the job, for just long enough to deal with the clueless public like me, has to be a special gift. Blessed are they that can warm up a cold capitalist transaction.

I can't imagine being able to deal with the public for more than, say, two hours before they started losing fingers and running away screaming. Every time I get that pleasant nod, that smile, that glint of humanity, it does make the day slide along a little better. It's one of the small things, sure, but that doesn't make it unimportant.

If you're one of these people, take heart, not everybody's running for the door with their receipt and plastic bags and forgetting how well you did your job.

If you don't have a job like this, don't let your eyes fool you, you're not dealing with what the main office would call personnel resources, but with a person who has friends, family, feelings and who wants to make your day go better.

It's not much, but a little good karma goes a long, long way.

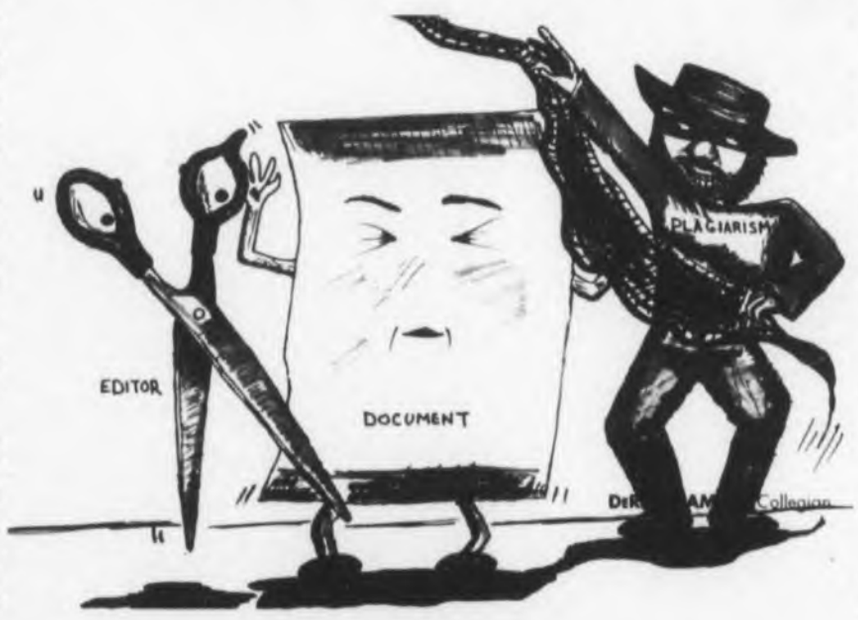
Treading on sacred ground

Intellectual property should never be tampered with



So I'm sitting around my apartment the other day, casually flipping through my copy of "The Elements of Editing" by Arthur Plotnik, when my good friend and fellow armchair revolutionary, Ampersand Rodriguez phones.

"Hey, hermano," he said after passwords, coded messages and other formalities were dispensed with. "That column of yours last week, the fortune cookie one. It really ... well ... sucked."

You'll find no more honest a critic than Ampersand, a former newspaper columnist.

"Yes," I said, "but it's only because it was too long, and I hadn't edited before deadline, so my editor did it under pressure."

In a voice I can only characterize as a growl, Ampersand said, "You should drag him out in the street like the dog he is ..."

"No, no, no," I replied, "it needed major cutting. There was nothing to be done." I remembered a line I'd just read in Plotnik: "Communication is (a writer's) reason for being ... you write to communicate to the hearts and minds of others what's burning inside you — and we edit to let the fire show through the smoke."

I remembered playing the part of fireman myself. While helping to edit a poetry magazine years ago, my co-editors and I got into heated discussions over that perennial editor's philosophical problem: How much is too much? Do we cut the last line of this poem, which sounds so out of place and dorky, and risk completely changing the poet's intentions? Or do we leave it in, and risk giving our publication an image we did not wish?

Against my better judgment, we cut the last line, making it, indeed, a better poem ... but not the poem the author intended. Did we simply change the way the ideas were expressed, or did we change the ideas themselves? Where is the line drawn?

Plotnik again: "The first impulse we have with another's copy is to make it sound right, and what sounds right to us is our own voice, our own idiom."

Which led me to the subject of intellectual property.

Anyone who has taken an expository writing class is familiar with this concept. The "Student Statement on Plagiarism," a contract requiring the signatures of students in these classes and others, identifies the uncredited use of another's ideas and written work as intellectual thievery.

Copyright law, as outlined in the General Revision of Copyright Law (Public Law 94-553), protects only a portion of intellectual property: that which is written down and expressed in a tangible form.

By now, Ampersand was telling me about his job. In between covert ideological hit-and-run missions against the Man, he works in the burgeoning Internet wing of AT&T. Being an anarchist who likes to eat, he hates it, but it does afford him an unusual perspective on the looming Internet culture.

"One of the most heated issues regarding increased public access to the Internet," he related, "is the issue of intellectual property. How secure is it on an as-yet unregulated medium?"

This was a good question. How to retain that open-frontier quality of the Net while guaranteeing property rights? I proposed an answer.

"Ever been to an American Mexican border town?" I asked Ampersand. "Two words for you: police state." He shivered.

I related how, on a trip to the Texas border town of Brownsville-Matamoros (home port of NAFTA!), I got into a discussion with the publishers of "Crossroads," a progressive community newspaper, about the issue of copyright.

Ever trying to out-liberal the liberals, by whatever means necessary, I put forth the notion that copyright law should be abolished, thus implying that intellectual property — information itself — should be utterly free, the ultimate manifestation of freedom of speech. I love making liberals' jaws drop.

"Such a radical idea," I continued, "could only work after significant social change, of course."

"Which the Internet is already bringing about," added Ampersand.

"Sure," I said. "Look at our notions of time. Time is, essentially, a measure of change; the clock is an abstract representation of this. With the Net, everything is moving faster ...

"With the exception of America Online," Ampersand interjected.

"... and thus our notions of time change. Why can't our notions of right and wrong regarding intellectual property change as well?" Why not conceive of a world where our own voice, our own idiom is treasured and respected by all, where intellectual property, no matter what, is regarded as sacred?

I sighed. "A fine idea, I think, but a dream nonetheless."

"Then I guess we'll have to keep on dreaming," Ampersand said. "I should go. I'm sure my radical affiliations have warranted a tap on my phone. But first, give me the Lucifer's Lexicon definition for 'free society.'"

"'A libertarian utopia of total freedom which will exist eternally in the future, and never in the present.' Now, give me plagiarism."

"'The most sinister form of flattery.'"

Right on, brother.

• PROFESSORS SAYS WORLD OF DANCE OPEN TO ALL

Editor,

This letter is in response to Page Getz's column in the Feb. 17 Collegian. As an assistant professor of dance as well as a former professional ballet dancer, I would like to take the opportunity to correct her assumptions and stereotypical characterizations of the world of ballet.

This clarification will widen the perceptions of the readers, which in turn, might enlighten them as viewers or participants of the arts.

Getz said, "rich girls may have the opportunity to take ballet." On the contrary, ballet dancers come from a fraction of the middle class and the lower class.

According to a 1990 study by Leila Sussman, professor of sociology at Tufts University, ballet dancers come from less-privileged backgrounds, and they, for the most part, have not been college educated.

Ballet is a rigorous art form, one that demands dancers' time and energy to focus on technical preparation. This is often the exclusion of a general education and even broad personal experience. As a result, a high level of proficiency is achieved and elite performers are produced.

Arthur Miller, former principal dancer of the New York City Ballet, founded the School of Dance Theatre of Harlem as a reaction to the assassination of Martin Luther King Jr. in 1969.

Consisting primarily of African American male and female dancers, the company performs classical ballet. They do not wear pastel leotards. On the contrary, the company members wear various shades of brown tights and pointe shoes to match the color of their skin.

Their performance on "Giselle," a Romantic ballet choreographed in 1841, has received world recognition in the dance world.

In addition, the Dance Theatre of Harlem provides an opportunity for underprivileged children in Harlem to take ballet lessons. Eliot Feld, director of The Feld Ballet in New York, also gives scholarships, complete with dance classes and dance clothes, to inner-city children in New York.

Therefore, ballet is inclusive, not exclusive. It is part of the wide spectrum of dance, which, as an art form, is not only for the rich, the elite or the privileged white-collar worker. Offering participation and viewing for everyone, dance is a celebration of life for all humankind.

Joyce Yagerline, M.F.A.
assistant professor of dance

• EDUCATION NEEDED ON BOTH SIDES OF MARIJUANA DEBATE

Justin Wild implies in his column that the opponents of legalized medical use of marijuana need a little education on the subject before they form their opinions. But I believe a little education is needed by the members on both sides of this debate.

THC may not be the miracle drug that many people believe it to be. Most of the evidence supporting THC as a beneficial medicine is circumstantial at best. For some medical conditions, such as glaucoma, there already exist drugs on the market that are proven to be more effective than THC.

Even if THC does possess some of the medical benefits attributed to it, it is unknown whether smoking it in the form of marijuana is the best way of having this drug delivered into the body. If THC is of medical benefit, then I don't see any reason why anybody should have a problem with it becoming legalized for medical purposes (morphine, which is the most important narcotic principle of opium, is a legal medicine and nobody seems to have a problem with this situation).

Although we live in the Holistic Age of Post-Reason, what really needs to be done is to have rigorous scientific research performed first demonstrating the medical effectiveness of THC before anyone on either side of this debate forms any opinion whatsoever.

Cats experience shooting woes against Buffs, turn thoughts to KU

▶ POOR SHOOTING hampers Cats' hope for upset of Colorado.

JEREMY KELLEY
sports editor

K-State fell to Colorado Wednesday night in what Coach Tom Asbury dubbed a very unaesthetic game.

Colorado (18-7, 9-4), which was coming off two road losses to Oklahoma and No. 1 KU, led by 14 points at the half, 39-25, and led by as many as 20 in the second half.

K-State (9-14, 2-11) cut the Buffs' lead to 10 off a 14-4 run late in the game, but got no closer than nine as Colorado snapped its two-game losing streak, 67-57.

The Cats domineered Colorado on the boards out-rebounding the Buffs 53 to 34 including 23-5 on the offensive glass.

"That's really the only thing that kept us in the game," Asbury said. "We got so many offensive boards that we were within striking distance, but we have guys missing lay ups that a second grader could make."

Forward Manny Dies, in his second game back from a foot injury, brought the Cats within nine on a three-point play with 3 minutes, 14 seconds left. Dies finished the game with 17 points and 12 rebounds.

"Manny played very well," Asbury said. "Realistically I don't expect that kind of point production this early from him, but we'll sure take it."

Asbury said Dies was playing very well since his time off, especially his defense, and hoped that he would carry that defensive intensity into this weekend's game with KU.

He does his very best against teams like KU and Colorado," Asbury said. "He's always an outstanding defender against great teams."

Forward Shawn Rhodes also added a double-double with 12 points and 10 boards.

But Asbury said it was too much Chauncey Billups.

Billups pierced the Cats with 23 points and 11 rebounds and took over down the stretch when the Cats made a push toward the end of the game.

"The difference in the game was Chauncey. That was the sole difference in that game," Asbury said.

Life doesn't get any easier for the Cats as they travel to Lawrence Saturday to face the No. 1 team in the nation — KU.

To make matters worse, center Scot Pollard has been cleared to play after suffering a foot injury Jan. 22 against Texas A&M. The Jayhawks have gone 7-1 without Pollard, with the only loss a double overtime defeat at Missouri.

Raef LaFrentz, who usually plays forward for the Hawks, has filled the void of the lost center averaging 23.1 points per game and grabbing 10.3 rebounds per contest in Pollard's absence.

Want to hear more?

It is KU's last home game of the season, a day in which all the seniors will be honored before the game tips off.

Asbury said he thought KU would recollect back to the KU-K-State game on Jan. 4 in which the Hawks escaped with a narrow four-point win.

"They'll use that, but I think more so that they are trying to sharpen their skills for the tournament," he said.

After enduring a lackluster year so far in the conference, Asbury said he hopes for an upset Saturday.

"It's an old saying: What goes around comes around," he said. "Hopefully we can enact some revenge on one of these teams."

K-State pitchers solid in early season

It is very early in the season for coach Mike Clark and the K-State baseball team, but things are already looking bright.

Last Tuesday, the Cats won their 11th straight home opener under Clark in a complete route of the Missouri Western Griffons, 17-6 at Frank Myers Field.

The Cats again found consistency in their lineup as sluggers Heath Schesser, Scott Poepard and Todd Fereday gave K-State the offensive lift it needed. That tandem notched 10 RBI's for the Cats.

Clark hopes that spot in the lineup will continue to deliver throughout the season.

"Those are our big hitters, and they have really hit well to begin the season," Clark said. "I just hope they can continue to give us a lift."

Fereday said it was rather simple to step up and hit once somebody starts to get into the groove.

"We respect the ability and work ethic of each other," he said. "We know our role on the team, and we try to be leaders."

Not only are the clean-up spots hitting well, but also the bottom of the order was outstanding against the Griffons.

Catcher Paul Cranford and first baseman Mike Gardner knocked in three RBI's for K-State late in the game to cushion its margin of victory.

"We are counting on those guys to deliver a lot this year," Schesser said. "They just get in there and do what they do best."

Furthermore, Clark said he has been trying to get as many pitchers as he can in the games, just to get them some first-hand experience in the early part of the season.

On Tuesday, seven different pitchers spent time on the mound, tallying 14 strikeouts and allowing only four walks.

Pitcher Tim Hertzel said the pitchers are successful, because they have already developed great chemistry between one another.

"We are very team oriented this year, and we just do what we are supposed to do when we get on the mound — throw strikes," Fereday said.

K-State plays host to three games this weekend against Air Force. The doubleheader on Saturday starts at noon with Jon Oiseth getting the start. In the second game Mickey Blount gets the nod. On Sunday at noon Eric Yanz is slatted to throw out the first pitch in the Cats' last game of the home stand.

SHORTSTOP Heath Schesser attempts to tage out Missouri Western's Marc King in Tuesday's game against the Griffons. The Cats won their 11th-straight home opener 17-6.

Women vying for upset against Dixon, Kansas

The last Sunflower Showdown for senior basketball players Andria Jones, Missy Decker, Kayla Hester and Kjersten Larson starts at 7 p.m. Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum. The Wildcats will take on Kansas, No. 12 in the nation and No. 1 in the Big 12.

After a hard-earned victory over Colorado Wednesday, Coach Deb Patterson said she knows the team is in for a tough game Saturday.

"We've got a great team coming here Saturday," Patterson said. "With the Colorado victory, there's no chance for them to think we won't be ready to play."

The Jayhawks defeated Missouri in Allen Fieldhouse Wednesday, and have an 19-4 overall record and are 10-2 in the Big 12.

Patterson said with the preseason pick of No. 10 in the Big 12, the Cats are exceeding expectations every day, and they want to continue to do so against Kansas.

"I never would have imagined our success," Patterson said. "I thought the preseason pick was reasonable. It's an attribution to the team who's committed to the system. They've worked hard."

Patterson has changed the offensive and defensive system the veteran players were used to in her first year as coach, and she said it does not revolve around any one player.

"We're not doing anything special with A.J. or anyone else," Patterson. "But A.J. can score in our system."

As the Big 12's third-highest scorer, averaging 19 points a game, Jones has stepped into the role expected of a senior, Patterson said.

Beating Colorado was the first time the senior class has done so in their four years here, Jones said. What's next?

"Beat KU," Jones said.

Sitting right above Jones in the Big 12 scoring chart is Kansas guard Tameka Dixon. Dixon averages 21 points and four assists a game. Media writers have compared her to Allen Iverson in terms of her ball-handling skills and the way she attacks the basket.

However, Patterson said there is a possible place for Jones in the WNBA or the ABL if she aspires to play after college.

"She would be a good, small forward on offense," Patterson said. "The question is, who does she defend? She'd probably be a power forward on defense because of the quickness factor."

Decker said the seniors were excited about their last home game against their intrastate rivals.

"The win against Colorado definitely gave us confidence for the KU game," Decker said. "That's our main priority now. We want to stay undefeated at home."

Restful slumber produces many queries about Chiefs' quest for sufficient quarterback

VIEWPOINT

TARA WRAY

TARA WRAY is a sophomore in print journalism. You can e-mail comments to Tara at (twray@ksu.edu).

In the midst of a restful slumber last night, I was roused by an upsetting dream. It was the kind where you wake up in a cold sweat and your blankets are bunched up in a choking bind around your neck. It was scary, to say the least.

I dreamed that Chiefs general manager, Carl Peterson, in all his infinite wisdom (not to mention yellow spandex jump suit) decided Steve Bono was the best bet for a quarterback in Kansas City and signed the schmuck up for five more years.

I told you it was scary — almost as scary as seeing Bono in a Chiefs uniform next season.

With football more than six months away, the Chiefs have plenty of time to find a suitable replacement for Bono, or plenty of time to screw things up depending on how you look at it. They have no excuse not to find someone new, the free agency vine is ripe for the pickin'.

Wednesday, the King was spotted in Kansas City — San Francisco free agent quarterback, Elvis Grbac that is. Grbac was at Arrowhead struttin' his stuff in hopes of landing a job with the Chiefs.

Grbac might be what Kansas City needs despite being shaky as a starter. As a back-up, however, he connected on 122 passes and secured a pass rating of 72 percent — far better than Bono's 53 percent in 1996.

He may not be exactly what Kansas City wants, but I would rather see him signed than have the Chiefs pull another Bono.

Houston's Chris Chandler also worked out for the team last week. Chandler's numbers were impressive last season as he completed 184 passes, 16 of them for a touchdown. His 79 percent passing efficiency rating was again far better than Bono's.

In the wake of that whole Jeff George quarterback scare and, provided Kansas City does not make any offers to bring Randall Cunningham out of retirement, Chandler is looking pretty good right about now.

Also, earlier in the week, another prospective Chief was in town trying his luck at the passing position. Washington's Heath Shuler, an unproven player with a lot of potential worked, dazzled them with his crisp passing and long bomb potential.

> "If Kansas City could swing signing Druckenmiller, it could possibly be the start of a new quarterback era in Kansas City, an era of young blood, something the Chiefs are long over due in drawing."

At 25, Shuler is definitely not a leftover, though he may need a little spicing up before he is ready to start at Arrowhead.

It seems in recent years Kansas City has become a pseudo microwave of a football team, warming up sorry old leftovers that should have been thrown out years ago, eg: Dave Krieg, Bono, etc.

It is about time they head to the store and pick up something fresh for a change and refreshment might just come in the form of a draft pick.

The Chiefs have a high pick coming on draft day, given they do not trade away their rights for Chandler or Shuler, who are both restricted free agents and will require compensation in order to sign with the Chiefs.

Assuming they can scoop up a quarterback in the first round — only two, Tennessee's Peyton Manning and Jim Druckenmiller of Virginia Tech, are projected picks — they might be able to score a quarterback coup.

Manning will likely go early — top five early — so signing him is pretty much ruled out. Druckenmiller, whose stock rose after a stellar performance at the recent NFL combine, would be a huge asset (albeit a youthful one) to an otherwise lackluster Kansas City offense.

If Kansas City could swing signing Druckenmiller, it could possibly be the start of a new quarterback era in Kansas City, an era of young blood, something the Chiefs are long over due in drawing.

It would be a dream come true for the Chiefs to have their offense back in gear for the 1997-98 season. With quarterbacks to choose from, it might become a reality and I would certainly rather have their dream come true than mine.

Making her mark

VANITTA KINARD practices her triple-jump technique in Ahearn Field House on Wednesday. Kinard, who boasts the second-best triple jump mark in the nation, is preparing for the Big 12 Indoor Championships this weekend in Lincoln, Neb.

Vanitta Kinard just wanted to do something different.

This current track trail blazer used to be a basketball standout back home in North Hollywood, Calif.

Kinard attended El Camino Real High School in Santa Monica where she chose to try to excel in another sport — basketball. She played basketball as a sophomore and continued on through her junior year.

But, as it does for most high-school kids, peer pressure hit Kinard.

"All my friends were running track and they sorta' talked me into it," Kinard said. "I just wanted to see if I was good at it."

She was.

Kinard competed in the state track meet her senior year, where she broke the state record in the triple jump with a jump of 41'3".

It just came naturally. Kinard never lifted any weights and never did any over-extensive training to exceed — it just came naturally.

But still she didn't give up basketball, not even at the junior-college level. She played two years of ball at Santa Monica and still tried her knack at track; however, her junior-college coach, Tommy Smith, who broke the world record in the 200-meter dash in the 1968 Olympics, had other expectations.

"I tried to tell her what I thought she would do best at and what she could have a future in at the college level," Smith said. "Track and field was just her best alternative."

Kinard didn't have any trouble making a choice as to what sport she wanted to pursue — the obvious optimum was track, and she said it was Smith who made her make the choice.

"I felt honored because an Olympic champion saw something in me. That's why I really do believe that I have it," Kinard said.

Kinard said she learned one thing while weighing the options of which sport to chose.

"I learned this — I cannot play on a team where I have to depend on other people, because I always have this drive, this hunger to win," she said.

Her first coach elaborated on Kinard's thoughts.

"Vanitta likes to be free. She's a free-will person, and she has to have it her own way," Smith said. "That temple that she has — the body — a lot of people don't have."

Kinard attributes much of her decision making to Smith who treated her like his own daughter and made her feel easy about making the flow into track.

"Well, I'm like a father to all my athletes. I'm from the old school," Smith said.

Kinard said she liked track better because it ostracized the team aspect. She said track was more individual, and that's what pushed her to compete in track.

"It's so individual, and it shows how good you are yourself," Kinard said. "It's all your ability only, and that's why I changed over."

At every junior college meet she attended while at Santa Monica, she broke either the meet record or the school record in the triple jump.

It was just natural.

After completing two years at Santa Monica, Kinard was heavily recruited by UCLA, USC, San Diego and a number of other schools from the PAC-10, but she chose K-State.

"Part of the reason I came here is because I wanted to get away from home, because I had been there for so long," she said. "I just wanted to do something different."

Since transferring here in spring 1996, Kinard has made as big an impact at K-State as she did at Santa Monica. In her first meet as a Wildcat, she broke the school record in the triple jump.

To this day Kinard, still makes her mark on the track. She currently holds the second best triple jump mark in the nation at 13.35 meters, (43'9-3/4"). Much anticipation surrounds Kinard as she prepares for the Big 12 Indoor Championships slated for this weekend.

Kinard said the coaches at K-State, ideally Cliff Rovelto, have made her concentrate more on the technique of the triple jump and have really assisted her in her ability.

"Vanitta is doing very well right now," Rovelto said. "Yet, she's capable of even more. She's a very fine athlete, and she is so easy to teach. Yet I think Vanitta will do even better in the weeks to come."

As for Kinard and basketball — it's all over. Well, maybe.

"I don't know. Now that they have that women's league, it's pretty tempting," she said. "I don't know."

CLIFF ROVELTO, K-State track coach, hands Vanitta Kinard a baton during practice Wednesday afternoon. The track team will participate in the Big 12 Indoor Championships this weekend in Lincoln, Neb.

Big 12 elite set to meet in Lincoln

When the Big 8 Conference added four teams to its entourage, it became the most powerful conference in the country.

Or so says K-State track coach Cliff Rovelto.

"It's the best conference in the country by far," Rovelto said. "When you take a look at the highest national rankings right now, it's ridiculous. It's 30-50 percent of the athletes in this conference. In every single event — it's unbelievable."

And the numbers speak for themselves. On the women's side, the University of Texas domineers the competition in the sprints, and Nebraska surpasses all others in the field events, with the Cats running a distant second.

On the men's side, Nebraska and Iowa State have competitors in the top spots in both track and field events.

This weekend, K-State tests its might against the most revered conference in the country when it travels to Lincoln , Neb. for the Big 12 Indoor Championships.

So do you think there are any members of the track team who feel some jitters?

"I hope so. I don't think they would be very human if they didn't have jitters," Rovelto said. "The question is how they will use that excitement to propel them."

Some athletes think feeling edgy before the big meet will give them the thrust they need to perform well.

"There has been some pressure in a lot of our meets already, but none like this," thrower Renetta Seiler said. "Hopefully that pressure will help us throw farther."

Rovelto and the other coaches have alleviated the practice session for most of the athletes with the credence that the better athletes will peak at the indoor meet.

"We have taken a lot more rest this week in practice with the hopes of peaking at the Big 12," Seiler said. "We are just conserving our energy for that meet."

Steve Fritz, throwers' coach, said he thought the favorite in the category was Nebraska; furthermore, he said he thought that the host school had a slight edge over all other competition.

"I think it always helps the home team. For one, their routine has never changed," he said. "They get to stay at home and compete in their normal environment."

Rovelto said he wanted the kids to go into the meet and perform how they are capable of performing.

"This isn't the end all, but to the season this meet is the most important," he said. "But if they go in and do what they know how to do they'll get the points, and they'll get the high marks they need to win."

relaxing with the music

PRESTON BARTON sits back and jams with the rest of the band Dive. Barton, junior undecided, is the lead singer.

DIVE IS MADE UP of Preston Barton, lead singer; Mike Laurie, lead guitarist; Jason Barth, rhythm guitarist; Mark Moessner, drummer; and Vince Cook, bass guitarist. The band originally played mostly covers, but now is moving on to writing some of their own pieces.

Dive discovers music is relaxation

STORY BY CORY MORGAN • PHOTOS BY CLIF PALMBERG

▶ Look it up on the E- Collegian. Want to see what other bands have been profiled? Chick Scalletti is available at (http://collegian.ksu.edu/issues/v101/sp/n091/aande). Moksee is available at (http://collegian.ksu.edu/issues/v101/sp/n096/aande).

Relaxation can be taking a nap or lying in front of the television. But for five K-State seniors, relaxation is jamming to their own music in a storage shed.

For the band members of Dive, playing in a band is a way to get away and relax.

Vince Cook, bass guitarist, is a senior in life sciences.

"Playing in a band is a way to get away from things. It's almost like playing sports in high school. You play because it is fun," Cook said.

Dive plays mainly cover songs from artists such as Pearl Jam, Weezer and Nirvana, along with some of their own music.

Preston Barton, senior in arts and sciences undecided, is the lead singer for Dive.

"The scene for local bands in Manhattan is changing," Barton said. "It used to be that bands would just play cover songs at a gig, but now it seems like more bands play their own original music, and it is being accepted."

Dive recently began working on their own original music, Barton said. They have been playing the song "Nothing Left" almost every time they play a gig, but have just recently started practicing more of their original music.

To play their own original music, band members agree that more time must be spent on practicing.

"We used to just practice the night before a gig," Cook said, "But now that we are concentrating more on our original music, we practice more often."

Other band members include Jason Barth, rhythm guitarist and senior in pre-health professions, and Mark Moessner, drummer and senior in architectural engineering.

The band members have been friends since high school.

"We are as good of friends outside the band as we are inside the band," Moessner said.

Dive evolved from two old bands that members were a part of in high school.

In high school, Barton, Mike Laurie, senior in accounting, and Barth were in a band that existed for only a week. They joined so they could enter a contest. For the contest, they needed to choose a name, so they called themselves Diving Euphoria.

Moessner and Cook were also in a band during high school. They were known as Mohley.

From the ashes of Mohley and Diving Euphoria came the new and improved group Dive.

"We have a unique situation," Barton said. "We have all been friends for a long time and playing in a band is a lot more than just work to us. It's just fun to hang out and play music together."

Cook joined Barton, Laurie and Barth last semester. The four played an acoustic set at 12th Street Pub.

Moessner, who was in the audience at 12th Street, was impressed with what he heard and then joined the band as the drummer.

Dive has played together for the last three months.

The members have always talked about playing in a band together, but never took the initiative to do so, Barth said.

As for the future, Dive isn't exactly sure what to expect.

Barton said that they will lose one guy next year, but the rest of the band should be intact.

"If something big should happen, then we would think about staying together," Barton said. "We all should have decent job opportunities after we graduate, so we play in the band mainly for fun."

Dive would like to play more of their original music in the near future, Barton said.

"It's hard to take school seriously and play in a band at the same time," Barton said. "Both take up a lot of time, and to be good at them, you need to practice."

Dive has played gigs at 12th Street, Tubby's Bar & Grill, and fraternity and sorority parties and functions.

"Our goal for the future is to travel around the regional area and play our own music," Barth said. "We also want to record some songs in the studio, so we have something to remember this experience by."

"If something big should happen, then we would think about staying together. We all should have decent job opportunities after we graduate, so we play in the band mainly for fun."

MUSIC OF THE NIGHT

EDINBURGH, Scotland — A killer with a talent for music missed the premiere of his opera, "Odyssey," on Tuesday night after his victim's father objected.

Although David Price was initially given permission to attend, Edward Frizell, the chief executive of the Scottish Prison Service, decided Price would have to stay in his cell.

Price, 34, is serving a life sentence for the rape and murder of 26-year-old Michelle Slater in 1984.

Her father had protested the plan to let Price attend the premiere at the Demarco European Art Foundation in Edinburgh.

Blood drive needs more donors to meet goal

JILL JARSULIC/Collegian

RANDY LUEBKE, sophomore in horticulture, waits for his turn to donate blood Thursday afternoon in the Union Ballroom. Today is the last day of the American Red Cross Blood Drive, which will be from 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., in the K, S and U Ballrooms.

TRISHA LANGFORD
staff reporter

Two hundred forty-eight donors are needed to give blood today during the final day of the American Red Cross Blood Drive.

A goal of 725 units was set for the five-day drive. As of Thursday, only 477 units had been given.

"Four hundred seventy-seven after four days is just pitiful. We are way low on donors," Susan Gormely, K-State blood drive coordinator, said.

The Red Cross is counting on Manhattan donors to contribute more than 40 percent of the blood needed in the Central Plains Region this week, Amy Simon, Red Cross spokesperson, said.

The region needs 1,800 units of blood each week to ensure an adequate supply to patients in more than 110 hospitals in Kansas and northwestern Oklahoma.

An appointment to give is not required. Everyone will be accommodated.

"We are grateful for those who have come in, but we still are in need of more people," Gormely said. "We have plenty of room for walk-ins."

The entire process takes about 90 minutes, including the vital signs check and health review, and a few minutes in the refreshment area after donation.

"One single blood donation can treat as many as three different patients," Gormely said. "A hour and a half of your time could help save lives. It's not a lot to sacrifice."

If saving lives isn't reason enough, then donating for rivalry's sake should do the trick. Since 1993 the Red Cross has sponsored a competition to see which school, K-State or the University of Kansas, can receive the most donations.

"Since KU's drive isn't until April, they will have the opportunity to see our numbers," Gormely said. "Hopefully we can give them something to work at."

A trophy is awarded to the winning school. So far, it has only made one trip across the river.

"KU won it in the spring of 1995, but we got it back in the fall and haven't had to return it," Gormely said.

The drive is in the K, S and U ballrooms of the K-State Student Union. Donors may give today from 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

Parking Council discusses West Stadium permits

BRIAN SMOLLER
staff reporter

Unfair parking on campus was a phrase heard often at the second monthly meeting of the Parking Council.

Raydon Robel, director of the Department of Recreational Services, brought a letter addressed to Peggy Winkler, director of parking services, regarding use and abuse of parking privileges involving campus facilities.

Part of the letter discussed the reduced price parking permits held by LIFE members who use Ahearn Field House.

"The LIFE program is an extension of the kinesiology department," Robel said. "It allows people from all of Manhattan to use the weights, natatorium and other facilities at Ahearn."

The LIFE program's members can pay a discounted rate of $20 a year or $10 a semester for parking privileges in the West Stadium lot.

"I would like to see an increase in that price to even things out," said Darrell Edie, who is affiliated with the Continuing Education program and member of the parking council.

The other part of the letter discussed the handicapped parking stalls and the 15-minute loading/unloading zones on the west side of Ahearn.

Robel said the stalls present a problem because the Riley County Police Department is in charge of handing out tickets on Denison Avenue.

"People abuse it by parking there and going to class," Robel said.

The council agreed to look into the possibility of K-State Police becoming authorized to give out tickets on those stalls, but no further action was voted upon.

The council voted to place Robel's letter on hold until next month's meeting.

competition teams.

Arts and Science Senator Sean Tomb said he agreed with Hasemann.

"It's going to be really, really unfair to the other groups," Tomb said.

Kim Vance, president of Society for the Advancement of Management, said the business team would not be able to participate in the competition without the full allocation.

"If we do not get the $2,000, we don't get to go," Vance said. "Everything we've done is down the drain."

Although Vance said the group would not be able to go without the funds, Jeff Katz, SAM adviser, said if the allocation did not pass he would pay the difference out of his own pocket.

"If they have a shortage, I'll make up the difference," Katz said.

After nearly two hours of debate, the amendment failed.

A second amendment was proposed to increase allocations for Ag Competition Team Council and Speech Unlimited. Tomb said if the bill passes, it would be necessary to increase allocations for the other two teams. He said increasing these two group's allocations would put them on the same playing field as the Case team.

The amendment would have allocated more than $31,000 for Ag Competition Council Team and more than $9,000 for Speech Unlimited.

The amendment did not receive any votes.

"This isn't a joke," Engineering Senator Chris Webster said. "Let's stop wasting time."

In other business, Senate increased the Recreational Services budget to nearly $351,000. The federal minimum wage increase accounted for a significant portion of the increase.

Jake Breeding, Senate privilege fee chair, said Rec Services was looking for other ways to increase funding without asking for more student money. Alumni and non-student user fees were suggested areas for increases.

Senate also passed the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex repair and Replacement Reserve Budget Continuance, which will be set at $9,609 for the next two years. Student fees will increase 2 cents per credit hour.

At press time, Senate had not completed the agenda. Monday's Collegian will have details on the rest of the meeting.

Delta Delta Delta killed most of the mascots of the Big 12 during its skit. An actor who portrayed Clark Griswold hit mascots with his car in a skit that centered around "National Lampoon's Vacation."

The judges seemed to like this strategy, because the Tri-Delts won the all-around competition. They will be preforming their skit Feb. 26 during halftime of the men's basketball game in Bramlage Coliseum.

Phi Gamma Delta won the first place in the men's division.

The Tri-Delts took first place in the women's division, and Chi Omega took second place.

The show was a success, but a few things could be changed for next year. Because this was a charity event, it would be a good idea to invite other organizations outside of the greek community to participate.

Successful sheep cloning raises questions, concerns

Dolly, the clone

▶ COPIED SHEEP PAVES way for bringing human clones closer to reality in future.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Researchers have cloned an adult mammal for the first time, a scientific landmark that raises the unsettling possibility of making copies of people.

Scientists slipped genes from a 6-year-old ewe into unfertilized eggs and used them to try to create pregnancies in other sheep. The result: a lamb named Dolly, born in July, that is a genetic copy of the ewe.

The feat opens the door to cloning prized farm animals such as cattle and should make it much easier to add or modify genes in livestock, experts said.

It's also scientifically stunning. Researchers used DNA from the ewe's udder cells, proving that mature mammal cells specialized for something other than reproduction could be used to regenerate an entire animal.

Scientists had thought that was impossible.

Experts said the same technique might make it possible to clone humans but emphasized it would be unethical to try.

"There is no clinical reason why you would do this. Why would you make another human being?" said Ian Wilmut, one of the scientists who cloned the sheep. "We think it would be ethically unacceptable and certainly would not want to be involved in that project."

Carl Feldbaum, president of the Biotechnology Industry Organization, which represents about 700 companies and research centers in the United States and abroad, agreed.

"I can think of no ethical reason to apply this technique to human beings, if in fact it can be applied," he said Sunday.

"The biotechnology industry exists to use genetic information to cure disease and improve agriculture. We opposed human cloning when it was a theory. Now that it may be possible, we urge that it be prohibited by law."

A report of the sheep cloning will be published in Thursday's issue of the journal Nature by Wilmut and colleagues at the Roslin Institute near Edinburgh, Scotland, and others.

Before the new work, scientists had been able to take tissue from adult frogs and create genetically identical tadpoles. But the tadpoles never developed fully into frogs.

To do the sheep cloning, scientists took cells from the ewe's udder tissue and cultivated them in a lab, using a treatment that made the cells essentially dormant. They also took unfertilized sheep eggs and removed the nucleus, the cells' central control room that contains the genes.

Then they put the udder cells together with the egg cells and used an electric current to make them fuse. The eggs, now equipped with a nucleus, grew into embryos as if they'd been fertilized. The embryos were put into ewes to develop.

The process was horrendously inefficient. Of 277 fused eggs, only one led to a lamb.

Reputation draws new assistant dean to K-State campus

Hudgens

CORI HERBERS
staff reporter

Robert Hudgens, the new assistant dean of international agriculture programs, said K-State's reputation in international programs attracted him to the University.

"The first time I came to the University was in 1984 to give a presentation at a conference," he said. "I was impressed with the school's key role in international activities."

Hudgens has worked overseas for more than 17 years in Central America, Africa and Asia. For the last three years, he worked in Kenya on the Midwestern International Agriculture Consortion project.

"MIAC was designed to strengthen the Kenyan Agriculture Research Institution," Hudgens said.

"It is an ongoing project that's been in the works for more than nine years. I came in on the last three and will be going back to Kenya this month to put on a couple of workshops," he said.

While in Kenya, Hudgens said he was the lead administrator of the project.

"I was hired to provide technical assistance, program training workshops and

A man was shot at his residence early Saturday.

The victim was treated and released. He was treated at Mercy Health Center on College Avenue for a gunshot wound to his right shoulder.

The Riley County Police responded to the call at about 2:40 a.m.

The suspect was armed with a .38 caliber pistol. He is described as a light-skinned black man, 18-20 years of age, 5'8" to 5'9", 160 pounds with short, braided hair. The suspect was accompanied by a white woman, 18-20 years of age, 5'6", 150 pounds, with long, dark hair.

No arrests have been made, and the case is still being investigated.

Spotlight on the Rodeo

Competition marks 50th anniversary

STORY BY COLLEGIAN STAFF • PHOTOS BY STEVE HEBERT

Cowboys and cowgirls decked out in Wranglers, ropers and cowboy hats could be seen throughout Manhattan this weekend during the K-State rodeo.

The rodeo, which was Friday, Saturday and Sunday in Weber Arena, marked the 50th year anniversary of the K-State rodeo.

"The rodeo went really well this year. We had a lot of contestants entered, and a great crowd that came and supported K-State," said Justin Lynn, K-State rodeo club president.

This year, 335 contestants representing 17 schools in Kansas, Oklahoma and Missouri entered the rodeo, making it one of the largest rodeos in the Central Plains region of the National Intercollegiate Rodeo Association.

The association has 10 rodeos throughout the year. Contestants are awarded points and the top two individuals in each event at the end of the year compete at the NIRA national finals in Bozeman, Mont., in June.

During the K-State rodeo, contestants competed in events such as bull riding, calf roping and barrel racing during Friday and Saturday at Weber Arena. On Sunday, the top 10 contestants in each event competed in the finals.

Three K-State students competed in the finals.

"One of my goals for the rodeo team this year was to get the team to keep getting better and better. Progress is being made," said Randy Raub, faculty adviser of the K-State rodeo club.

Festivities promoting the rodeo took place last week. On Feb. 15, the rodeo club

Secretary of State Albright to fly to China in attempt to reinforce relations with U.S.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOKYO — Given a chance to assess China's new leaders during official mourning for Deng Xiaoping, Secretary of State Madeleine Albright flies to Beijing today hoping to smooth a complex and sometimes rocky U.S.-China relationship.

Albright is carrying reassurance that the Clinton administration is committed to a One-China policy and that even private visits to the United States by officials of the Taiwan government will be limited.

She flies there also with a lecture on human rights, but the former Georgetown University professor will deliver politely and with the caveat that U.S. policy is far broader than any single issue.

China can expect the United States to cosponsor a resolution at an international human rights conference in Geneva criticizing the way the communist-run government in Beijing treats its people.

Albright said Sunday on ABC's "This Week" program: "They expect me to raise human rights as an issue, and I will."

That said, however, she described the relationship as complex.

The Clinton administration is pleased that China helped conclude international treaties to ban nuclear weapons tests and to restrict the spread of nuclear technology. China's support of Korean peace talks to begin next month also is a plus.

But a widening trade imbalance and questionable weapons sales to Pakistan, repression of political dissidence and missile tests near Taiwan are sore points.

Fallen leader leaves behind achievements in improving economic status of China

SHAWN T. DENTON
staff reporter

Students and historians of Chinese politics benefited from the leadership of Deng Xiaoping, the recognized leader of China, whose entrepreneurial spirit opened China's doors to the world.

Deng Xiaoping, 92, died Wednesday from lung infections and Parkinson's disease.

Xiaoping left behind a legacy of a more-improved economical world for China.

"He contributed to opening China to the world and to improve their economical world," said Shing Chang, assistant professor of industrial and manufacturing systems engineering. "He gave new opportunities for the Chinese population."

Xiaoping reached the height of his power in 1978, a period of time when China was still feeling the affects of the Cultural Revolution. He set the beginning steps for a market economy to exist in China.

Paul Parsons, professor of journalism and mass communications, said Xiaoping had created a entrepreneurial spirit in China.

"He provided two things for China," Parsons said. "He created stability, in that he did not hold an elected office, and he created a environment for a market economy to emerge in China."

The market economy in China has caused a economic growth. Chang said he does not expect any major changes to occur in the economy.

"China has gotten to the point of being addicted to economic growth," Chang said.

Xiaoping's death has led to speculation that China may change some of its political policies.

"I doubt it," Parsons said. "He was on his deathbed for years, and he

• JUDGE ORDERS CHILD SUPPORT PAYMENTS IN RAPE OF GIRL.

TOPEKA — A man convicted of raping a 12-year-old girl he met at a homeless shelter has been sentenced to 15 years in prison and ordered to pay support for the child allegedly conceived during the rape.

The judge said when Alphonso Wright gets out of prison he will have to pay more than $20,000 to help support and raise the girl's child. Wright was sentenced on two counts of rape and two of misdemeanor battery for striking the girl, who is now 13.

• AUTHORITIES LOOK INTO CHANCE OF SERIAL BOMBER AFTER BLAST.

ATLANTA — A bomb blast that injured at least five people at a crowded nightclub — the fourth to rock this city in seven months — has forced authorities to consider the possibility of a serial bomber.

A few blocks away from the nightclub on Saturday evening, a fire station, a motel and several businesses were evacuated after someone called the fire station saying a bomb had been planted there. Police barricaded streets in the area.

Aspects of Friday's bombing echoed the July 27, 1996, Centennial Olympic Park attack, which killed one woman and injured 100 people, and two Jan. 16 bombings at Atlanta Northside Family Planning Services, which injured seven.

• YELTSIN DECLARES HIMSELF FULLY RECOVERED, READY FOR FOES.

MOSCOW — President Boris Yeltsin, looking healthy and speaking strongly, declared himself ready Sunday to take on his foes in Russia's parliament and tackle the conflict with NATO over its planned expansion.

Yeltsin said he had lost 57 pounds since heart bypass surgery in November and a bout with pneumonia in January. The chief Kremlin doctor, Sergei Mironov, said last week that Yeltsin weighed 189 pounds and had begun to put back on some weight. Yeltsin said his recuperation has been slower than he expected, but he's finally getting back on his feet.

• FIRE KILLS AT LEAST 100 PEOPLE AT RELIGIOUS GATHERING.

NEW DELHI, India — Fire swept through a thatched-roof hall in eastern India where people had gathered to seek the blessing of a Hindu guru, killing more than 100 of them, a government official said.

Sanjeeb Hota, home secretary of the eastern coastal state of Orissa, said 110 bodies had been found by late Sunday, and 165 people were injured in the fire near the city of Baripada.

United News of India said the cause may have been the explosion of a gas cylinder used for cooking.

• KANSAS COMMUNITY MOURNS AFTER SLAYING OF COUPLE.

SOLOMON — Residents of this tiny central Kansas town are wearing black ribbons in memory of a couple killed at their farm house in a botched burglary.

Authorities say the deaths of Kyle and Chrystine Moore were apparently random. So far, the best lead is a stolen gold 1986 Lincoln Continental found stuck in the mud near the couple's home, authorities said.

Resident Susan Billinger said she wanted the victims' families to know the town cared about them, so she began cutting strips of black ribbon and passing them out at schools and local businesses.

"The black ribbons are for mourning. I'm in mourning because this happened to our community and to our friends," Billinger said.

A funeral for the Moores was Saturday in Salina. Solomon, population 940, is between Salina and Abilene.

The bodies of Kyle Moore, a 31-year-old state driver's license examiner, and Chrystine Moore, 33, were found Monday in their farm home about six miles north of Solomon, which is just east of Abilene.

▶ CORRECTIONS AND CLARIFICATIONS

Because of an editor's error in a letter to the editor titled "Professor says world of dance open to all" in Friday's edition of the Collegian, Arthur Mitchell, former principal dancer of the New York City Ballet, was incorrectly identified as Arthur Miller.

A police report in Friday's edition of the Collegian was incorrect. It should have read that Eric J. Broce was arrested in reference to a warrant for one worthless check. The Collegian regrets the errors.

ADAM BALZER, senior in milling science, and Amy Grieshaber, junior in journalism and mass communications, announce their plans to run for student body president and vice president Friday afternoon in front of Denison Hall.

Balzer, Grieshaber to run in election

NICOLE KIRBY
investigations editor

Cousins Adam Balzer and Amy Grieshaber stood on a bench in the middle of campus Friday afternoon and announced to passing students that they were running for student body president and vice president.

Balzer, senior in milling science, and Grieshaber, junior in journalism and mass communications, told students scurrying to class what issues their campaign would focus on.

Balzer said their proposal to alleviate the parking problem would be less expensive than constructing a parking garage, because a system where students parked at Bramlage Coliseum and then rode a shuttle to campus could be paid for at the same rates as the current parking permits, or even on a per-use basis.

"It needs to be advertised correctly," Grieshaber said. "It needs to be shown to the students that we're doing this, and it's available. I think as long as there is a schedule put out, it will work."

They addressed the lack of student use of programs like Lafene Health Center that are paid for through student fees. They said the solution to this was to communicate with students.

"You have to talk to people and find out why they're not using services and use that information to design a program to help," Grieshaber said.

The two also supported improving campus safety, publishing teacher evaluations and increasing communication with students. Balzer said he and his running mate had a new take on these issues.

"We're not talking about the same old reheated issues," he said.

Others have talked about communicating and then stopped once elected, he said.

Balzer and Grieshaber said they plan to continue to reach out to students across campus even after election day.

They said their majors are based at opposite ends of the campus, so between them, they know a wide variety of students.

On the other hand, Balzer said their work ethic prevented them from spending all their time talking.

This wasn't the only thing the pair said would set them apart from the field of contenders for the positions.

"We have a main difference between the other candidates — we have calluses on our hands," Balzer said as they displayed their work-worn hands.

"We know what it's like to work for our education. It's really important to keep student fees down," he said.

Burns, Miller announce election bid

NICOLE KIRBY
investigations editor

Standing alone in the hallway in Durland Hall Sunday afternoon, two more students tossed their hats in the ring for student body president and vice president.

Bill Burns, sophomore in finance and Spanish, and Greg Miller, senior in electrical engineering, said they announced their candidacy because they wanted to get more involved with K-State.

Burns said the most important issue on their campaign platform was working against drunk driving. They advocated a bussing system using the University's vans to help get students home from Aggieville.

Miller addressed the other dominant issue in the pair's platform. He said students deserve a letter explaining why their fees have increased.

"It comes with inflation and the basic economics of that, but I think it makes sense to tell students why and show where their money's going," Miller said.

Burns argued that knowing what their money was paying for would make increases more palatable.

"The student can sit there and look at that," he said. "We had protests there last year in the free-speech area at the Union, and this would pretty much stop any argument."

In order to maintain communications with the student body, Burns and Miller plan to write a letter to the editor every two weeks explaining what they have been doing.

Burns said this would motivate them to work hard in order to have something substantive to put in the letter every two weeks.

They will also post the activities of the Student Governing Association on the Internet, Burns said.

Pointing out the campaign slogan "What's important now!" on the back of his T-shirt, Burns said, "We're running our campaign on issues that can be addressed now.

We're not going to be able to change the structure of Kansas State University, but we want to do little things that improve students' lives."

Blood drive falls short of goal despite turnout

TRISHA LANGFORD
staff reporter

Donors came out in force on Friday for the American Red Cross blood drive, but the goal for the week was still not reached.

The goal for the day was 150 units of blood. Donations exceeded that number, totaling 175. But the goal for the week was 725 units of blood, and only 652 were donated.

"Six hundred fifty-two units is worth our time and efforts. We are satisfied and feel good about it," Susan Gormely, K-State blood drive coordinator, said.

Goals for the drive were set by the Central Plains Region in Wichita. Traditionally, spring blood drives have fewer donors than those in the fall.

"Just because these numbers were a little under, I don't think the Red Cross will be discouraged and set the next goal at 500," Gormely said.

"They will go ahead and work as hard as they can to get the highest number," she said.

Students, faculty and community members were encouraged to donate. Judy Lynch, associate director of the academic assistance center, said she donated because of the good feeling she gets and because she is doing something that benefits others.

"It's a simple process that doesn't cost you anything, but means so much," Lynch said.

Possible reasons for not reaching the goal ranged from time constraints to deferrals. About seven to 10 people were deferred each day.

Dodie Faulconer, head nurse, said that low iron, colds and the flu, medication and recent tattoos were the top reasons for deferrals.

"Those are the most common among college students," Faulconer said.

The competition to see whether K-State or the University of Kansas donates the highest amount of units will continue this spring.

Last spring's total of 604 units was enough to keep the trophy at K-State. Gormely said she hopes that this spring's 652 units will be high enough to keep the trophy.

As far as the rivalry between K-State and KU goes, Gormely said she would like to see 652 be high enough. But for the sake of the Red Cross, she hopes KU's donations exceed 652.

"It's kind of a selfish hope," Gormely said.

A GUIDE TO SECTIONS OF THE COLLEGIAN OPINION PAGE

COLUMNS are opinions expressed by the columnists. The opinions are not necessarily the opinions of the Collegian.

Collegian sets policies for coverage of elections for student government

Student body elections have been gearing up, and so has Collegian coverage of the elections.

Presidential campaign announcements will continue to run on page 3. We appreciate the help of those candidates who told us about their announcements in advance. The time to plan helped.

The Collegian will also run more in-depth feature stories about candidates and election issues at the bottom of page 1. All of these placements are always at the mercy of news judgment. If a tornado hits Manhattan, an election story will probably get bumped off page 1.

Candidates for all offices turned in questionnaires Friday, and the Collegian will put that information in the Voters' Guide that will be published March 10.

The Collegian collected these forms until 5 p.m. Friday. The Collegian's deadline was 1 p.m. Friday, but some candidates turned in their questionnaires to the Office of Student Activities and Services, which accepted them into the afternoon. To avoid more confusion for the candidates, the Collegian also accepted questionnaires until 5 p.m.

The Electronic Collegian plans to have an election archive, so students can access all stories about the elections on the Internet.

Endorsement interviews for presidential tickets will begin at 5 p.m. March 3. The editorial board will interview each ticket in Kedzie 106.

Just one more reminder — presidential tickets' columns are due at 5 p.m. today in Kedzie 116. They should be from 400 to 500 words, and they can be turned in to Kevin Klassen, opinion editor.

The Collegian does all this to inform students. If you have questions or ideas about our election coverage, get in touch with us. Call us at 532-6556, or e-mail us at (collegn@ksu.edu).

▶ YOUR VIEWS

• EDITORIAL CONTAINS INACCURACIES ABOUT UNION ART GALLERY

Editor,

In response to the recent editorial on the Union Enhancement Committee's discussion about the art gallery, I feel it is necessary to respond to the inaccurate picture that was painted. I am aware of only one member of the Collegian who was present at the past enhancement meeting, and that was Russell Fortmeyer.

Thus, I will conclude that much of the information about the editorial was obtained from him, and once again his information is heavily slanted and presented without much objectivity.

During the Feb. 18 meeting of the Union Enhancement Committee, a great deal of the discussion that centered on the Union art gallery did pertain to the economics of the building.

It was emphasized several times that retail space was essential in order to increase the revenues of the K-State Student Union.

This was so that, in the future, an additional increase in student fees would not be requested in order to accomplish much-needed tasks for the building. In fact, the goal has always been to renovate the Union so that it can operate with a positive revenue balance and build a reserve that will allow future renovations to take place without the need for a student fee.

When the Enhancement Committee raised the issue of the Union art gallery, a majority of the conversation did focus on revenues, but not because of what Fortmeyer inaccurately portrayed — again.

Exactly one month ago, the Union Governing Board passed a policy that stated the Union will maintain an art gallery in the building throughout and after the renovation, which was steeped in the philosophical advantages of maintaining an art presence in the Union.

With the passage of this policy in mind, the merits of having an art gallery were mute, not because of the content of the arguments of the presence of art, but because UGB had already decided the issue and there was no reason to rehash what had already been decided.

What absolutely confounds me is that Fortmeyer, who has repeatedly covered this issue, and many times very inaccurately so, to create harmful and unnecessary controversy, has once again trodden along the same irresponsible path. UGB has decided on the presence of the art gallery, and it will not change in the near future.

Thus, it is my hope that everyone who is concerned with this particular issue will be put at ease because UGB has no intention of eliminating the art gallery.

Furthermore, Fortmeyer, I hope you will start checking your notes of previous meetings before writing a story or an editorial, so that you stop misrepresenting yourself and those you write about.

Finally, Fortmeyer, if you are going to start controversy on this campus through your articles, do it with substance and accurate reporting so that we can all objectively read and consider the issues that are of importance to our campus. Thank you.

BRANDI HERTIG

BRANDI HERTIG is a sophomore in print journalism and English/creative writing. You can e-mail your comments to Brandi at (blh0377@ksu.edu).

The problems plaguing our world today are not about the armed forces, and they are not about how someone obtained the gun they used to murder or the way parents raised their children.

It boils down to the lone idea of acceptance that ours is a violent society. A version of survival of the fittest for the 1990s.

Violence is everywhere. It seeps out of every corner of the loosely built facade of our society. For many it is a coping mechanism. For others, it is just the way things are.

The word itself has taken a comfortable position at the forefront of everyday vocabulary. It has become trite in its familiarity, so much, in fact, I am a little embarrassed that I am even using it to raise my point.

We have evolved to passively accept things the way they are. Every day, we pick up our newspapers and turn on our televisions, only to be inundated with the ultimate blandness of our reality: a young woman who was randomly murdered while at work, people in some country with a funny name who are living through a modern-day Holocaust.

We absorb the information, along with the weather and sports, then fold up our papers, turn off the TV sets and go about our business.

And what of it? If it is not our reality, it is not our problem.

Then we look at the handful of people who take the realities of others as their own, sweating to make it possible for others to live without fear of other humans. We chortle at their naivete. It is hard to understand why they care about something from which they are so far removed.

As we narrow the view and focus in on our own community, it is easy to see we are only a microcosm of the rest of the world. Then it makes a little more sense as to why some folks seem to enjoy playing the champion of lost causes.

But it seems that those people, the ones who are courageous enough to say the unspeakable, breaking the glass front of pretense, are the people at whom violence is targeted.

Everyone believes in peace, but no one is willing to work for it. At most, when we see something that is wrong, we will shake our heads and mutter something like, "Isn't it a shame?" We are content with this, because it is showing concern, even though we would probably balk at the idea of actually lending a hand to the cause.

Our acceptance of violence in our world has manifested itself in several different forms. The most prevalent is the macabre way we analyze it and put its victims under the proverbial microscope. Bloodied bodies and loud guns that go bang are fascinating to us as long as we're not on the receiving end of that fist or bullet.

Of course, things are not always as melodramatic as gunshot wounds or broken noses. It is the little nuances of violence that make it so volatile, because it is the little things that are so easy to overlook.

An example of this happened one day in my design class. A young fraternity member was recounting that previous weekend's escapades. One little tale he told involved a member of his fraternity whacking another member with a wooden bed slat. The young fraternity member giggled uncontrollably throughout his retelling, as if such an incident was deserved by the victim.

The truth is, we do not live in a sunshiny, sugar-coated world. We all know that. The question is, what can we do to take away some of the abrasiveness of our day-to-day existence?

The answer lies in the act of doing. It is not enough to just believe in peace. If we sit back and keep quiet about our beliefs, we might as well be in support of all we are against.

Silence is violence.

I will never forget the day my brother locked me in his closet and explained nuclear war.

When he finally let me out of the closet (many hours later), I confronted my mother for an explanation similar to "No, there are no invisible piranhas in the deep end of the neighborhood pool," which was also a deep concern of mine.

Equally as unforgettable as were those hours in the closet with the future of humankind at the mercy of my prekindergarten finger, was the expression on my mother's face when confronted with explaining nuclear war to a 5-year-old.

I was devastated.

Now, when I see children, being the mislead romantic that I've become, I imagine the moment they meet nuclear war or racism, the moment they have to sort the Hitlers from the Headless Horsemen.

And I cannot comprehend this obsession people have with having babies.

Don't they know these creatures grow up to be people?
